Our bargains are made by marking down our own stock to a low price, not by purchasing inferior goods to make an attractive price.

It is a mistake to infer that we carry only high-priced fabrics. We have medium grades as well, and our prices are low because our expenses are proportioned over a volume of business exceeded by few in our specialty in the United States, and equaled by none in New England.

The Social Realm.

A rhyme with a stanza once fell in love,
With looks he did entreat her,
But the stanza shy caught not his eye,
And the rhyme could never meter.
But the rhyme met the stanza and spoke his love:
"I love, fair one; do you?"
Spoke the stanza gay, "How silly, I say;
I am a verse to you."

HALF A MILLION

Distributed in Dividends by the Mount Wollaston Bank.

The National Mt. Wollaston bank has declared a semi-annual dividend of 3 percent payable today. This is the 81st dividend declared by the bank since it was chartered in 1864, and it has distributed in dividends $510,000.

The Mt. Wollaston bank is the oldest National bank in Norfolk county, and it is also one of the oldest National banks in the country, its charter number being 517. It was originally chartered as a State bank in 1853.

In 1864 it became a National bank, and has twice had its charter extended. Once in 1884 and again Aug. 3, 1904, for another twenty years.

Its deposits have shown a steady increase, until today they stand at $530,000. During the past two years the increase has been at the rate of $100,000 per year, and the increase in 23 years has been $431,000.

Bates—Margetts.

The Church of St. John the Evangelist at Hingham, was the scene of a brilliant wedding Tuesday evening, when Miss Edith Windridge Margetts, became the bride of Frank Waterman Bates son of Deacon and Mrs. David W. Bates of East Weymouth. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George Francis Weld, rector of the church, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends.

The Episcopal service was used and the bride was given away by her father. The musical part of the ceremony was rendered by Miss May Wilder, organist, and a surpliced choir which sang "O, Perfect Love" and "The voice that breathed O'er Eden."

The best man was Alfred Blackwell of East Weymouth, and the ushers were John H. Guy, Arthur B. Bryant, Harry Bates and Henry C. Pratt. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white point d esprit over white silk with duchesse lace trimmings. Her veil was fastened with lilies of the valley.

At the close of the ceremony a reception was held in the parish house, where the newly wedded couple were assisted in receiving by their parents. The church was exquisitely decorated with ferns, palms, and beautiful flowers. Instead of the usual ribbons, garlands of roses, pinks and ferns were used on either side of the main aisle with charming effect.

After the wedding journey, which will include Niagara Falls, the couple will reside on Washington street, Quincy.

New Proprietor.

Quincy Point people will learn with considerable regret that Miss E. M. Freeman has retired from the Post Office store at the corner of Washington and South streets. For a great many years she handled all the mail matter of the Point district, and from time to time added newspapers, confectionery, stationery, dry goods, groceries, etc., etc. With considerable business tact prompt attention to business, together with a desire to please all customers, it is not surprising that additions to the store were often necessary, and that finally the store was outgrown, for previous to the sale of her business Miss Freeman began the erection of a block of stores nearly opposite.

The new proprietor is H. H. I. Smith, recently in business in Somerville. He finds the new store very cleverly planned, and has no desire to make any changes. He will endeavor to continue the business on the same principles as Miss Freeman. With the new store he will be able to give better service. All of the old employes will be retained. In the words of Miss Freeman, "Come and make his acquaintance."

The Show of All Shows.

The Brockton Fair will entertain its thousands this year Oct. 4, 5, 6 and 7. Purses of $10,100 for trot, pace and running races will attract the speediest of horse flesh. The Horse Show, with added ground space, large purses and classes to the number of 70, will be more interesting than ever. The stage show will include, as usual, artists seen at no other fair, the highest salaried in their line. A fireman's muster and playout for prizes aggregating $1050. An athletic meet with the usual track sports, balloon ascensions with novel features, hippodrone races and music by three bands, and a thousand and one other features to amuse will as usual make the Brockton Fair the biggest in existence. From 9 in the morning till sunset there is something doing all the time, and every patron knows he is bound to be entertained and amused. All roads lead to Brockton. During the fair excursion tickets are sold on the railroads and on many of the trolley lines.

The leaves on the shade trees have begun to take on their autumn tints.

THE MAYORALTY.

Mr. McAnarney Hesitates to Accept Party Nomination.

The candidacy of John W. McAnarney for Mayor seems to meet with considerable favor, not only among Republicans but among Democrats. In fact among citizens who do not usually take an active part in city elections.

Mr. McAnarney has not as yet decided to enter the mayoralty field. It is said that he hesitates to accept a party nomination from either the Republicans or Democrats. That should he become Mayor he would want to be independent and untramelled. That he would desire to be free to make changes in department officials where he thought necessary for the good of the public service.

There seems to be a demand for a citizens movement, and many are of the opinion that ex-City Solicitor McAnarney would be a good man to head it. He has a wide acquaintance with city affairs and Quincy in general, and knows of its needs and its shortcomings.

Many recognize in James Thompson, a candidate with wide experience in city affairs, who if allowed to administer the office on business principles would make an excellent Mayor, but there are rumors which many voters do not regard with favor. It is openly stated that Mr. Thompson is pledged to the City Hall machine; that he will, if elected, make certain reappointments.

It seems to be the opinion that Mr. Thompson recognizes the demands of City Hall rather than the Republican party to whom he looks for a nomination. When city officials attempt to run the polities of the city many think they are going too far.

DRIVEN ASHORE.

Timely Rescue of Quincy People Caught by Squall.

A Boston paper reports that Mr. and Mrs. Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer and 4-year-old son of Quincy while in the yacht Thelga of the Atlantic Yacht Club off Gallop's Island Thursday afternoon they were overtakeh by the terrific squall and driven ashore.

The yacht was pounding heavily on the beach, and the frightened occupants, unable to land and in danger of being drowned when rescued by the crew of the Board of Health steamer Vigilant of Boston.

The women were taken to Boston and from there came home, while the men remained to assist in getting the yacht back to the club moorings.

Y. M. C. A. Auxiliaries.

The second annual conference of the Women's Auxiliaries to the Young Men's Christian Associations of Massachusetts and Rhode Island will meet at the Association Building, Cambridge, October 11-13, and a strong program has been prepared. Quincy will send delegates. Among the speakers are Miss Frances J. Dyer, Boston; Mrs. H. H. Leavitt, Somerville; Mrs. A. H. Grover, Lynn; Mrs. George A. Brown, Everett; Mrs. H. P. Higgins, Worcester; Mrs. C. M. Lamson, Auburndale; Mrs. Ira D. Hasbrouck, Providence; Henry F. Ramhofer, Cambridge; A. G. Bookwalter, Boston; Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., Boston, and Z. C. Collins, Manila, P. I.

Mr. Collins has been Army Secretary in the Philippines for the past four years. He has recently returned to Massachusetts for a few months' furlough and will be eagerly heard by the ladies of the Auxiliaries, who have been closely following Mr. Collins' work with the United States Army at the front. Dr. Dixon is not only one of the most successful but one of the most popular preachers in New England. He has taken for his topic, "The Vision of God and Man." The various sessions of this conference will be open to the general public.

Visit to Soldiers' Home.

Seven members of Paul Revere Corps visited the Soldiers Home in Chelsea on Wednesday. They were cordially received and shown over the home. The veterans all seemed contented and happy and the party returned to Quincy feeling pleased that the old soldiers have such a beautiful home and are so well cared for. Two Quincy men are in the home and they were much pleased to see the Quincy folks. The ladies carried fruit, jelley, candy, tobacco and books.

Army Movements In Manchuria

London, Oct. 1.—Field Marshal Oyama has begun the long expected advance upon the Russian army at Mukden and a coincident movement against Sinmintin is indicated by the fact that the Japanese have occupied Siaobeyho, west of the Liao river. General Sakharoff reports successes in several engagements of a minor character. A dispatch from General Kuroki's headquarters reports the present Japanese military organization to be as efficient as it has been at any time since the war began. There is no definite news from Port Arthur.

Banner Rescued Under Difficulties

Esopus, N. Y., Oct. 1.—The only Parker and Davis banner in Esopus came near being wrecked by a terrific windstorm. Half the population turned out to save the banner, which was accomplished after W. C. Pullman had fallen from a building and broken a leg and County Supervisor Long had fallen from a tree into a pickerel pond.

Parker Returns to Esopus

New York, Oct. 1.—Judge Parker left last night for Esopus. Party leaders express themselves as highly pleased with the visits to New York of Judge Parker, as tending to bring about even more harmonious relations. To that end the judge will return to this city next Monday, increasing the length of his stay.

THE NATION'S LOSS

Senator Hoar Was Ever Devoted to Her Best Interests

TRIBUTE OF BAY STATE

New England's Devotion to Learning, Love of Freedom and Passion For Equal Rights Were Dead Statesman's Right of Birth--Public Men Hasten to Give Words of Eulogy

Boston, Oct. 1.—Governor Bates has issued a proclamation announcing Senator Hoar's death, reciting his virtues and service, and directing honor to be paid to his memory. The proclamation concludes:

"In recognition of his eminent services, it seems fitting that the state departments be closed on the day of his funeral; that the flags throughout the commonwealth be placed at half mast, and that our citizens, by such other appropriate methods as may suggest themselves, express their respect for his memory."

Resolutions on the death of the senator were adopted by the executive council, as follows:

We stand in the shadow of great sorrow. Senator Hoar is dead. Massachusetts has lost her sagest councilor, the United States has lost a leader, humanity has lost a friend.

Fifty-two years have passed since George Frisbie Hoar first became a member of the general court. Fifty-two years of life devoted to the service of his commonwealth and of his country show not one act that was selfish, not one motive that was mean. His progress was steady and consistent from the lower to the higher branch of the general court, from the lower to the higher branch of congress.

The youthful fire that burned so brightly when the United States was still half slave and half free never in his life sank back into ashes. Broad, liberal, tolerant, the very intensity of his own convictions made him the first to appreciate all honest convictions of others.

The spirit of New England, her devotion to learning, her love of freedom, her passion for equal rights were his by right of birth. It was inevitable that such a man should forsake the lucrative career that opened to the leader of the Worcester bar that he might give his keen insight, his rare judgment, his tireless industry to the cause of his country.

Where peace, where honor, where peace with honor have needed a champion, he has stood for over half a century and has not stood in vain. The great poet of Sweden might have written of him as well as of that wise and gentle northern king:

"Hence was our hero
High held by all men,
Shielding the suffering,
Seeking for peace,
Courage and kindness
Nobly incarnate,
Soars he like sacrifice
Smoke to the sky."

Today in the United States no slave bends under the lash, not agriculture only but manufactures flourish and expand, civil service is based on merit, the promise of the United States is accepted at its face value in every exchange of the world. These things could not once be said. These facts were once possibilities. He helped to make them facts.

We can write no eulogy that is altogether fitting. A statesman's best eulogy is history's. That eulogy is his.

Simple in his life, rich only in his deeds and his ideals, he leaves the great inheritance of a pure life highly lived; he leaves as an enduring monument the abiding gratitude of Massachusetts, of the United States of America.

MOURNED BY ALL

Words of Praise Confined to No Party, School or Creed

The following extracts from the tributes of notable men give token of the esteem in which Senator Hoar was held.

President Roosevelt: The loss is of those who believe in the standard of purity, integrity and fearlessness in public life.

Senator Fairbanks: Senator Hoar's ideals were high and to them he was true. He was a pure American patriot.

Secretary of War Taft: Not in years have we had in public life so noble an example of the old Puritan stock.

Attorney General Moody: He stood in the front ranks of the great characters of our times.

Richard Olney: No Massachusetts man will doubt that the death of her senior senator is a national calamity.

Senator Platt of Connecticut: His life was pure, noble, forceful and grand.

Governor Bates: A sincere man, wholly devoted to conscience, hewing close to the line, scorning the acts of the demagogue, not anxious to please men, but to serve them.

Mayor Collins of Boston: What he did was always the impulse of an honest man.

Carroll D. Wright: His private life was as sweet and beautiful as his public life was grand and inspiring.

Ex-Governor Boutwell: Senator Hoar was probably the most intellectual of the politicians of his time, with the exception, possibly, of Charles Sumner.

Ex-Governor Long: Poor in material fortune, he was one of the richest men of the world in treasures, which neither rust nor moth doth corrupt.

Ex-Governor Claflin: Massachusetts has lost one of her ablest and truest men, a man who from the very outset of his brilliant career showed remarkable talent and ability and a keen appreciation of the affairs of state.

Attorney General Parker of Massachusetts: Friend, counsellor and teacher of all mankind.

President Hall of Clark university: The best of all living embodiments of the ideal humanist.

President Hanselman of Holy Cross college: His nobility of character appears most strikingly in the simplicity of his greatness.

President Smith of the Mormon church: Senator Hoar was a statesman and a gentleman, one of the foremost men of America, an honorable and high-minded citizen and legislator.

Soldiers Offer to Act as Escort

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 1.—Four companies of the Second and Ninth regiments of militia, stationed at Worcester, have offered their services for military escort to the funeral of Senator Hoar. The matter was left with the family to decide if such escort is desired. Four men are to be detailed from each company to act as guard of honor to the body while it lies in state in city hall from 4 to 8 o'clock Monday afternoon. The buildings in the business section of Worcester are being draped in black and portraits of Senator Hoar are seen in the store windows, draped in black and national colors.

Senator Frye's Tribute

Lewiston, Me., Oct. 1.—Senator Frye, president pro tem of the United States senate, has named 16 senators to represent the upper branch of congress at the funeral of Senator Hoar. In speaking of the death of Senator Hoar, Senator Frye said: Senator Hoar was a man of strong convictions and had the courage to support them. He was thoroughly honest in thought and action. As a constitutional lawyer he had no superior in the senate, possibly none in the country. In scholarship he had no peer in our body. His death is a loss to his state and to the country.

Firemen Had a Hard Job

New York, Oct. 1.—After 22 hours' fighting of a fire that proved to be one of the worst the New York department has had to contend with for years, Chief Croker called the men and apparatus away from the ruins of a block of meat packing and refrigerating plants. The loss is estimated at about $200,000. During the fire nearly all of the 150 men who were engaged in fighting it were either overcome by the fumes of ammonia or by the smothering clouds of smoke.

Encouraging Trade Outlook

New York, Oct. 1.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says that the last quarter of 1904 opens with much brighter prospects than prevailed a year ago. At the present time there are no alarming features, strikes are few and unimportant, while the indications of growing confidence are numerous. Business does not show the hesitation customary during the closing weeks of a presidential campaign.

Prince Protests Regency

Berlin, Oct. 1.—The protest of Prince George of Schaumburg-Lippe to the federal council against the succession of Count Leopold, son of the late Count Ernest of Lippe-Biesterfeld, to the regency of Lippe-Detmold, affirms that the entire Lippe-Biesterfeld line lost its rights of succession because Modeste Von Unruh, great-grandmother of Count Leopold, was not legitimately descended from the noble family.

Six Public Officers In Prison

St. Louis, Oct. 1.—John K. Schnettler, former member of the house of delegates, who pleaded guilty to charges of bribery in connection with the suburban railway deal, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. Schnettler is the sixth member of the house of 1899-1901 to be sent to the penitentiary in connection with this deal.

Objection to Cigar Stamp Decision

Havana, Oct. 1.—Cigar manufacturers here regard the decision of the United States treasury department in the cigar stamp case as unjust to Cuban interests. They see no reason for protecting manufacturers in the United States to the extent of removing the only conspicuous evidence that the contents of a box of cigars were imported.

Preparing to Resume Studies

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 1.—Seven hundred and fifty midshipmen who have been on summer leave have returned to Annapolis and reported at the naval academy for the opening of the institution's 59th academic year. There are yet 142 members of the upper classes to report, but it is expected they will arrive today.

Yankee Defeats the Rainbow

New York, Oct. 1.—J. R. Maxwell's 70-foot yacht, Yankee, won the third and final race of the New York Yacht club's series, beating Cornelius Vanderbilt's Rainbow by 4m. 36s. over a 21½-mile triangular course. The first race was won by the Yankee, the second by the Rainbow and the third by the Yankee.

SEEING THE FAIR IN DETAIL

Wonderful Results From a Liquid Diet Among Gas Engines—New Field For Usefulness For the Vapor Generators. Pumping Engines For Irrigating Desert Lands — Pumps That Protect the Exposition From Fire—The Steam Turbines Laid Open So One May See Their Secret Chambers—Extraordinary Velocity of One Type of Turbine — The Largest Engine In the World—Engines of Many Sizes.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE BY MARK BENNITT.]

No servant of man returns so much for a simple drink as the gas engine. Pour into its thirsting interior a given quantity of gasoline, kerosene or petroleum and you receive a certain return of power that discounts animal brawn for cheapness and gives the engineer a permanent holiday. Any man with a recollection of the farm still lingering in his memory is certain to stop and study prime movers in the Palace of Machinery. The ingenuity of engine makers has for years been sifting out the complexity of engines until we find them adapted to the simplest tasks that demand power and so easy to handle that any one with common sense enough to be a juryman in a justice's court can safely be given an engineer's license for limited service. The gasoline engine and the oil engine are becoming machines of the farm, as common as the hayrake or the mower. They are supplanting the windmill for pumping, they are doing the churning and sawing the wood, they are shredding the cornstalk and grinding the feed. Nothing is too menial for the gas engine, which responds smilingly to the coveted drink of real fire water and with many little hiccoughs goes on gayly with its tasks, no matter how arduous.

A new type of gas engine is now to the fore having a greater task than all. This form of power is entering the vast field of irrigation, and future cities will, while great commonwealths may, owe their existence to the economical pumping powers of engines driven by gasoline and oil. Engine builders are giving these new possibilities their studious attention, for the deserts that can never come under gravity irrigation are a thousand times more vast than those which can. Even the Sahara may become an empire if the supply of petroleum holds out.

It is the experience of practical irrigators that 80 per cent of the water used in irrigation seeps through the soil and returns to its natural channel. Here again the gas engine has its field, to raise to a higher level once more the used water of a previous irrigation.

This must be an age of pumps, no matter what other kind of an age it may be. Here is a pump for every kind of a purpose that a pump may be used for, from wind to water. But the greatest pumping plant in operation here is the underwriters' battery of force pumps which constitute the one great protection against serious fires. No city ever had such a tremendous pumping energy attached to its fire protective system. Fourteen pumps, with steam up all the time and under slow operation, stand ready instantly to throw 14,000 gallons of water a minute in any part of the system. These pumps are set to maintain a pressure of 150 pounds to the square inch at all times, and fifty-six fire streams may be thrown at one time. In the great exhibit palaces are turret nozzles on high platforms that will throw a three inch stream with force enough to sweep the buildings almost clean of exhibits if occasion demanded, a flood that would reach the high roofs and tear out the sides of the building.

The creation of the steam turbine has made a demand for another kind of a pump. All steam turbines to date are condensing engines, and the condensers require steam pumps of great capacity to maintain the vacuum of the condenser and throw the water again to the boiler. The pump makers are on hand with the pumps, you may be sure, and you may see them, inside and out.

A little farther along to the westward among the marvelous engines we come to one such as the public has never before been privileged to see. It is the steam engine of the future—the steam turbine such as they are going to put into the 800 foot Cunarder and such as are now in use in several fast boats in the English channel and elsewhere. Here is one of them, exerting the power of 600 horses, undergoing an endurance test. It was started on June 20, and when I last noted the figures it had run more than 2,000 hours without even a halt for oil or a cooling. Here are the several parts laid open for public inspection like the two halves of an apple. A revolving cylinder covered with annular rings of vanes that suggest kernels of corn on a cob or rows of brass teeth is made to lie in a hollow cylinder whose inner surface is studded with other teeth by hundreds. Note the shape of the teeth—all slightly concave. The concavity of the teeth on the revolving cylinder is opposed to the concavity of the teeth on the inner surface of the box cylinder. There's the secret. The steam strikes the concave teeth of the revolving cylinder and is deflected against the immovable teeth, whence it is again deflected to the teeth of the moving cylinder and so on through its tortuous course to the exhaust, giving the movable cylinder impetus all the way. The rotary engine, the dream of mechanicians for generations, is at last a success. The one I have mentioned is the Parsons—a long cylinder with high speed. A 3,000 horsepower Curtis turbine is also here in operation, two epoch makers in engine building. The reason why the turbine is so much in favor is at once apparent. The absence of reciprocating parts reduces vibration and the necessity for a great number of parts, and therefore the weight is far less, only about one-eighth the weight of an engine of the same capacity. The force of the steam is also more completely used.

I may add that the speed of the Parsons turbine here in operation is 3,600 revolutions per minute. It goes around sixty times while you say "scat." It is greased lightning in a cage. Attached to the revolving shaft, in order to make practical use of the power, is the twenty-eight inch revolving field of a 400 kilowatt turbo generator, whose speed at the rim is over 7,000 miles per twenty-four hours, about 300 miles per hour or five miles a minute.

Perhaps I should have mentioned first the huge generators that stand thirty or forty feet high, for they catch the eye like a cyclone cloud on the horizon. Here are four engines, each exerting a power of 3,000 horse. Here also is the largest engine in the world, rated at 5,000 horse, but exerting each evening when carrying its full load 6,400 horsepower. It is a combination of the vertical and horizontal types, two pistons working on one crank. The cost of such an engine is $150,000.

One quite overlooks the scores of other engines in his awe of the monster masses of brilliant and lifelike metal that swing their mighty arms with tireless energy and make the night brilliant with scenes more fascinating than the fairylands of storybooks. But the little fellows are here in all sizes. Some of them click like a jig dancer in his clogs, as if to work were their only delight. Others have a complex series of clicks on account of their fancy cutoffs that have supplanted the old fashioned steam wasting eccentrics. All these sounds are as music to the lover of machinery, and to the American's love of machines that perform the countless tricks of manufacture is due his ability to make more goods for a dollar than any citizen of any other nation.

PARROT ROOTER IN CHURCH

Feathered Baseball Fan Advised Pastor to "Slide" During Sermon.

"Dearly beloved, my text today is"—

"Run, run for all that's in you! Good! Hold it! Hold it! You're safe, all right!"

The Rev. E. C. Warren was about to begin his sermon in the Washington Street Methodist Episcopal church at Poughkeepsie the other morning when some most sportive and irreligious expressions floated into the church from the other side of the street, says the New York World.

"Brethren," began the minister again.

"Guess that's going some! Run! It's good for two bases, easy. Slide!"

All the people nearest the north side of the church, and therefore nearest the profane voice, looked very serious. Deacon Kain said to Deacon Hoyt:

"It's that miserable parrot again, and he's getting worse than ever!"

So he was. The parrot, hanging outside the window of Mrs. Raymond's boarding house, never before "rooted" so vociferously. And with good cause, for the previous day finished the season of the Hudson River Baseball league, with Poughkeepsie winning the championship.

Most of the players board with Mrs. Raymond. For several Sundays polly has been annoying Mr. Warren's congregation with her baseball lingo. The other morning she mingled some swear words with the lingo of the diamond, and that was the last straw. Deacon Kain just got right up from his pew, walked over to police headquarters and demanded that the parrot be suppressed.

Chief McCabe telephoned to Mrs. Raymond, who promised to muffle Fan, the parrot, hereafter whenever there are services in the church.

Santa Claus' Trip In a Schooner.

A Christmas cargo of all kinds of Santa Claus things is what the new schooner Margaret Thomas of Thomastown, Me., is going to take on her maiden voyage, says the Kennebec Journal. She is first going to Boston, where the supply will be placed on board, and then Captain Balano will head the vessel for Rio, where he is to land the cargo and make the people happy Dec. 25.

No Blonds 600 Years Hence.

A Professor Mason states that "fair haired girls are disappearing. In less than six centuries there will be no blonds left." This imminent peril, says the London Globe, is as alarming as the rumor that we have only enough coal for 50,000 years.

The Little Japanese.

Once I knew a Japanese,
With a little blue chemise,
Socks and sandals and a pretty paper fan,
Lady foot and dandy hand,
Microscopically planned—
And he didn't seem at all a fighting man.

He was neat and he was clean,
Most delightful to be seen;
He was spotless; he was spick, and he was span;
He was sugar; he was spice;
He was everything that's nice—
And he didn't seem at all a fighting man.

He would greet you with a smile
Which would carry half a mile,
Sweet as summer and expansive in its plan;
He would nod his beaming noll,
Like a polished little doll—
And he didn't seem at all a fighting man.

Which is why I'd give a lot
Could I camp upon the spot
Where he's winning bloody laurels for Japan,
Just to watch him wading in,
With that smile above his chin,
For he didn't seem at all a fighting man.

GURNEY INCIDENT

Considered Closed So Far as Massachusetts Is Concerned

THE SPEED REGULATIONS

Embassy Secretary Expresses Regret If He Violated Them--Suggestion Than an Apology Is Due Judge Phelps

Boston, Oct. 1.—Advices from Lenox are to the effect that Sir Mortimer Durand, the British ambassador, has received a dispatch from Acting Secretary of State Loomis which embodied the substance of Governor Bates' letter to the state department in the recent Phelps-Gurney matter. The ambassador has wired Loomis to thank Bates for his letter, and also to inform him that Gurney wishes to express his regret if he had not conformed to the motor speed regulations. The official papers in the case have not yet been received at the British embassy.

Gov ~nor Bates says that he considers the Gurney incident to be closed, so far as this commonwealth is concerned. "The letter from the acting secretary of state, calling attention to the case," said Bates, "closed with a paragraph requesting the executive of this state to take such action 'as may be necessary.' Such action was taken. The state department did not ask for the legal history of the case, and it was known that this was being obtained through the medium of the United States district attorney."

This announcement may be considered in a way a reply to the intimation of the state department in Washington, where Bates' communication in the Phelps-Gurney case was received Thursday afternoon, that the governor's statement of facts is lacking in the detail necessary to the legal presentation of the case that is contemplated.

The report of the inquiry made at Lee by the Boston branch of the federal department of justice will be awaited before the reply to the complaint of the British embassy is framed. This, it is understood, will present a sober statement of the facts in detail, especially those bearing on the question whether Gurney was a wilful or accidental violator of the law.

Of the hint in Bates' letter that the violation should be reported to the British ambassador, it is said that the only way the federal government can express displeasure with a diplomat, whatever his offense, is to ask for his recall. It is a question whether so radical a step is warranted in this case, which seems already to have been discussed disproportionately to its real importance.

The suggestion is made that, inasmuch as Judge Phelps has apologized to Gurney, the latter should now be equally polite and apologize to Phelps. Then both sides would be satisfied. It is not believed that the ambassador will care to insist on any further action against Phelps, and after the present incident has subsided, Gurney may be transferred to another post, the change ostensibly having no connection with the matter now in hand.

Recall Considered Unlikely

London, Oct. 1.—A brief report of the incident growing out of the arrest and fining of Hugh Gurney from Ambassador Durand has been received at the foreign office, but no action has been taken. It is added, however, that no action could be taken until the foreign office is in possession of all the facts. It is scarcely thought here that the United States government will suggest Gurney's recall.

Would Have American Aid

Washington, Oct. 1.—A petition calling upon the president to intervene in the affairs of the Congo Free State in the interests of civilization was presented to President Roosevelt by E. D. Morel. The memorialists say that they are "seeking the counsel and pleading for the assistance of the first citizen of the American republic, which has ever interested itself powerfully in the cause of civilization."

Thousand Men Lose Work

Wellsville, O., Oct. 1.—Over 1000 employes of the Pennsylvania system left the service of the company last night because of a general order that has just been made operative. No employe of the company who was hired after he reached the age of 35 is to be retained. If a man was hired before he was 35, then he retains his position.

Chappelle Not to Resign

Rome, Oct. 1.—The assertion that Archbishop Chappelle of New Orleans is likely to resign his appointment as apostolic delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico is denied on the highest authority at the Vatican. The propaganda is thoroughly satisfied with his work both in New Orleans and in the Antilles.

American Party Ticket In Utah

Salt Lake City, Oct. 1.—At a largely attended meeting of sympathizers with the new American party movement last night, a state ticket, headed by William Ferry for governor, was nominated. Ogden Hiles was nominated for congress.

"The Golden Light" a Failure

London, Oct. 1.—Mrs. James Brown Potter announces the withdrawal of her new play, "The Golden Light," and, not having another play ready, will close her season at the Savoy theatre tonight.

PEACE IS POSSIBLE

Fall River Manufacturers and Labor Leaders May Confer

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 1.—It is expected that a conference will shortly be held between the mill operatives and the manufacturers, members of the Merchants' association being at work in an attempt to effect a compromise. Both sides, however, say that so far nothing tangible has been brought about. Neither side seems willing to recede from its position.

The labor leaders are satisfied that they can continue the strike for weeks to come if the disposition of the manufacturers is to invite a continuance of a finish fight. Manufacturers, on the other hand, see but few business reasons for reopening the mills, and no reasons for recalling their action on the wage matter. But on both sides there is a growing realization that the suffering is keen and bodes no good for the future of the industry unless an honorable understanding is reached soon.

It is known definitely that some manufacturers and some leaders of the unions have talked over the situation on the streets and have urged that some plan of settlement be arrived at. In these talks it has been definitely stated by both sides that a conference might be of advantage.

Big Tower Ran Away

Boston, Oct. 1.—An accident which involves about $20,000 money loss and which came at a time when the loss of life was narrowly averted, occurred at the navy yard. The great travelling tower which forms a part of the new coal-handling plant at the upper end of the yard escaped from the stationary position in which it had been left and started down a long inclined elevated railway. It ran with fast increasing speed, and after a distance of 100 feet or so, jumped the track and fell to the ground, a distance of about 80 feet. The heavy tower was wrecked, as was some portion of the elevated track.

Jury Finds McInerney Guilty

Boston, Oct. 1.—A verdict of guilty on all four counts of indictments charging former Representative James McInerney of Boston with taking with intent to steal and with destroying his own naturalization papers was rendered last night by the jury in the United States district court. His counsel filed several exceptions and the case will probably go to the higher court. Meantime the defendant is out on $3000 bail.

Providence Firebugs Active

Providence, Oct. 1.—A five-pound package of tar, turpentine and axle grease was found beneath the hay and grain store of George S. Wilcox and two suspects have been arrested as possibly guilty of an attempt to set fire to the building. Detectives, stimulated by rewards aggregating $2500 for the arrest and conviction of the lumber yard firebugs, are rounding up every person of suspicious deportment.

Wolves Feasting on Poultry

Bedford, Mass., Oct. 1.—The great, gray timber wolves, allowed by some person unknown to escape from the Lexington park menagerie Wednesday night, are still at large, feasting at will on the poultry of the farmers. A posse headed by Chief of Police Kelly, and every available member of the force, are tramping the woods, armed to the teeth, in search of the beasts.

Called Criminal Carelessness

Lawrence, Mass., Oct. 1.—Judge Stone found Fred Gould probably guilty of manslaughter in causing the death of Roy Thomas, and ordered the defendant held for the grand jury. Thomas was accidentally shot during a rehearsal for an amateur play, but Judge Stone held that the carelessness which resulted in the fatality was criminal.

Wife Slain and Husband Missing

Wentworth, N. H., Oct. 1.—The body of Mrs. Henry Wilkinson was found in bed with the skull crushed, and the authorities, assisted by a large posse of citizens, are searching the woods for her husband, who is charged with having murdered her. The theory held by the villagers is that Wilkinson committed the crime in an attack of insanity.

Fugitive Shot State Policeman

Hartford, Oct. 1.—In an attempt last night to capture John H. Whipple of East Glastonbury, who is wanted on the charge of attempting to kill Samuel J. Starmer, State Policeman Louks was shot by the fugitive and is now in a hospital. The shooting occurred at the home of Whipple, who made his escape.

Suicide of Church Sexton

Maynard, Mass., Oct. 1.—John Lynch, aged 55, sexton of St. Bridget's Catholic church, was found floating in a mill pond last night. Lynch had been missing since Saturday. About the neck was a rope, to which a stone was attached. Lynch had been despondent.

A VALLEY FLOODED

Las Animas River Breaks Over Banks In Colorado

HEAVY LOSS AT TRINIDAD

No Loss of Life Reported, as Citizens Were Warned of Approach of Flood--Business Is Paralyzed and Traffic Shut Off

Trinidad, Col., Oct. 1.—A terrific flood struck the city of Trinidad and the whole valley along the Las Animas river, devastating a wide section and causing a loss which is estimated at $1,000,000. So far as known there was no loss of life, but several persons are reported missing.

Every bridge in the city of Trinidad is out, the Santa Fe station is demolished, all of the railroads are tied up and the telephone and telegraphic service completely suspended. More than 30 city blocks in the residence and business portions are from two to four feet under water along the river.

The flood was caused by a heavy rain which had been falling for two days. Finally the storm assumed cloudburst proportions and the Las Animas river went over its banks. It was impossible to get within a block of the river bed at any point and Commercial street was flooded for three blocks in the heart of the business district.

Meantime, the electric light and gas plants had been flooded and the city was in complete darkness. Hundreds of citizens thronged the streets on the edge of the submerged district, carrying lanterns and doing their best to provide for those driven from home with shelter.

Warning of the flood was given when the river left its banks by revolver shots and the ringing of the fire alarm, followed by the blowing of all the locomotive and shop whistles in town. Citizens upon rafts made of sections of sidewalks paddled through the streets, rescuing families who were in danger.

The new Bacca hotel, a two-story structure, just nearing completion on the river bank, was destroyed. The water then ate its way through 50 feet of ground to the Santa Fe depot, which was carried away. The Cardenas hotel, adjoining, barely escaped a similar fate, an acre of ground being washed away near it. The Rio Grande bridge at El Moro is out and the Santa Fe right of way in many places has been washed out. Railroad traffic is entirely suspended and business here is paralyzed.

It was reported that the flood was due to a break in the city reservoir, but this is erroneous. The reservoir is safe.

Tornado In Maine

Belfast, Me., Oct. 1.—A small tornado which followed a course for two miles down the Penobscot river and through this city was responsible for a large amount of damage, including the death of Allie Richards, aged 35, who was struck by a falling chimney. The roof of a lumber mill was blown off, vessels were torn away from their moorings, wires prostrated, trees two feet in diameter broken, chimneys blown down, windows broken and business suspended for a time.

Gale Injures Small Craft

Boston, Oct. 1.—A violent westerly gale that lasted not more than half an hour did much damage among the small craft of the upper harbor yesterday afternoon, but caused no loss of life. On shore the wind played many pranks with fences, windows and shutters. At the American League baseball grounds nearly 150 feet of the fence was blown down, while some 50 feet of the 15-foot fence on one side of the entrance was carried into the left field.

Excursion Steamer Wrecked

Burlington, Vt., Oct. 1.—The worst windstorm of the year prevails over Lake Champlain. The lumber wharves of the city are flooded. The excursion steamer Valcour was carried ashore at Crescent beach and her captain and crew of seven men had to swim for their lives through the surf. The steamer will be a total loss. It is thought that considerable damage will be done all along the shore.

Boy Killed by a Hammer

New York, Oct. 1.—Simon P. Gillis, champion junior amateur hammer-thrower of this city, while practicing on a vacant lot here, let the 16-pound-hammer go for an extra long throw as Christian Koehler, 14 years old, climbed over the fence in pursuit of a baseball. The hammer struck Koehler on the head and he was instantly killed.

American Mail Robbed In France

Havre, Oct. 1.—A mail car which was robbed between this place and Paris contained 98 bags, of which 91 contained letters for America. The thieves opened five of those for America. They were from Madrid for Mexico.

Smallpox at Fitchburg

Fitchburg, Mass., Oct. 1.—Francis O. Tower, 70 years old, a farmer of North Adams, died last night of smallpox at the home of his daughter in this city. He came from North Adams with two relatives on Sept. 21.

Gale Breaking Steamer to Pieces

St. Johns, Oct. 1.—Steamer Loyalist, which went ashore at Trapassey on Sept. 28, is breaking to pieces in a gale. It is expected that about a quarter of her cargo will be saved.

COMFORT IN AN AUTOMOBILE

Electric Brougham That Abounds In Original Devices.

There is no man in New York city prouder of his automobile and probably none with better reason than Robert Graves, says the New York Evening World. The machine, an electric auto of the brougham type, constructed after his own ideas and built under his own supervision, took seven months to build, and its cost is estimated at nearly $15,000.

The machine is constructed of aluminium plates finished to resemble mahogany, and, although it carries a storage battery of sixty-eight cells, enough to run the machine at a rate of twenty miles an hour for sixty miles, it weighs only 3,000 pounds.

The cells of the battery are so arranged that the front wheels carry the weight of twenty-eight of them, the rear wheels the remainder. The automobile has a carrying capacity of six persons and is provided with four folding seats, with an aisle between them for easy access. The car can be completely closed in by windows with aluminium frames and is heated by electricity. The vehicle is provided with an ordinary hand brake and an electrical brake, which enables the driver to stop the car without a jerk within a few feet.

One of the most interesting features of the vehicle are the numerous little attachments which greatly increase the ease and comfort of the travelers. There are lamps for reading, a chronometer, an electric cigar lighter, a stationary rack provided with reading matter, letter paper and envelopes, a cardcase and a small case for postage stamps. The reed of the signal horn is protected from dust by a fine screen, and every part of the delicate machinery is carefully guarded from dust and dirt by rubber curtains and screens of wire.

SOUR MILK AS AN ELIXIR.

Secret of Long Life Discovered by Professor Metchnikoff.

The New York Herald publishes the following from its London correspondent:

According to an interview with Professor Elie Metchnikoff of the Pasteur institute, which appears in the October number of the Pall Mall Magazine, the nearest approach to the elixir of life is sour milk.

Any one desiring to attain a ripe old age is recommended by the professor to follow the example of the Bulgarians, noted for their longevity, and consume large quantities of this cheap and easily obtained beverage.

"Sour milk," states M. Metchnikoff, "contains a large bacillus remarkable for the great quantity of lactic acid it is capable of producing. This microbe does not exist normally in the human body and can be introduced with very great benefit to the health, as it preys on the hundreds of thousands of microbes which infest the large intestine. It has been noted that there is a great similarity between old age and disease. A study of certain diseases has proved that there is no difference between the mechanism of senile atrophy and that of atrophy caused by a microbe or poison. In fact, on the approach of old age a veritable battle is waged in the innermost parts of the body.

"Research is therefore being prosecuted to discover a means of strengthening the vital elements of the body on one hand and to awaken the aggressive tendency of the harmful microbes on the other."

When this end has been obtained the professor hopes to be able to prolong life considerably beyond the present average.

GOULD'S $100 TIP.

Present For a Station Agent Along With a Pass to St. Louis.

One of the proudest men in New York state today is William Bishop, the station agent at Arkville, in the Catskills, because he recently received a $100 tip and a railroad pass to the St. Louis exhibition and return from George J. Gould, says a Middletown (N. Y.) special dispatch to the New York Press.

Mr. Gould had been staying in his summer home, Furlough lodge, on his estate near Arkville. He arrived at Arkville in his private car, which was run on a switch. It was visited by people from miles around. So many came to see it that the station agent had the greatest difficulty in preventing damage to the interior.

Mr. Gould so appreciated the care with which his property was guarded, also the efficient manner in which express matter for Furlough lodge had been handled all the season, that when he was leaving Arkville for New York he thanked the station agent and gave him the $100 and the pass.

Phone Plugs to Foil Lovemaking.

The new plant of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone company, which has moved its central exchange to a new and permanent telephone building, is provided with a device to stop flirtations, says a Washington special dispatch to the New York Times. Stationed in the center of the immense operating room, the chief operator can connect with any of the boards and "butt in" on all flirtations with the telephone girl. Whenever the assistant manager thinks one of the girls is exchanging sweet nothings with a subscriber he places his receiver to his ear, puts a plug in and listens. Having convinced himself as to the transgression, he walks over to the offending girl and advises her the company can do without her services for a week or so. It is always suspension for the first violation of rules and dismissal afterward.

UNCLE SAM.

Between 1896 and 1903 (five last years only) Uncle Sam increased his sales to the Philippines from practically nothing to over $4,000,000 yearly.

UNDER PROTECTION.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ It appears that Justice Phelps of Lee, who committed the unpardonable offense of giving a Britisher the punishment he deserved for ignoring Massachusetts law, is a well-known manufacturer of that place who was appointed because of his integrity, rather than because of his legal knowledge. In fact he isn't a lawyer at all, but that doesn't alter the fact that he is a good justice. The only trouble with him was that he supposed he was appointed to administer justice in his jurisdiction, rather than law, and did not appreciate the vast difference that sometimes lies between the two.—Haverhill Gazette.

☞ What a relief it is to have something else beside the warm eloquence of contending Congressional forces to read about. These controversies, such as we have just been through are necessary to political life, but they remind us of the chap who said he liked to be stung by a bee because it felt so good when it got done smarting. We are now comparatively safe in expecting immunity from the improvement club infliction for several weeks, and in the mean time the voter can be carefully weighing the merits of the Presidential campaign preparatory to the coming election in November.—Lynn Item.

☞ Mr. Luce is still in love with his caucus law, but he is manly enough to admit that a little tinkering will do it no harm. As he survived the caucus conflict, and will be re-elected a Representative, he will be in position as chief tinker, and the law will come out in much better shape. He is right in saying that City Committees and City Clerks can help to make the law more popular, and undoubtedly another year will see improvement. Where there are contesting delegations the voters need to exercise considerable care, and it is not asking too much of them to at least put as much attention to the casting of a vote, and casting it right, as they do to the making of a purchase in the market.—Lynn Item.

☞ The Board of Education of Orange, N. J., is considering the question of allowing boys in the public schools to raise the flag each morning as a reward for good behavior. At present the janitor has the job. As janitors are models of deportment, nothing is gained by allowing them to raise the flag. On the other hand, what could make a boy more inclined to subdue the old man Adam in him than the prospect of being allowed to raise the flag over the school-building? The Orange educators think that the plan would foster patriotism. At any rate, it might serve to discourage deviltry in ingenous youth. Still, it is possible to suspect and there are grounds for the suspicion that in case of war, the "baddest" boys would be among the first to volunteer. Let goodness have all due honor, but the fighting bad boy is often very useful to his country.—Everybody's Magazine.

Four Wards Only.

Edward J. Sandberg did not ask for a recount in all of the wards of the city but confined himself to Wards one, two, three and five. The petition will be presented to the Board of Registrars tonight.

CITY AUDITOR.

The Work of City Council Performed in Advance.

Editors of Daily Ledger:

Even before the official withdrawal of George A. Sidelinger, as a candidate for reelection as City Auditor, came rumors that his successor had already been selected at City Hall, and the withdrawal of John O. Hall from the Representative contest seems to confirm the report that he is the candidate selected.

For the first ten years of the city, Mr. Hall performed the duties of City Auditor, until he had ambition to be Mayor, and he was twice elected to that office. In 1903, and again this year, he aspired to become a Representative to the General Court, and was a promising candidate this year for the Republican nomination with good prospects of an election. Suddenly and quietly, however, he withdraws.

Who promised Mr. Hall the position of City Auditor?

It is an office which the City Charter provides shall be filled by the City Council, and the City Auditor is alone responsible to the City Council.

The City Council makes all appropriations and it is the duty of the City Auditor to see that the moneys are properly expended. In other words he shall be a check on the Mayor and the administrative officers of the city.

But rumor has it that one of the administrative officers, who has the expenditure of considerable city money, has selected the City Auditor. All that will be required of the Councilmen to be elected next December is that they shall ratify the choice.

Is this as it should be?

Can the City Auditor do his full duty to the city if he is under obligations to a city official?

The city auditorship is not the only position where City Hall officials are making selections. Their hand was seen in the Representative contest, and it is said they also have a candidate for Mayor. In fact much of the time of some of the officials is spent in political work. Qui Vive.

THE CAUSE OF SURF.

Why Waves Always Become Breakers In Shallow Water.

Long and oscillatory waves run by gravity, the first agitating the water to nearly the same amount at all depths, while the chief disturbance due to the latter confines itself to the upper layers of the water.

These oscillatory waves, the most typical example of which is perhaps furnished by the "swell," or regular rolling waves which continue to run in deep water after a storm, will break on a shelving shore when their height is about equal to the depth of water. When the depth is sufficient to allow the oscillations to proceed unimpeded no progressive motion takes place, each column being kept in its place by the pressure of surrounding columns.

If, however, free oscillation is prevented, as by the interposition of a rock or by the shelving of the shore, the columns in the deep water are not balanced by those in the shallower, and thus they acquire a progressive motion and form "breakers." For this reason waves always break against the shore, whatever is the direction of the wind.

The Ship Rigger.

Even compared with the work of a circus acrobat the job of a ship's rigger is extremely perilous, for whereas the circus performer is safeguarded in every way possible and the ropes and supports are thoroughly tested the rigger's duty is to ascend masts often made extremely perilous by rot or dangerously impaired by storms. Extreme coolness and caution are necessary, and the men engaged in this calling are a clear headed, hard handed lot, who take risks cheerily and work with an instant understanding of their business. Taking into consideration the extent and character of their work, comparatively few meet with accident.—New York Herald.

The Explanation.

Balty Moore—How was that last cook you had?

Calvert, Jr.—The limit—positively the limit.

"But you gave her a corking good letter of recommendation."

"Well, what was I to do? She sat right down in the kitchen and wouldn't go on any other terms."—Baltimore American.

Mitigating Circumstances.

"Did you find it difficult to reconcile yourself to the loss of your daughter?"

"Yes; very at first. But her husband unexpectedly inherited $100,000 about six weeks after they were married."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Undisguised.

Blobbs—In spite of all the money Newrich spends on his clothes he can't disguise his plebeian origin. Slobbs—No; it's like putting a ten dollar collar on a thirty cent dog.—Philadelphia Record.

The flower of civilization is the finished man, the man of sense, of grace, of accomplishment, of social power—the gentleman.—Emerson.

BAPTISTS MEET.

Convention of the Boston South Association at Braintree.

The Boston South Baptist association held its fifty-sixth annual meeting in the Braintree Baptist church, Wednesday, September 28th.

The session opened at 9.30 with a song service. The various committees were then appointed to report later in the day. Rev. Leroy Montague was chosen moderator. Rev. E. C. Stover, pastor of the entertaining church welcomed the visitors after which the officers for the ensuing year were elected.

Dr. F. M. Gardner delivered an inspiring sermon which was only the beginning of the feast of good things enjoyed during the day. At 12 o'clock the meeting was adjourned for dinner.

At 1.30 the meeting was again called to order. The chief feature of this session was a discussion on "Moral courage, a great need in the church today." It was opened by Rev. Tillman B. Johnson of Dorchester temple, who was followed by Rev. A. F. Newcomb of Bethany church and Rev. N. H. Harriman of the Avon church. There were a number of short speeches from the floor on the same subject. Dr. Grant of Vancouver, subject "The Blindness of Jesus." also delivered an interesting address. Shortly before five o'clock the meeting again adjourned this time for supper.

The evening session began at seven o'clock with a praise service, led by Mr. E. R. Benson assisted by the young people's choir of the entertaining church. The choir also rendered two selections. Rev. G. E. Whitehouse of East Milton conducted a prayer service. Rev. Mr. McAllister of Randolph, read the scriptures and then came the closing sermon of the day by Rev. Galusha Anderson, D. D., of Newton Centre. The association adjourned at about 8.45 until next year.

Dinner and supper were served in the ladies' parlor and vestry. The ladies parlor was in charge of Mrs. E. W. Chamberlain, assisted by Mrs. E. E. Watkins, Mrs. Nellie Fenderson, Mrs. D. E. Fisher, Mrs. G. L. French, Miss Effie Howard, Mrs. A. L. Morrow, Mrs. Susan Daniels, Mrs. Emma Dunkerley, Mrs. A. H. Clark, and Mrs. O. H. Monroe. The waiters were Misses Minnie Annis, Emma Eaton, Florence Hill, Cora Harvey, Helen Gardner and Bertha Hobart.

The vestry was in charge of Mrs. W. F. Stark, assisted by Mrs. H. S. Bates, Mrs. R. F. Bates, Mrs. J. S. Muzzey, Mrs. A. G. Langfitt, Mrs. C. A. Hobart, Mrs. S. A. Tilden, Mrs. J. A. Flye, and Mrs. G. F. Gardner. The waiters were Misses Sadie Buzzell, Marion Fiske, Elva Bates, Bertha Sanford, Nellie Belyea, Miriam Hull and Izzie Smith.

All the churches of the association were well represented and it was a pleasure to greet old friends among them, being the former pastors of this church.

Deacon R. E. Spinney, Mrs. E. C. Stover, and Miss E. A. Bates acted as a reception committee welcoming the many visitors.

The church and dining rooms were prettily decorated with wild flowers and berries. Miss Izzie Smith acted as organist throughout the day.

☞ Mr. E. C. Froehlich, Harvard '03, tutor of Miss Spear's advanced classes, may be consulted daily by appointment. He comes to Quincy highly recommended as a teacher of Latin, German and Mathematics. An evening class in German will soon be formed for men and women.

The Magazines.

The October number of the Review of Reviews covers not only the latest developments of the Presidential campaign, including the Republican and Democratic conventions in New York State, but also the latest progress in the industrial and business world, together with a masterly survey of the war in the far East and its relations to the financial stability of the Japanese and Russian peoples. In its cartoon department, the Review is well sustaining its reputation as a record of current history.

The most interesting features of the October issue of Madame, the magazine "for women who think," published by The Ford Publishing Company, Indianapolis, is the new serial story by Maude C. Murray, entitled The Telford Twin; the home life of Mrs. Charles Warren Fairbanks, by Mary Chomel and How to plant bulbs in the fall season, by the eminent authority, Eben E. Rexford.

Today is the last Saturday that City Hall will close at noon. Here after the offices will be open until 5 o'clock the same as on other days.

The extremes of the September noon temperatures this year were 87 and 54, while the extremes for Septembers since 1896 have been 92 and 52. In September, 1903, they were 86 and 58.

Because of the rivalry between the Quincy, Squantum and Wollaston Yacht clubs, that voting contest at the Y. W. C. fair, open to the most popular member of any yacht club of the city, should be a hot affair.

The Methodist society of Atlantic are preparing to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the dedication of their church, the second Sunday in October. The ladies are to give their annual harvest supper next Tuesday evening.

Tomorrow is church Sunday for the Sunday school of First church, when the school will attend church in a body, seats being reserved for them at the right of the pulpit on the side aisle. Following the church service there will be a special session of the Sunday School.

The Wollaston W. C. T. U. will serve a supper in the Methodist church, Beale street, Tuesday evening, Oct. 4. Addresses will be given by the State President, Mrs. Stevenson; County President, Mrs. Brown and County Superintendent, Mrs. Clara Morrill. Mrs. Mary Hastings Slade will be the soloist.

CHINESE LANGUAGE.

The Most Intricate and Cumbrous Vehicle of Thought Extant.

Chinese has been described as "the most intricate, cumbrous and unwieldy vehicle of thought that ever obtained among any people." There are eighteen varieties of it, besides the court dialect, and until recently no European knew more than three of these fluently, while it may be doubted whether any Chinaman ever fully understood them all.

In what is commonly called Chinese there are 30,000 recognized written character, yet there is no alphabet and practically no grammar. Even this immense number of characters may be indefinitely extended, for a learned Chinese scribe, if he does not know a sign which he thinks entirely suitable to the word he desires to express, coins one. There is a Chinese printed book in the British museum with thirty-two different samples of these fancy characters.

Basque is the most difficult of European languages to acquire, chiefly because of the arbitrary adoption of extraneous words into its sentences. This character marks no other European tongue, but it is one which also renders American Indian languages very troublesome to learn. Gaelic is also difficult, for it has no affirmative and no present tense.

A POSTOFFICE BABEL.

Languages Necessary to Singapore's Mail Delivery.

Singapore is the only British postoffice which employs letter carriers for each language. Within that city there are so many different races who receive correspondence addressed in their own vernacular writing that proper delivery is extremely difficult.

So hard is it that in some districts it has been found necessary to send the postmen upon their rounds in sets of three.

One of these is a Malay in charge of all packets for Europeans, Jews, Armenians, Malays, Arabs, Parsees and Japanese, which are presumably addressed in European script or in writing akin to it. The second of the trio is a Chinaman, who deals with correspondence bearing ideographic characters, while the third is a Tamil, who takes out letters addressed in the writing of his own race as well as any in Telegu and southern Indian writing.

These cosmopolitan postmen have, of course, often to consult each other as they deliver the mails, but sometimes even their varied linguistic attainments have to be supplemented by a Sikh who understands Hindoostanee, Persian and northern Indian characters.

FEATURES OF MUKDEN

It Is the Most Sacred City In the Chinese Empire.

STREETS FULL OF FINE CARVINGS

Capital of Manchuria, Japan's Objective Point, Is Surrounded by a Great Wall With Picturesque High Towers at the Eight Gates and Angles. Burial Site of Mantchoo Emperors.

Mukden, the Japanese objective, is the most important of all the noted cities in Manchuria, says the New York Times. It is the capital and the wealthiest city of this great territory.

The veneration of the Chinese for Mukden can perhaps hardly be realized by occidental peoples. The feeling of the English for Westminster abbey, of the Italians for Rome, may serve to give an idea of it. But in the far east the veneration for the past, as expressed in the worship of ancestors, is actually an important part of religious belief, and for this reason Mukden is the most sacred city in the whole great Chinese empire.

Mukden is the ancient capital of the present dynasty of China. It was there that in the year 1625 Nurhachu, the famous founder of that dynasty, established himself. It was there that the ancestors of the Mantchoo emperors were buried.

Mukden stands in the middle of a great alluvial plain about 320 feet above the level of the sea. All the soil around it is rich and highly cultivated. It is reputed to have a population of 260,000, chiefly Chinese. The houses, both those of the Chinese mandarins and merchants and those of new Russian construction, are built on a magnificent scale.

There is a "forbidden city" in Mukden like the one in Peking, but while the Boxer outbreak of 1900 was followed by the entry of the allies into the hitherto mysterious palaces within the inner walls of Peking, so far as is known no European or American has ever penetrated into the forbidden city of Mukden. It is believed to contain wonderful treasures of ancient art and buildings which surpass in beauty and elaborateness even those at Peking.

Judging from the portions of the city which foreigners are allowed to see, the place must be a very treasure house of the art of the old Chinese. Even the streets are full of carvings of a delicacy unattainable in modern work, while the tombs of the emperors combine a purity of design with an elaboration of detail which show how far the art of China has deteriorated from the old standards.

The city is surrounded by a great brick wall, with picturesque high towers at the eight gates and the angles. Outside are the suburbs, inclosed by a mud wall, while in the middle of the city are the ancient palaces of the Mantchoo emperors inside a third wall. The streets of Mukden are broad and straight. Like Peking, the city possesses a drum tower and a huge bell. The administration buildings and the hall of examinations are within the precincts of the forbidden city.

The early history of the warlike monarchs whose chief city was Mukden, and who in the seventeenth century became the rulers of the whole Chinese empire, is veiled in legend. Three heaven born maidens, so the story runs, were bathing one day in a lake near the Shanalin mountains when a passing magpie dropped a ripe red fruit into the lap of one of them. The maiden ate the fruit, and in due course a child was born to her, whom she named Aisin Gioro, or the Golden. When Aisin Gioro was a lad he was elected chief over three contending clans. His reign was not of long duration, for his subjects rose against him and murdered him, together with all his sons except the youngest, Fancha, who was miraculously saved from his pursuers.

It was Aisin Gioro who named his people Mantchoo, which means "pure." His descendants, through the rescued Fancha, fell into obscurity until the middle of the sixteenth century, when one of them, Nurhachi, born in 1559, the seventh in descent from Aisin Gioro, welded the Mantchoo tribes into one great kingdom. The emperor, Nurhachi, toward the close of his long and illustrious reign transferred his capital to Mukden, and his tomb there is the most venerated of all the royal tombs of the city.

In 1617 Nurhachi drew up a list of "seven hates" against the Chinese and declared war on them. The Chinese were defeated with great slaughter and seventy cities were captured. The war was followed by an alliance between the Mantchoos and the Chinese, who were then ruled over by the Ming dynasty. The later emperors of this dynasty were weak and cowardly, and China was continually invaded by the Tartars. In the end the Mantchoos were begged to save the country. They consented with great alacrity to send an army, and the result of it all was that in 1644 the grandson of Nurhachi ascended the dragon throne without serious opposition on the part of the Chinese. He was Sunchi, the first of the Mantchoo dynasty, which has retained the throne of China ever since.

Mukden is identified with all that is glorious in the records of the Mantchoo emperors and the Mantchoo people, who have become so intermingled with the Chinese that the veneration for the city is shared by all the inhabitants of northern China. Under these circumstances the Peking government's anxiety as to the fate of Mukden can be understood.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1632, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act.

CHAPTER VII—(Continued).

But I pulled hard at her bridle, and I forgot my customary manner with her, so full of terror for her I was. "For God's sake, child, have done," I said, and she looked at me, and there came a strange expression, which I had never seen before, into her blue eyes, half of yielding as to some strength which she feared, and half of that high enthusiasm of youth and noble sentiment which threatened to swamp her in its mighty flow as it had done her hero Bacon before her.

I know not if I could have held her, it all passed in a second the while those wild huzzas continued, and the crowd pressed closer, all crowned and crested with green, like a tidal wave of spring, but another argument came to me, and that moved her. "'Tis not yourself alone, but your sister and Madam Cavendish to suffer with you," I said. Then she gave a quick glance at Catherine, who was raising her white face and trying to get near enough to speak to her, for her sister's speech had made her frantic with alarm, and hesitated.

Then she laughed and the earnest look faded from her face and she called out with that way of hers which nobody and nothing could withstand. "Nay," she said, "wait till I be older and have as much wisdom in my head as hath the Maid Marion whom you have chosen. The one who hath seen so many Mays can best know how to queen it over them."

So saying, she snatched the wreath with which they had crowned her from her head and cast it with such a sweep of grace as never I saw over the head of flax headed and masked Maid Marion, and reined her horse back, and the crowd, with worshipful eyes of admiration of her and her sweetness and wit and beauty, gave way, and was off down the road toward Jarvis field, with loud clamor of bells and horns and wild dancing and wavings of their gadsticks and green branches.

Mistress Mary rode before us at a gallop, and presently we were all at the breakfast table in the great hall at Drake Hill, with foaming tankards of metheglin and dishes of honey and salmon and game in plenty. For, whatever the scarcity of the king's gold, there was not much lack of food in this rich country.

Madam Cavendish was down that morning, sitting at table with her stick beside her, her head topped with a great tower of snowy cap, her old face now ivory yellow but with a wonderful precision of feature, for she had been a great beauty in her day, so alert and alive with the ready comprehension of her black eyes, under slightly scowling brows, that naught escaped her that was within her reach of vision. Somewhat dull was she of hearing, but that sharpness of eye did much to atone for it. She looked up when we entered with such keenness that for a second my thought was that she knew all.

"What were the sounds of merry-making down the road?" said she.

"'Twas the morris dancers and the maypole. 'Tis the 1st of May, as you know, madam," said Mary in her sweet voice, made clear and loud to reach her grandmother's ear. Then up she went to kiss her, and the old woman eyed her with pride, which she was fain to conceal by chiding. "You will ruin your complexion if you go out in such a wind without your mask," she said, and looked at the maiden's roses and lilies with that rapture of admiration occasioned half by memory of her own charms which had faded and half by understanding of the value of them in coin of love, which one woman can waken only in another.

For Catherine, Madam Cavendish had no glance of admiration nor word, though she had tended her faithfully all the day before and half the night, rubbing her with an effusion of herbs and oil for her rheumatic pains. Yet for her Madam Cavendish had no love and treated her with a stately toleration and no more. Mary understood no cause for it and often looked, as she did then, with a distressful wonder at her grandmother when she seemed to hold her sister so slightingly.

"Here is Catherine, grandmother," said she, "and she has had a narrow escape from being pressed as Maid Marion by the morris dancers." Madam Cavendish made a slight motion and looked not at Catherine, but turned to me with that face of anxious kindness which she wore for me alone. "Saw you aught of the Golden Horn this morning, Master Wingfield?" asked she; and I replied truthfully enough that I had not.

Then, to my dismay, she turned to Mary and inquired what were the goods which she had ordered from England, and, to my greater dismay, the maid, with such a light of daring and mischief in her blue eyes as I never saw, rattled off, the while Catherine and I stared aghast at her, such a list of women's folderols as I never heard, and most of them quite beyond my masculine comprehension.

Madam Cavendish nodded approvingly when she had done. "'Tis a wise choice," said she, "and as soon as the ship comes in have the goods brought here and unpacked, that I may see them." With that she rose stiffly, and, beckoning Catherine, who looked as if she could scarcely stand herself, much less serve as prop for another, went out, tapping her stick heavily on one side, on the other leaning on her granddaughter's shoulder.

CHAPTER VIII.

I LOOKED at Mistress Mary and she at me. We had withdrawn to the deepness of a window, while the black slaves moved in and out, bearing the breakfast dishes, as reasonably unheeded by us as the cupbearers in a picture of a Roman banquet in the time of the Caesars which I saw once. Mistress Mary was pale with dismay, and yet her mouth twitched with laughter at the notion of displaying, before the horrified eyes of Madam Cavendish, those grim adornments which had arrived in the Golden Horn.

"La," said she, "when they come a-trundling in a powder cask, and I courtesy and say, 'Madam, here is my furbelowed and gold flowered sacque,' I wonder what will come to pass?" Then she laughed.

"Madam," said I, "why did you give that list?" She laughed again, and her eyes flashed with the very light of mischief.

"I grant 'twas a fib," said she. "But I was taken unawares, and, la, how could I recite to her the true list of my rare finery which came to port yesterday? So I gave the list of goods for which my Lady Culpeper sent to England for the replenishing of her wardrobe and her daughter's, and which is daily expected by ship. I had it from Cicely Hyde, who had it from Cate Culpeper. The ship is due now and may be even now in port, and I so worded what I said that 'twas not, after all, a fib except the hearer chose to make it so. I said, 'Such goods as these are due, madam.'"

Then she gave the list anew, like a parrot, while Catherine, who had returned, stood staring at her, white with terror, though Mary did not see her until she had finished. Then when she turned and caught her keenly anxious eyes she started. "You here, Catherine?" said she. Then, knowing not how much her sister knew already, she tried to cover her confusion like a child denying its raid on the jam pots while its lips and fingers are still sticky with the stolen sweet.

"What think you of my list, sweetheart?" cried she merrily. "A pair of the silk stockings and two of the breastknots and a mask and a flowered apron shall you have." Then out of the room she whisked abruptly, laughing from excess of nervous confusion and not being able to keep up the farce longer.

Then Catherine turned to me. "She has undone herself, for Madam Cavendish will see those goods when the Golden Horn comes in or ferret the mystery to its farthest hole of hiding," said she. Then she wrung her hands and cried out sharply, "Harry Wingfield, what is to be done?"

"Madam Cavendish would surely never betray her own flesh and blood," said I, though doubtfully, when I reflected upon her hardness to Catherine herself, for Madam Judith Cavendish was not one for whom love could change the color of the clear light of justice, and she would see forever her own as they were.

"There is to her no such word as betray except in the service of the king," said Catherine. Then she added in a whisper, "Know you the story of her youngest son, my uncle, Ralph Cavendish, who went over to Cromwell?"

I nodded. I knew it well and had heard it from a lad how Ralph Cavendish's own mother had turned him from the door one night with the king's troops in the neighborhood, though it was afterward argued that she did not know of that, and he had been taken before morning and afterward executed, and she had never said a word nor shed a tear that any one saw.

"When the Golden Horn comes in she will demand to see the goods," Catherine repeated.

"Then—the Golden Horn must not come in," said I.

Catherine looked at me with that flash of ready wit in her eyes which was like to the flash of fire from gunpowder meeting tinder. Then she cried out: "Quick, then, quick, I pray thee, Harry Wingfield, to the wharf! For if ever I saw sail I saw that, and the tide will have turned 'm. Quick, quick!"

She waited not for any headgear, but forth into the May sunlight she rushed, and I with her, and shouted at the top of my lungs to the slaves for my horse, then went myself, having no mind to wait, and hustled the poor beast from his feed bin and was on his back and at a hard gallop to the wharf, with Mistress Catherine following as fast as she was able. Now and then when I turned I saw her slim green shape advancing, looking for all the world to my fancy like some nymph who had been changed into a river reed and had gotten life again.

When I reached the wharf, with my horse all afoam, there was indeed the Golden Horn down the river, coming in. The tide and wind had been against her or she would have reached shore ere now. Then along the bank I urged my horse, and in some parts, where there was no footing and the tangle of woods too close, into the stream we plunged and swam, then up bank again, and so on with a mighty splatter of mire and water and rain of green leaves and blossoms from the low hang of branches through which we tore way, till we came abreast of the Golden Horn. Then I hallooed, first making sure that there was no one lurking near to overhear, and waved my handkerchief, keeping my horse standing to his fetlocks in the current, until over the water came an answering halloo from the Golden Horn and I could plainly see Captain Calvin Tabor on the quarter deck. The ship was not far distant and I could have swam to her, and would have, though the tide was strong, had there been no other way.

"Halloo," shouted Captain Tabor, and two more men came running to the side, then more still, till it was overhung by a whole row of red English faces.

"Halloo!" shouted I.

"What d'ye lack? What's afoot? Halloo!"

"Send a boat!" I shouted back. "News, news! Keep where ye be. Do not land. Send a boat!"

"Is it the convict tutor, Wingfield?" shouted the captain.

I called back yes and repeated my demand that he send a boat.

Then I saw a great running hither and thither, and presently a boat

Harry hallooing to the Golden Horn

touched the water from the side of the Golden Horn with a curious lapping dip, and I was off my horse and tied him fast to a tree on the bank with loose rein that he might crop his fill of the sweet spring herbage, and when the boat touched bank was in her and speedily aboard ship.

Captain Tabor was leaning over the bulwarks, and his ruddy face was pale and his look of devil-may-care gayety somewhat subdued.

When I gained the deck forward he came and grasped me by the arm and led me into his own cabin, having first shouted forth to his mate an order to drop anchor and keep the ship in midstream.

"Now, in the name of all the fiends, what is afoot?" he cried out, though with a cautious cock of his eyes toward the deck, for English sailors are not black slaves when it comes to discussing matters of weight.

"There is a plot afoot against his majesty King Charles, and you but yesterday, that being also a day on which it is unlawful to unload a ship, discharged a portion of your cargo toward its furtherance and abetting," said I.

"When I trust a woman's tongue again may I swing from my own yardarms!" he cried out. "What brought that fair faced devil into it, anyway? Be there not men enough in this colony?"

"An you keep not a civil tongue in your head when you speak of Mistress Mary Cavendish you will find of a surety that there be one man in this colony, sir," said I.

He laughed in that mocking fashion of his, which incensed me still further. Then he spoke civilly enough and said that he meant no disrespect to one of the fairest ladies whom he had ever had the good fortune to see, but that it was so well known as to be no more slight in mentioning than the paint and powder wherewith a woman enhance her beauty that a woman's tongue could not be trusted like a man's, and that it were a pity that money, which were much better spent by her for pretty follies, should be put to such grim uses, and where were the gallants of Virginia that they suffered it, but did not rather empty their own purses?

I explained, being somewhat mollified and also somewhat of his way of thinking, that men there were, but there was little gold since the navigation act. And I informed Captain Tabor how Mistress Mary Cavendish, having an estate not so heavily charged with expenses as some, and being her own mistress with regard to the disposal of its revenues, had the means which the men lacked.

"But what was the news which brought you thither, sir?" demanded Captain Tabor.

"You know of the plot"— I begun, but he broke in upon me fiercely.

"May the fiends take me, but what know I of a plot?" he cried.

"Can I not bring over gowns and kerchiefs and silken ribbons for a pretty maid without a plot? How knew you that? There is the woman's tongue again. But can I not bring over goods even of such sort? Might I not with good reason suppose them to be for the defense of the cause of his most gracious majesty, King Charles, against the savages or any malcontents in his colonies? What plot, sirrah?"

A DEMOCRATIC HERITAGE.

[From the Honesdale (Pa.) Citizen.]

Mayor McClellan of New York city in his speech at the Democratic harmony banquet early in the year said:

"The people will trust the Democracy today if it but proves that it has kept unsullied the heritage of the fathers."

There is no difficulty in proving that on various important points this heritage has been faithfully kept.

When the Democratic party retired from power in 1841, after having controlled the government for twelve years under the administrations of Jackson and Van Buren, it left the country a heritage of industrial prostration, due to the practical free trade arising from the sliding scale reductions of the tariff of 1833 and of financial wreck, coupled with wildcat banking, resulting from the panic of 1837.

Under the Whig tariff of 1842 industry revived, but the Democracy, regaining power in 1844, restored the heritage of free trade by the Walker tariff of 1846. Disaster followed, and in 1848 the party was again shorn of power.

In 1852 and again in 1856 the Democratic party was successful. Following the latter victory its heritage of free trade was enlarged by the tariff act of 1857, with its horizontal reductions of 20 per cent. Nine months later the result of this was set forth by the Democratic secretary of the treasury and president. Said Secretary Cobb in his first annual report Dec. 8, 1857:

"Simultaneously with this act going into operation the country is subjected to a disastrous revulsion."

Said President Buchanan in his first annual message to congress Dec. 8, 1857:

"Our country, in its monetary interests, is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. We find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want."

Thus was the heritage of distress created by the Democracy in 1837 restored twenty years later. In our large cities only the charity soup kitchen stood between the poor man and starvation.

Debt was soon added to distress, and the Democratic heritage of the Mexican war debt, then standing at more than $25,000,000, was rapidly enlarged. Loan followed loan until the public debt rose from $25,165,154.51 to $90,580,873.72. In the meantime the industrial and financial interests of the country continued and suffered from the depression that began in 1857.

In 1893 the Democracy again acquired control of the government, and once more the Democratic heritage of distress and debt was restored to the people. The heritage of distress opened with the wreck of financial interests throughout the country, followed, under the sugar trust tariff, by general industrial prostration. Again the charity soup kitchen had its innings among the workingmen of our cities. At the same time the heritage of debt underwent an expansion far beyond that under Buchanan's administration. Loan again followed loan until $262,315,400 was added to the public debt. This was the heritage left to the country when the last Democratic president retired from office in 1897.

So much, at least, of the heritage of the Democratic fathers has been faithfully kept, and today the people can trust the Democracy, if it regains power, to restore the heritage of financial collapse, industrial prostration, the charity soup kitchen, failing revenues and increase of the public debt for current expenses in time of peace, which have been conspicuous products of Democratic rule.

Public Meeting of Locomotive Firemen Goes Wild With Enthusiasm For the President.

Brotherhood Resents the Canard That the Executive Is Not a True Friend.

[From the Buffalo Express, Sept. 13.]

The big public meeting held last night in Convention hall by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen of America, now in convention in this city, wound up in a most remarkable demonstration for President Roosevelt. It was the big feature of the monster meeting not on the programme, and by reason of the accident of it and its consequent spontaneity it proved beyond the faintest shadow of a doubt that at least one powerful organization that has been an honor and credit to American labor for more than a quarter of a century is heart and soul for Roosevelt.

The Roosevelt demonstration was most sensational. Convention hall was packed from the stage to the entrance. Fully 5,000 men and women were there, the attendance taxing the seating capacity to such an extent that many extra benches had to be placed close up to the stage.

Edward A. Manly, secretary of the interstate commerce commission, in the course of his speech had called attention to the fact that a New York newspaper had criticised the president because he had accepted an honorary membership in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen.

"Let me say," said Grand Master Hannahan, "that if the president of the United States or any other of its citizens does nothing worse than accept membership in this organization he will neither merit the ill will nor deserve the censure of any of his fellowmen. [Cheers.]

"If the rest of the public, and particularly those who are intrusted with the direction of our government and the management of the nation's greatest enterprises, would do as the president and meet us upon a common level, there would be fewer strikes and less strife and more of peace and good will in the industrial world."

"What has the president done for you?" shouted an intoxicated man who stood near the stage door on the right.

"What has the president done?" repeated Grand Master Hannahan. "The president has proved to the organized workingmen of this country that he has an interest in their welfare by accepting an honorary membership in an organization of men whose faces are begrimed by smoke and dust and who daily and hourly face the gravest dangers."

The monster audience burst into deafening cheers. The tumult rolled from wall to wall and back again. Men stood up on the benches, wildly waving their hats and cheering for the president. The demonstration was spontaneous and was general all over the hall. Finally it died down and some one in the audience shouted:

"Hurrah for Theodore Roosevelt."

And again the crowd burst into cheers, and when the second demonstration died out the intoxicated man was nowhere to be seen.

During the demonstration the men on the stage sat silent and made no effort either to check or urge on the remarkable ovation which the president had received, and when it was over Grand Master Hannahan went on with his speech without reference to the subject.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen has a membership of 55,000 men, nearly all of whom live in the United States. It has been said before that the railroad men of the country thoroughly believed in and supported Roosevelt, and if any proof of that assertion was needed it was amply furnished last night.

Open Letter to Prohibitionists and Temperance Democrats.

[By Rev. Dr. J. F. Seaman of New York.]

Problem: My Respected Prohibition Brother—Your party having been at work in this state over thirty years, "voting as you pray," not electing a man to office, how long will it take you to carry the state? Your ex-Chairman Hopkins boasts having helped the Democrats defeat one of the greatest statesmen then on earth (Senator Blaine, 1884). Ringleaders and Democrat-Prohibitionists may count that good work, but certainly former sensible Republicans do not estimate such co-labor with Democrats as being prayerful voting. That was just shyster politics. Wasn't it?

There are lots of noble men in your association, too fine to be imposed upon, but some of your manipulators descend to the rottenest kind of party tricks and will do so this year "if there's anything in it." I have caught them at it.

Former Republicans and other true citizens, permit us to kindly suggest that you work and vote this year with an administration which towers high among the best past administrations in this country.

How Is This For a Record?

[From the Concord Monitor.]

By 1892 the Republican party had reduced the interest on the public debt to $23,000,000 a year. The Democratic party under Cleveland increased it in time of peace to $38,000,000. The Republican party in spite of the Spanish war has reduced it since to $28,000,000.

The Price of A Threat

By ALEC BRUCE

Copyright, 1904, by Alec Bruce

"Marie! You are in trouble, ma'amselle? Your face, it is so white!" whispered Pierrot, stepping noiselessly toward her on the little sawdust circle before the performers' entrance.

"Oui, oui! I—I—am in trouble—grave trouble, Pierrot," she answered brokenly.

"Ah, ma'amselle, and you know not what to do. That is it?" he questioned quickly and inviting confidence with his earnest, searching little eyes. "But, Marie, ma'amselle," he muttered, stepping closer to her, so close that she felt the warmth of his breath on her cheek, "maybe—maybe Pierrot might know—if—if you would tell him, hey?"

"Ah, Pierrot, non!" she faltered, covering her face with her hands. "You—you could not, non, you—you"— No other words would come. Her lips quivered. Her eyes filled.

"Marie, Marie," he urged, "maybe I—I—ah, you think not, hey?" And his broad breast swelled with a smothered love, a love that had known no utterance, for he was "Pierrot, the fool," a groom! And she? She was "Ma'amselle Mirabeau, premier equestrienne," in Barkalow's big circus ring.

Suddenly ting-ting, ting-ting-ting!

"Ma'amselle, ma'amselle," whispered warningly, "the first bell! You hear? Thirty minutes and you go on. Just thirty, Marie!"

But still she did not answer.

"Ah, I am only Pierrot, Pierrot, the fool," he murmured, "and you—you will not tell a fool, ma'amselle. No, no. Why should you?"

"Pierrot!" From her tear dimmed eyes she dropped two small, pink starfish hands and faced him. "Pierrot 'a fool?' You said a fool!" she quavered. "Ah, to ma'amselle you must not say so once again. I know you. A fool? Non, non! You say I will not tell you, I will not trust you, mon ami. Leesten, leesten! That Hercules, the dead weight lifter, bah!" and she shuddered violently. "Again, today, he say, 'Ma'amselle, you will marry me, oui?' Already six times he haf said so. Oh, Lala, how persistent! Ah, Pierrot, you do not know. And for answer I say: 'M'sieur, no—no. No—no—no!' Six times I say so, and of heem I think no more. But today, today, it is different. I am afraid. He look so black, so terrible when he say: 'Ma'amselle, you will marry me. No? Ah, no more trifling, I say, none at all. Gif me your answer. You haf till 7 o'clock tonight; that is all!' And Pierrot, number eight on the programme, oui, number eight, tonight's! Look at it, and—and you will understand!"

"Number eight, ma'amselle, number eight on the programme, tonight's? I have one somewhere," he mumbled, searching doubtfully among the frilled yards of red, white and blue at his pockets. "Ah!" At last with trembling fingers he unfolded the crushed crimson sheet. "Hercules, Hercules, Hercules! The dead weight lifter! Tonight, tonight, tonight!" it read. "Head downward from a swinging trapeze twenty feet above the circus ring this worldwide champion will dangle in his teeth 100 pounds of solid steel. Is that all? No! We tell you no! But see for yourselves the most marvelous sight ever seen. From a ring beneath the suspended weight he will hold fast the added burden of our premier equestrienne, and backward and forward in midair she will swing and hang until at length she drops, dancing and pirouetting on her galloping steed below."

"Mon Dieu, mon Dieu!" muttered Pierrot when he had read the bill. "I understand, I understand, ma'amselle. Tonight you must answer 'Oui,' or he will drop the dead weight from his teeth when you hang below!"

"Pierrot, Pierrot," she cried, "I cannot, I will not perform tonight! See—see—I tremble; I could not stand; I could not ride Comanche Bill. I must beg off. I am sick. I—I will tell the manager!"

"Ma'amselle! No, no, ma'amselle; one moment, one moment!" cautioned Pierrot, detaining her and pressing his hand against the crimson diamond on his forehead.

"But, Pierrot, Pierrot," she insisted, "I must, I must, I"—

"Non, non, ma'amselle, you must not!" he whispered. "I have it; Pierrot has it!" And again he glanced intently at the programme. "Bien, bien, I have it! In number seven you ride Comanche Bill. Ride him, ma'amselle. Pirouette! Jump! Jump through the drum. I hold it, ma'amselle. Look, number seven, 'Mirabeau on Comanche.' Bah, beg off? Non, non; trust Pierrot. Have no fear. You will not swing from Hercules' weight!"

"But, Pierrot, how? How? You must tell me!"

Ting-ting, tin-ting-ting!

"Second bell, ma'amselle," he interrupted, "second bell!" and, grasping the curtains, he peeped through the faded fringe. "Ah, the tiers; they are black with people—black, ma'amselle! There is no time, no time to tell. Trust Pierrot, trust, trust!" And in a moment he was gone.

* * * * * * *

Fifteen minutes later, with an angry scowl, Hercules, the dead weight lifter, raised the flap of the manager's tent and entered. "Sir," he announced, "my weight—m-my weight! It is stolen. Some prowlers, curse them! T-the last moment too!"

"Stolen, stolen!" repeated the manager in his highest key. "By heavens, man, and we have 3,000 unbelievers in that tent all waiting to see your act. We've posted 1,000 bills; we've advertised it for a month. We've—we've—Hercules, what is to be done?"

"Well, sir," growled the champion darkly, "it ain't my fault. No, sir! But there's one way out of it; one way, I think."

"What way?" snapped the manager.

"It's—it's the papier mache weight, sir; light as a feather. I—I used to practice with it," stammered Hercules. "But they—they wouldn't know it from the real thing, sir; not on your life. Git two of the grooms, Dan'l and Pete, sir; I know 'em well enough. They'll perspire an' purtend a bit when they bring it on. Savez the idee, hey? I reckon you do, sir—ha, ha!"

"Ha, ha! Ha, ha, ha!" laughed the manager heartily. "Splendid, Hercules, splendid. I'll write to Barkalow. You get a bonus for this—ha, ha! And we can stave off challenges for one night, eh? Tomorrow we'll invite inspection. Very good, sir, v-very good, indeed!"

And so it was arranged.

Came 8 o'clock dinging and dying amid railway siding sounds, and six items, like snow in a tropical sun, had melted from Barkalow's big wonder list. Comanche Bill, pink nosed and piebald, with Mirabeau, was prancing around the mammoth ring. Whoop, whoop, whoop, whooplah! Crack! Through ribbon ring after ribbon ring the ma'amselle jumped, landing always fair and dancing on her plush platform saddle. Suddenly whoop, whoop, swish! A tissue drum went into shreds, and Pierrot stepped down from his pedestal and looked proudly at the lady. "Hurrah, hurrah!" The audience cheered and clapped their hands. "Well done, well done!"

But now it was number eight on the programme, and all eyes were focused on the performers' entrance.

"Hercules, Hercules!" The excited whisper gathered force and chased along and up and down the tiers. Jauntily the manager advanced and made a brief announcement. Two blue coated, quick action grooms spread out a brilliant carpet star, and two others, red faced and with straining arms and shoulders doubled over, brought on the plaything of the giant.

"Ha!" In a moment he was there before them, smiling and bowing, a spangled vision in scarlet and gold, a miracle of physical strength and bigness. He stretched out his long right arm, his left, too, and the muscles of them rose up like plaited whipcords. Then he breathed, and every man breathed with him. He broke a poker across his thigh, and the cheers rang wild and deafening. He looked at the weight, at the trapeze above, at ma'amselle with critical eye, and again the audience cheered. If before they had doubted the claims in number eight, it was evident now that they believed.

Mirabeau? White as chalk beneath her mask, she held her breath and glared from her steed at Pierrot. And Pierrot? Eyes bulging outward, he transfixed the little trapdoor in the belting below the orchestra stand.

Suddenly the giant stepped before the weight and faced the high priced seats. Above his head he raised his hands. "Once, twice, thrice!" On the third call he would swing and grasp and juggle with the dead weight as with a toy.

Click! Click!

Pierrot, and only Pierrot, heard it. The violins and the flutes were murdering sound, and the clown's heart thumped his chest like a drumstick beating the time.

Click! Click!

Up went the trapdoor, and a boy, a very little boy, hatless, but with a sun crisped thatch of curly hair, struggled through the ring. For a moment he hesitated, blinking his big blue eyes in the glare of light; then quick as a flash he was over on the big carpet star.

"Pierrot, Pierrot," breathed ma'amselle, squeezing the cold fingers resting on her saddle.

"Once, twice—once, twice—whooplah!" shouted Hercules, bending swiftly and throwing his mighty arms between his legs.

But the boy was first. In his tiny hand he grasped the weight and, hoisting it to his slender shoulder, sped with it like a startled hare across the ring and out through the quivering curtain.

"Ah, ha! Ha, ha, ha!" It was one brief trickle of laughter accentuating the intense silence that followed, for in the thrill of a flute it all happened, and no one had attempted to stop him.

Rat-tat-tat!

"Now, all together!" commanded the leader of the orchestra, coming gallantly to the rescue, and a bunch of mandolins and violins ripped the air. But music had no charms for the outraged audience, and at last the storm broke. Loud, long and deep voiced it raged—ribald laughter, shrill jeers, dark threats and hisses like the angry exhaust of steam.

"Gentlemen, gentlemen!"

In vain did the manager attempt to stem the avalanche, but like a sick man's whisper against a battery cannonade his explanations and apologies melted on soundless lips.

"Gentlemen, gentlemen, one minute, and I will explain, I"—

"Ye's can't do it! Ye's can't do it!" piped a thin, querulous voice.

"Tricksters! Swindlers! Money back! Money back! Boo for Barkalow!" chorused the galleries.

"Gentlemen, gentlemen, I must tell you—I must tell you"—

"Tell nuthin', nuthin' at all!" volleyed the leaders. "Square the deal at number eight an' screw out yer lights!"

"Gentlemen, order, order!"

"Hiss, hiss, hiss-s-s-s! Square the deal at number eight!"

"Gentlemen, gentlemen"—

"Hiss, hiss, hiss-s-s"—

And in the ticket office a few minutes later, though he knew it not, the manager was paying back the fabulous price of a threat.

A Merchant Marine Means Prosperity to America

By United States Senator
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS

THE importance of upbuilding the American merchant marine our statesmen have been foremost in keeping before the country. We have increased our foreign commerce in recent years to a high degree. Last year it reached $2,450,000,000. IT HAS NOT YET ARRIVED AT ITS MAXIMUM, and it is destined to increase far beyond its present proportions.

This commerce will continue to grow, and we shall gain a still larger share of trade with European and oriental countries. While we are gratified with the growth of our foreign trade and with the prospect of its continued increase, we regret we are SO DEPENDENT UPON FOREIGN SHIPOWNERS FOR SHIPPING FACILITIES. We furnish the trade, and foreign capital and labor produce the ships with which to carry it. Only about 9 per cent of our commerce with other countries is carried in our own vessels and under the protection of our own flag. Nearly 91 per cent is carried in foreign bottoms, and we pay therefor upward of $150,000,000 a year. THIS IS CERTAINLY NOT GOOD BUSINESS JUDGMENT. There is something wrong about it. There is no good reason why the United States should be so entirely dependent upon foreign vessels for carrying its commerce. There is no good reason why we should not have a merchant marine sufficient to carry our fair share of the trade between the United States and all ports of the world. If we are to increase our foreign commerce we shall find it to our national interest to CARRY IT MORE LARGELY IN VESSELS BEARING AMERICAN REGISTER.

A committee appointed at the suggestion of President Roosevelt to investigate this subject consists of ten able senators and representatives. They have been engaged since the adjournment of congress in exhaustive hearings upon the entire subject. It is hoped that they may be able to place before the next congress and the country such facts and conclusions as will materially aid us in reaching a sound and patriotic conclusion on this great subject.

IF WE CAN BUILD UP A MERCHANT MARINE WE WILL INCREASE OPPORTUNITIES FOR LABOR, STIMULATION TO ENTERPRISE AND PROSPERITY TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The Part Suggestion Plays In Lynchings

By Rev. DEAN RICHMOND BABBITT of Brooklyn

IS it not about time that we should know WHAT THESE LYNCHING MOBS REALLY ARE? How many people are aware of their essential character? Modern psychology has demonstrated that the human mind may be divided into the conscious, the subconscious and the unconscious. The last is THE REGION OF INSTINCT, the place of primitive, racial, hereditary powers, of the first elements, so to say, of our being, which, by strange and startling impulses, by unclassified instincts and unformulated desires, profoundly influences at times our conscious state.

Now, THE MOB IS FIRST A CROWD, sometimes an accidental crowd, sometimes a sudden crowd, as a riot, especially in summer time, but always with the oneness of feeling and yet with a waywardness or caprice. A word is spoken by some leader, it is repeated, rerepeated, taken up, thrown back, held aloft, emphasized, cheered, all the time GATHERING INTENSITY BY CONTACT OF MIND WITH MIND. This is the first stage of the mob. The thought is becoming a collective thought. The mob is in process of making. It may now be halted by the firmness of the authorities, may be turned aside by a real display of military force or often even by the daring courage of a sheriff or a deputy or even by the gritty example and unflinching resolution of a private citizen.

At the next stage the mob realizes itself, and college professors, clergymen, persons of sedate or scientific pursuits, even delicate and tender hearted women, with ordered ways of thinking, civilized, humane, yet when welded at this stage into the mob mind, lose all for which they a few moments before had stood, AND DO ACTS OF WHICH THEY DEEMED THEMSELVES INCAPABLE BEFORE THEIR COMMISSION UNDER THE MOB IMPULSE.

ALL THIS CONDITION OF MOBBISHNESS IS MADE THROUGH THE POWER OF ONE OF THE GREATEST OF OUR HUMAN FACULTIES—VIZ, SUGGESTION.

The Days of Wildcat Schemes Have Passed

By E. H. HARRIMAN, Railroad Magnate

IT is my opinion that the days of wildcat schemes are over and that the fundamental conditions throughout the country are such that A CONTINUATION OF PROSPERITY IS AGAIN ASSURED. I was of this opinion before my return to this country, where I find that sentiment has changed and is again cheerful. Conditions which in other years caused panic and national distress DO NOT NOW EXIST. In all localities—in Nebraska and Kansas, in the east and the far west—the local moneyed interests are conservative. It is possible to investigate with accuracy any financial or industrial question. The small money centers as well as the large ones ARE WELL SUPPLIED WITH FUNDS, and this fact insures careful investment and minimizes risk.

WHEN A PERIOD OF CONTRACTION COMES, AS IT DID LAST YEAR, THIS CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY ACTS AS A CUSHION AND MAKES THE REBOUND TO PROSPERITY EASIER THAN IT HAD EVER BEEN BEFORE.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

Keith's vaudeville program for the week of Oct. 3 will be headed by Milton and Dolly Nobles, in a new comedy sketch. The novelty of the bill will be a new idea in the way of a song sheet, in which a colored chorus will be employed that is claimed to be the best yet heard in an act of this kind. The soloist will be Martha Pulley, one of the liveliest "real coon" shouters in the country. The season's most talked about specialty on the New York roof Gardens? "Pewitt," or the Mysterious Face," will be seen for the first time in Boston. At least a dozen others notable entertainers are to appear, and the bill will prove in every way as strong as those that have beeen attracting attention the past few months. Annie Irish, in "An Actress's Christmas Eve" is the underlined feature for the week of Oct. 10.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The enterprise of the Castle Square Theatre management is again shown in the announcement of R. C. Carton's brilliant comedy "A Clean Slate" as next week's attraction at this playhouse. This play had its first production, as all of its author's pieces do, at the Criterion Theatre, London, where Mr. Carton's wife, Miss Compton, and Brandon Thomas created its leading characters. It has not had a Boston production and there is no need to tell the public here of the treat that is in store in the opportunity to hear Mr. Carton's bright dialogue with its smart epigrams and clever puns. The story deals with the complications arising from the confusing matrimonial relations of the two couples prominent in the action. The usual free distribution of choice chocolate bonbons will be made at the Monday matinee. A revival of "Quo Vadis" is announced for Monday, Oct. 10.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

The first performance of Wright Lorimer as David in "The Shepherd King" at the Majestic Theatre, Boston, on Monday evening, Oct. 3d, promises to be a most noteworthy and brilliant theatrical event. The production of this wonderful Biblical play is arousing interest throughout the country, as the early life of David affords such strong dramatic possibilities that orientialists and students of the Bible, as well as lovers of the romatic drama, purely as such, are wondering how it is possible to stage some of the stirring scenes incident to David's career up to the time he became King of Israel. Mr. Lorimer will be supported by his own company of over two hundred people. A large chorus, composed mostly of students of Boston Conservatory of Music, has been specially engaged to render the incidental music. Seats are on sale three weeks in advance, and matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturdays.

PARK THEATRE.

Charles Frohman's production of Augustus Thomas' latest play "The Other Girl" which commenced a limited engagement Monday evening at the Park Theatre, has made one of the greatest laughing successes ever seen in Boston. This was no more than to be expected, as the play kept New York theatregoers in a roar the entire season last year, and proved such a big success that Chas. Frohman continued its run at his three leading theatres there, the Criterion, Empire and Lyceum. The comedy has proven to be the best play Augustus Thomas has ever written and his list of successes is already large, for theatregoers remember with much delight his "Alabama," "Arizona," and "On the Quiet." "The Other Girl" contains all the elements of wit that made Mr. Thomas' other plays so successful in Boston.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger will present next Monday, Oct. 3, for a two weeks' engagement at the Colonial theatre, Boston, their musical success "A Little of Everything," which was seen at the New Amsterdam Aerial theatre, New York, during the past summer and was then moved to the Broadway theatre in order to finish its New York engagemeat. The musical skit, by John J. McNally, was constructed for laughing purposes only, and it fulfils its mission. Miss Fay Templeton and Peter F. Bailey are at the head of the organization. The first part is devoted to a burlesque on "Camile," the caricature of the original "Florodora" sextet and a pot-pourri of musical comedy acts. The evolution of ragtime is another special feature of this act. The Offenbach Review, however, which was presented all of last season in the Moulin Rouge, Paris, and consists of eight of Offenbach's most popular operas, is by far the most pretentious part of the evening's entertainment. The selections of the different operas are presented in a spirit of burlesque. Fay Templeton and Peter F. Dailey have made notable hits as "Rose" and "General Bloom" in this review, which is the musical sensation of the present season. Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger have made an elaborate production for "A Little of Everything" the costumes are marvels of color effects, and minor details are cleverly handled and the production as a whole is equal to all demands. The regular Colonial theatre prices will prevail.

TREMONT THEATRE.

It will be with genuine regret that playgoers learn that next week will bring about the close of the Boston engagement of the popular Ade-Luders opera, "The Sho-Gun." Judging from the size of audiences that have been flocking to the Tremont during the past five weeks, this Henry W. Savage attraction could run on there indefinitely were it possible to change bookings made early in the season. This cannot be done, however, and it has been definitely decided that the run must end on Saturday evening, October 8th. A more emphatic hit than "The Sho-Gun" has not been known in Boston theatricals in many seasons, and time only seems to emphasize the great popularity of this artistic production. It has been drawing capacity audiences since the opening night, and for the closing performances the theatre is sure to be packed to the limit. Beginning next Monday there will be but eight more chances to see "The Sho-Gun." The piece goes directly from here to New York.

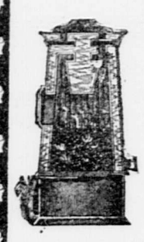

Parsifal at Tremont Theatre.

The arrival of Alois Pennarini in New York completes the company engaged by Henry W. Savage for his production of "Parsifal" in English. Mr. Pennarini was detained at Hamburg by his engagement at the Stadt theatre, where he has been the principal tenor for the past five years. He was born in Vienna in 1870. His first appearance was made at the Stadt theatre in Pressburg, Hungary, in the role of Turiddu in Cavalleria Rusticanna. After a short engagement at Elberfeld, he was engaged for a season of Italian opera in Vienna, where he had such artists as Bellincioni, Prevost and and Savaile as associates. His repertoire includes all the Wagnerian roles, as well as Otello, Don Jose in Carmen, the title roles in Der Evangeliman and Massenet's Le Jongleur de Notre Dame. Mr. Pennarini has been heard with great success in Berlin and Vienna, and Maurice Grau and Heinrich Conried both offered him engagements at the Metropolitan Opera house in New York. It was only by securing a long leave of absence that the young tenor was able to accept Mr. Savage's offer to appear in "Parsifal."

BARBAROUS ENGINES.

Man Traps and Spring Guns Once In Use In England.

We were reminded the other day of some of the incidents of country life of former years by the offering for sale at a London auction mart of a couple of man traps. These engines were once upon a time part of the chattels of well nigh every considerable landowner and every energetic gamekeeper. Another implement was the spring gun, which turned on a swivel and discharged itself as soon as one of the connecting wires was stumbled against, the muzzle of the gun turning in the direction of the trespasser as indicated by the wire, the guilty party generally receiving a coating of pitch if of nothing worse. The man traps sold the other day were probably the first some of the attendants at the sale ever saw and were of the old formidable pattern—that is to say, they resembled a glorified gin. They measured seventy-four inches long and were just about three feet in height, so that they would catch a poacher well above the knee, and once nipped there he would remain till his cries or the ordinary round of the keepers led at once to his release and capture. The spring gun gave its alarm, and watchers were speedily in attendance. There was something very barbarous about the use of these engines, which were not so very long ago quite common. In fact, people need not be very old to have seen boards bearing the legend, "Beware of man traps and spring guns."—London Field.

Her Opinion of Boys.

A little girl wrote the following essay on boys: "Boys are men that have not got as big as their papas, and girls are women that will be ladies by and by. When God looked at Adam he said to himself, 'Well, I think I can do better if I try again,' and he made Eve. Boys are a trouble. They wear out everything but soap. If I had my way the world would be girls and the rest dolls. My papa is so nice that I think he must have been a little girl when he was a little boy. Man was made, and on the seventh day he rested. Woman was then made, and he has never rested since."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Other Nominations of Republicans Were by Acclamation.

The Norfolk County convention held in Union hall, Boston, this morning nominated Sumner H. Foster of Brookline as county commissioner in place of Thomas Blanchard of Stoughton, the chairman of the board who was a candidate for renomination.

Before the convention commenced to ballot, Associate Commissioner Everett of Canton withdrew from the contest.

The ballot for County Commissioner was as follows:

Whole number of votes	97
Necessary for choice	49
Sumner H. Foster had	56
Thomas Blanchard had	39
Scattering,	2

Other nominations made were:

Sheriff,—Samuel H. Capen of Dedham.

Associate Commissioners,—Lewis R. Whitaker of Franklin and John Everett of Canton.

A committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Foster and present him to the convention.

Mr. Foster, is a young lawyer, a graduate of Harvard, and has a wide acquaintance. While he has never held public office, he has taken an active part in Brookline politics since he attained his majority.

He was born in Brookline and is enthusias in athletics. He has served on many public committees in Brookline.

Thomas Blanchard has been a member of the board of Norfolk County Commissioners for ten years, succeeding the late John Q. A. Lothrop of Cohasset. His first associates in 1895 were Watts H. Bowker of Brookline and Melville P. Morrell of Hyde Park, both of whom have also retired.

Convention Week.

Republican conventions will be held in Boston this week as follows:

Monday at 10 A. M., Norfolk County.

Tuesday at 8 P. M., First Norfolk Senatorial.

Wednesday at 2 P. M., Second Norfolk Senatorial.

Thursday at 2 P. M., Second Councillor.

Friday at 2 P. M., District Attorney for Norfolk and Plymouth districts.

Battleship Missouri.

The battleship Missouri, Capt. Cowles, arrived Sunday afternoon from Tompkinsville, having been ordered to Boston says the Globe, to undergo repairs. It is the first visit of the warship to this port since she was placed in commission about eight months ago. She entered the upper harbor at 2 P. M. and stopped for some time off the old Cunard dock before proceeding to the navy yard. No ceremony attended the coming of the battleship as salutes are not fired on Sunday.

To Make a Recount.

The Registrars of Voters met Saturday evening and examined the petition of Edward J. Sandberg for a recount of the Republican votes cast for Representatives at the caucuses in Wards One, Two, Three and Five. They selected Tuesday evening as the time for the recount.

Safe Deposit Boxes.

It will be pleasing to many of our citizens to learn that they can place their valuables in a box at the National Granite Bank of Quincy, where they will be perfectly safe, for five dollars per year. It will save the danger of carrying them to the city, or the trouble of going there for them; and as privately.

—The Dedham High foot ball team defeated Perkins Academy on Saturday 12 to 0.

QUINCYS WIN.

Obtained Good Lead in First Half But Almost Lost.

The Quincy Football team played their fourth game, in the Merrimack Valley League series, at Andover on Saturday.

The Quincys started in to rush matters from the first and after seven minutes of play, they had a goal to their credit, and by hard playing soon added two more. At half-time the score stood 3 to 1 in Quincy's favor.

When play was resumed for the second half, it became evident that the Quincy players had lost considerable of the snap which they had shown during the early part of the game and with about twenty minutes to play, the score was Andover 4, Quincy 3, but Quincy scored shortly after, and when within three minutes of the finish, Quincy scored again which left it 5 to 4 in favor of Quincy.

The Quincys play the Merrimack team this week Saturday at Ward Three playground, when a very interesting game is expected. The game will commence at 3.30 P. M.

Unable to Score.

The Thayer Academy foot ball team was unable to score Saturday in its match at Braintree with Roxbury Latin. The visitors made two touchdowns from each of which goals were kicked. Wendall, the full back of Roxbury Latin was the star player of the day, making three long runs, one for 80 yds.

CHOICE FLOWERS.

At funeral of John N. Kelley---Societies in Attendance.

The funeral of John N. Kelley was held from his late residence, Center street, Sunday afternoon and was largely attended by relatives, friends and neighbors. Members of Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F., and Maple lodge, K. and L. of H., were present in a body.

The services were conducted by the Rev. W. A. Brady of the Calvary Baptist church, Franklin street. After which Maple lodge rendered their service, assisted by the lodge quartette, which was very impressive.

The interment was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery and at the grave the Odd Fellows performed the last sad rites for their departed brother, who is only one more gone to join the lodge above just a little while ahead of us, and who will be waiting for us when our time comes to join those gone before.

The floral tributes were profuse and beautiful, among which were:

Pillow, with the word "Husband."

Spray of roses, Mr. and Mrs. G. Monk.

Pinks, Lewis Smith.

Triangle, Maple Lodge, K. and L. of H.

Pillow, Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F.

Mound, members of G. L. Gill Rebekah lodge.

Flat bouquet, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Sylvester.

CHURCH SUNDAY.

Sunday School of First Unitarian Church Reviews History.

Yesterday was observed as "Church Sunday" by the scholars of the First Church Sunday school. A hundred of them attended the regular church service at half-past ten, when Rev. E. C. Butler preached a sermon appropriate to the young but equally appreciated by his adult congregation.

At the session of the Sunday school at 12 o'clock, the regular routine exercises were held for fifteen minutes, followed by papers and talks on the history of the church.

Assistant Superintendent Schumacher gave a brief talk on the early history of the church, followed by a list of ministers of the church by one of the boys of his class. Superintendent Johnson read a letter from Rev. D. M. Wilson a former pastor. Miss Harriet Johnson gave a little talk on Unitarianism. Mr. Butler made a few remarks. Mr. Herbert Arnold read of the observance of the 250th anniversary of the church. The children participated in the exercises with appropriate text, verses, etc.

The idea of the exercises were to give the children a clearer idea of what the Unitarian church, and particularly the old First church, stands for; the work it has done and is doing; and the work it can do in the future to uplift and benefit mankind.

Autumn flowers and palms brightened up the chapel and there was a large attendance of parents and friends.

A Treat Coming.

The Copley Square Concert Company which opens the Bethany Brotherhood $1 course on Wednesday evening comes well recommended. The following is from the Melrose Journal:

"The entertainment at the Melrose club was provided by the Copley Square Concert Company. The attractions at this most prominent social organization of the city have been unusually good this season, but the musical program Tuesday evening eclipsed all preceding amusements. The professional manner in which the program was rendered called forth vociferous and universal applause at conclusion of every number, and all present were unanimous in their praises of the clever and versatile company."

Cars for Brockton Fair.

Supt. John T. Conway of the street railway company is busily engaged in getting ready for the Brockton fair and the arrangements for accommodating the big crowds that will attend will be carefully looked after, says the Enterprise. Double service will be given on all of the lines to Brockton.

Arrangements have also been made to have at least 50 cars running between the fair grounds and the Brockton station of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. and extra men will be brought from Quincy, Taunton, Hyde Park, Abington, East Weymouth and Fall River.

SUNDAY RAIDS.

Liquors Seized by Police at Four Places.

Fore River District Visited.

Police Station Reminds One of Wholesale Liquor House.

The police went on the war-path Sunday morning, after alleged violators of the liquor law. When they completed their work the police station looked like a wholesale liquor house. Four places were raided and liquors seized at each place.

In the raiding party were Chief Hayden, Inspector McKay, Officers Goodhue, Burrell, Larkin, Curtin, Lyons and Cahill.

The first place visited was that of James P. Flannigan at 8 Field street. Here the officers seized one case of porter, seventeen cases of ale, two gallons of whiskey, one gallon each of gin, sherry and port, and two 8-gallon kegs of ale.

Mrs. Mary G. Collie of Claremont avenue received the next call, and when the police left her house they carried away one-half barrel of ale, eight gallons of beer and 175 empty beer bottles.

That aristocratic-named street, Broadway, was next in order and a call made upon Esther Robinson at No. 35. Their visit was unexpected and they confiscated 55 bottles of ale, 53 empty bee... bottles, a gallon of whiskey, 16 gall... of ale, and 6 bottles of beer.

Bostons Lead Again.

The Bostons were again at the head of the American league this morning, but it will be a hot fight to the finish with the New Yorks. Possibly the Chicagoes may be nearer to the top than anticipated.

—Charles H. DesLauries of East Weymouth reports that he was robbed of $273 and a gold watch in Boston on Saturday. He attended the ball game.

UNCLE SAM.

Between 1896 and 1903 Uncle Sam increased the actual specie in his national banks from $200,000,000 to $397,000,000, an increase of $197,000,000.

UNDER PROTECTION.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

It is very evident from the success of the Sunday raids that liquor is being illegally sold in Quincy. What is needed is more persistent work on the part of the police to stamp it out.

The Massachusetts Legislature will elect two United States Senators on Tuesday, Jan. 17, a successor to Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, and also a successor to the late George F. Hoar. Gov. Bates in the meantime may appoint a successor to Senator Hoar to serve until Jan. 17.

October 8 will be the anniversary of the death of John Hancock, the first signer of the Declaration of Independence, who was born in Quincy Jan. 12, 1737, and died in Quincy Oct. 8, 1793. He was governor of Massachusetts in 1787-93 when Quincy was incorporated as a town, and also in 1780-85.

Quincy should be better represented this year than in the past at the reception given by Republicans to Gov. Bates and State officers and Congressmen on the night before the State convention. The gathering this year is at the American House on Thursday evening, and this city will be represented on the reception committee.

Drift of Opinion.

As for the outlook for the fair, the indications are that all will be success. The fair has now gotten such prestige that the people in most cases are bound to come, while constant advertising and the knowledge that the fair is always up to sample causes the throngs to come each year who are new to the Brockton fair, and who swell the attendance the next year with stories of the wonders they have seen. The fair will certainly be as good as ever this year, and probably better. The attractions are excellent and some new features ought to make a great hit with the people.—Brockton Enterprise.

Governor Bates is to be commended for his definite request to the national department of state that the breach of the law by one of the British representatives in this country be called to the attention of the ambassador, in the hope that "he will take such action as to make certain that immunity from prosecution in our courts shall not permit the safety of our citizens to be endangered, or our laws to be violated, because, through international comity, jurisdiction of our own tribunals is withheld." It is well to make plain two facts—that we have no intention of disturbing international comity, and that we have little respect for a foreign representative who hides behind international law to escape the results of conduct that on the part of an American would be incompatible with good citizenship. And judging by the comments on the affair of the third assistant secretary of the British embassy by the British press and the suggestion of disapproval which has come from the British embassy, the third assistant secretary is likely to get little sympathy from his government or his fellow countrymen.—New Bedford Standard.

FLOOR COLLAPSED

Several Persons Precipitated Into Basement of Church

PRIESTS SLIGHTLY HURT

Breaking of Spliced Girder Caused Accident Which Suddenly End the Laying of a Cornerstone at Adams

Adams, Mass., Oct. 3.—While Rt. Rev. Thomas D. Beaven, Roman Catholic bishop of Springfield, was laying the cornerstone of St. Stanislaus Polish church here yesterday afternoon, a floor collapsed, precipitating 150 persons into the basement. Several persons were injured. Bishop Beaven and several of the priests assisting him were slightly hurt.

About 7000 persons attended the ceremony, and about 100 were seated or standing on the floor which covered the basement. Bishop Beaven was attended by Rev. T. H. McLaughlin and Rev. L. O. Triganne, as deacons. Rev. J. W. Dolan, Rev. L. T. Rodler, Rev. M. F. Kopytkiewicz and others were near the bishop. Just as the latter was about to lay the stone, a section of the flooring, about 40 square feet in area, collapsed, and with it fell the bishop, the clergy and about 140 of the spectators who were seated between the centre of the building and the cornerstone.

The persons who were undermost dropped a distance of a dozen feet, many others falling on them. Confusion prevailed for several minutes, but those who remained on solid flooring at once went to work rescuing the people in the basement. Bishop Beaven was caught in the crush, but was able to save himself from serious injury, but was bruised about the body. Father Triganne had his nose crushed, sustained cuts on the cheek and forehead and was injured in an eye. Fathers McLaughlin and Dolan were beside the bishop, but escaped injury. The pastor of the church, Father Kopytkiewicz, was quite severely bruised and cut.

Thirty-seven persons were so injured as to require medical treatment. Of this number the injuries of 16 are serious, and in one case may prove fatal. The others sustained minor cuts and bruises.

A number of police officers and a score of doctors were present, and within 20 minutes all the injured had been extricated and cared for. Miss Belle Turner sustained fractures of both legs and Mrs. Michael McAndrews had one leg broken.

What was regarded at the time as the most serious case was that of Grodek Mischloski, 16 years old. He was one of the first to fall with the floor, and on top of him fell many others. He was unconscious when rescued, having been partially suffocated. His legs were injured and it was thought he was hurt internally. One of the clergymen administered the last rites to him, but later he was able to be removed to his home.

The accident was caused by the breaking of a heavy wooden girder, which had been spliced. A quantity of stone, to be used in the building work, rested on the floor, and it is thought this additional weight contributed to the accident. The ceremony of laying the cornerstone was necessarily postponed.

JAPS HELD THE GROUND

Russians at Port Arthur Repulsed In Heavy Attack

London, Oct. 3.—Efforts by the Russians to retake positions commanding the water supply of Port Arthur have resulted in hard fighting, the losses on both sides being reported to have been heavy. The Japanese retain the contested ground. It is said that heavy guns newly mounted threaten the Russian warships in the harbor of Port Arthur, which may now be forced to go out and face the fleet of Admiral Togo.

The Japanese have completed the change of gauge of the railway from Dalny to New Chwang, and its equipment is nearly finished. This will be of great assistance to the armies in Manchuria.

The Russian admiralty has decided to dispatch the Baltic squadron in the direction of the far east within a short period of time. Events are expected, however, to determine whether the vessels shall proceed to their destination or return to Russian ports to await reinforcements.

Iron Bar In Life Preservers

Washington, Oct. 3.—A conspiracy which has been developed by officials of the department of commerce and labor and of the department of justice resulted in the arrest at Camden, N. J., of four officers of the Nonpareil Cork works for putting upon the market compressed cork blocks for use in making life preservers, each of which blocks contained in its centre a piece of bar iron and weighing eight ounces. The iron bar was inserted and concealed in the block for the purpose of increasing the weight to the legal requirement of six pounds of good cork for each life preserver.

Hoar Services at Washington

Washington, Oct. 3.—Memorial services to the late Senator Hoar were held here in All Souls Unitarian church, where the deceased statesman had been a conspicuous member. Rev. Ulysses G. B. The vacant pew of Senator Hoar was decorated with an immense wreath of white roses, which was subsequently sent to Worcester to be placed on his coffin.

Payne's Life In the Balance

Washington, Oct. 3.—After a day filled with strong hopes, alternating with the gravest fears of almost immediate dissolution, Postmaster General Payne's condition is declared by his physicians to be decidedly more encouraging, but they are unwilling to hazard an opinion as to the future. At times he suffers intense pain and once or twice he cried out in his agony. The heart action continues to give the physicians the greatest concern.

The jury found that Sutton was not in his right mind when he made the will. The bequest was contested by the decedent's brothers and sister.

PLOT MISCARRIED

Another Attempt to Do Injury to the Connecticut

HOLE MADE IN HER SIDE

Discovered Some Hours After the Launching--Rigid Investigation Being Conducted by the Navy Department

Washington, Oct. 3.—The navy department officials are thoroughly aroused over the discovery of the latest attempt to injure the new battleship Connecticut, launched at the New York navy yard last Thursday, by the punching or boring of a hole in her side below the water line.

Thus far only unofficial reports of the matter have reached the department, where it is confidently hoped that a rigid investigation now being conducted by the commandant of the New York navy yard into the work of those who are implicated in the affair will lead to the apprehension of the guilty persons. The naval officers here are unable to ascribe a motive unless it was one of pure mischief. It is stated here that the injury to the ship is not at all serious and the repairs can be made quickly.

Acting Secretary Darling, in discussing the matter, expressed great indignation over the repeated efforts that have been mad to injure the vessel. This late effort he particularly characterized as a dastardly one, and the perpetrator of the outrage, if apprehended, he said, deserved severe punishment.

That the battleship Connecticut did not sink soon after she was launched at the New York navy yard last Thursday was due to the fact that a conspiracy, which was executed with surprising daring, miscarried.

Several days before the launching an attempt was made to punch a hole in the bottom of the ship, near the keel, and one or two of the plates were loosened. This discovery, in connection with the finding of the spikes, which were driven into the launching ways below the water, has made the plan of the conspirators plain.

It was intended that the spikes should encounter the loosened plates and tear a great hole in the warship as she slid down the ways, quickly sending her to the bottom.

The hole in the ship's side was discovered when it was found some hours after the launching that she was leaking. Naval Constructor Robinson, who built the ship, immediately made an investigation and found the hole and damaged plates. He reported the facts to the navy department and a most rigid sweeping investigation was at once begun.

Day of Sadness at Worcester

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 3.—With men of all races and creeds united in doing him honor, funeral services for the late Senator Hoar will be held this afternoon, after which the body will lie in state at city hall from 4 to 8 o'clock. After services in Concord on Tuesday the body will be interred in Sleepy Hollow cemetery. Yesterday was a day of mourning in Worcester. In the churches special tribute was paid to the dead statesman.

Boxer Killed In the Ring

New York, Oct. 3.—John C. Peters, one of the principals in a boxing match at West Bergen, N. J., died in the ring, following a knockout blow in the fourth round yesterday. The police have made several arrests. Peters was 22 years old and had considerable reputation in and about Hoboken as a boxer. Dormady, his opponent, is 25 years old.

Suicide While Under Investigation

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 3.—James M. Denton, a member of the board of freeholders, was found dead in his home. The cause of death is said to have been carbolic acid poisoning. Japanese Gunboat Struck Mine

CLOUDS ARE LIFTING

Prospect of a Speedy Settlement of Fall River Troubles

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 3.—With the opening of the 11th week of the cotton mill strike the prospect of a settlement seems somewhat brighter, owing to active measures recently adopted by the local merchants. Letters have been sent to both manufacturers and operatives requesting that the two sides hold a speedy conference for a discussion of the dispute and a favorable reply has been received from the operatives. The manufacturers will reply, it is expected, today.

Shortly after the beginning of the strike both sides stated their willingness to a conference, but the difficulty then was the want of a common basis on which they could meet. The merchants believe that they have found such a basis and that some settlement will be reached within a short time.

Troublesome Wolves Disposed Of

Bedford, Mass., Oct. 3.—One of the wolves, a female, which was liberated by an unknown person from the zoo in Lexington park, was killed after she had put up a good fight for freedom. Alden Brown brought down the wolf. He had a narrow escape from injury himself, for the animal, goaded to madness by the slight wound inflicted by Brown's first shot, rushed toward him. Just as the wolf was about to spring on him Brown fired a second shot. The bullet struck the beast in the side and proved fatal. The wolf weighed 68 pounds.

Woburn, Mass., Oct. 3.—The last of the wolves which escaped from the Lexington park menagerie was shot in Haydenville by Charles Taylor, who fired three shots into the beast.

Work For Idle Schooners

Boston, Oct. 3.—The differences between the coal shippers of this city and the Shipowners' association were settled by the shipowners accepting 75 cents a ton from Chesapeake bay ports and Philadelphia and 88 cents from Baltimore. The association had hitherto held out for a 90-cent rate. The effect of the settlement has resulted in the chartering of several large schooners which have been tied up, entailing heavy loss to their owners.

Truro, Mass., Oct. 3.—The body of W. P. Chadwick of Exeter, N. H., chairman of the board of trustees of Phillips Exeter academy, who was drowned while swimming at the entrance of Barnstable harbor a week ago, was found on the beach at South Truro yesterday afternoon, having drifted across the bay, a distance of 15 miles.

MOTHER AND CHILD

Scott's Emulsion is cod liver oil made almost as palatable as milk. It is easy and soothing to the weak stomach; it checks the tendencies of children toward thinness.

Scott's Emulsion gives strength to weak mothers because it creates healthy flesh and new blood.

Nursing mothers will find a special value in Scott's Emulsion because it insures a flow of rich, nourishing milk for the baby. More and better than a medicine; Scott's Emulsion is a food.

Scott's Emulsion is not a mere extract, containing imaginary "active principles" which do not exist, but is full of actual nourishment which sustains vital force and builds up the body tissues more rapidly than any other known remedy.

Country Declared to Be Drifting Toward Imperialism--Arbitration, Race Issue and Fraud In Public Service Discussed

Elkins, W. Va., Oct. 3.—The letter of acceptance of Henry G. Davis, Democratic candidate for vice president, says in part:

The times are propitious for the reinstatement of the Democratic party in control of the government. The public mind is being disillusioned of the pretension of the Republican party, so long and so arrogantly made, that the material prosperity of the country depends upon its own ascendancy. Thoughtful and patriotic people are becoming more and more distrustful of the heady and personal element of the present administration, and are more than willing to see it replaced by one that better recognizes constitutional and other lawful restraints. They demand that the present wasteful extravagance in the expenditure of the money, drawn by taxation from the industry of the people, shall cease, and that economy and honesty in the public service shall be again regarded as virtues in the high places of the government.

The expenditures per capita of the government are increasing at an alarming rate. When the present administration went into power there was a large surplus, but notwithstanding the enormous taxation, the revenues therefrom are not now adequate to meet the demands made by reckless appropriations. This needless deficit is due to the extravagance of the administration.

In answer to criticisms upon the size and expense of maintaining the army, the president has said that the number of soldiers now is no greater per capita than in former times. But an army then was necessary to protect settlers from the Indians and to do other police duty in the unsettled portion of the country—conditions which do not now exist. The army, however, has greatly increased in cost, much faster relatively than it has in numbers.

Millions of dollars have been paid out of the treasury to pensioners upon an executive order, the force of which is to supplement the law and supplant the wisdom of congress. Eminent lawyers and citizens of New York, of both political parties, have pronounced this order "unconstitutional, lawless and most reprehensible."

We all hail as the harbinger of the new era in the commerce of the world the inception of the great work of building the canal that is to join the two great oceans; but we deprecate the action of the present administration, which inflicted a wound upon our national honor by its disregard of the rights of a weaker nation, in order to gain a doubtful credit for energy in forwarding that great enterprise.

These and many other unwarranted things that belong more to an empire than a republic, have occurred under the present administration, and brought deep concern and alarm to thoughtful and patriotic minds. They must be regarded as the first fruits of imperialism, and show how fast we are drifting toward absolutism and centralized power.

That many of the existing tariff rates are excessive and enable powerful combinations to extort unjust and oppressive tribute from the people cannot be controverted. The tariff is undoubtedly too high upon such articles as enables the manufacturer to sell his products abroad cheaper than at home. Relief from these conditions will only come through the success of the Democratic party, which stands for a wise, conservative and gradual change in the tariff laws, which will equalize the burdens of taxation and make honest competition possible.

It is estimated that there are in the United States between two and three hundred combinations of capital and corporate interests, known as trusts, which have grown up in the last few years under Republican rule.

Local self-government is the very cornerstone of our political structure, and the best assurance of liberty regulated by law. The Democratic party has always resisted, and will continue to resist, the encroachment by its enemies upon the fundamental right of the people of the several states.

The declaration in the St. Louis platform in favor of arbitration is one that appeals to my sense of fairness. Its permanent establishment as a part of the industrial system of the country, upon a basis of mutual consent of all parties to a controversy, would insure more friendly relations between employer and employed, for the interest of the workingman and the employer is identical.

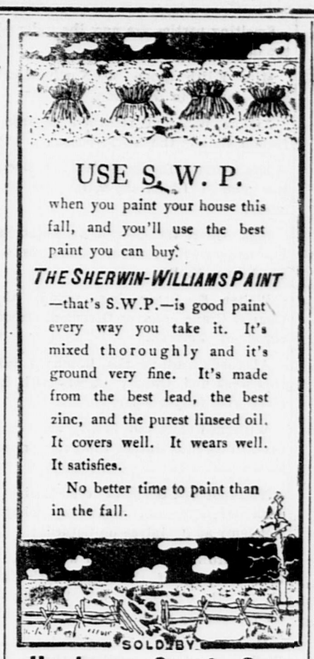

All lovers of their country must deprecate the rehabilitation by the Republican party of a disappearing race issue. The revival of this issue, with all its attendant evils, must of necessity retard the development of the southern states, whose people are struggling manfully with conditions left by the war, and seriously interferes with the industrial progress of both races.

Peculation and fraud in the public service under the present administration reached such proportions that knowledge of the evils practiced became public property. Prosecutions naturally followed, but a thorough and impartial investigation by congress, proposed and urged by the Democratic minority, was refused by the Republicans at the mandate, it is believed, of the administration.

Offices are created and filled in pursuance of law to carry on the government, and not to further party ambitions and the selfish purpose of any citizen. Many of the hundred thousand federal officeholders, servants of all the people, while under salary, are now vigorously working and contributing in the present campaign to secure the success of the Republican party, in defiant violation of the civil service laws, rules and regulations.

The late Democratic convention, and its candidate for president, have given signal exhibition of a mutual respect and confidence almost unprecedented in our political history, and our party has received new inspiration and hope in its appeal to the people, who always appreciate and admire courage, character and discretion in their leaders. Our candidate has these qualities.

With unabated trust in the efficiency of the cardinal principles of our great party, when applied to the practical administration of government to realize the blessings of peace and prosperity for all, and believing that the people will correct the present abuses of administration by a change of party in power, I await with confidence the result of their judgment at the polls.

Farmer Murdered and Robbed

New York, Oct. 3.—William Sigler, 51 years old, a wealthy farmer, was murderously assaulted at Midvale, N. J., and died from his injury. His skull was crushed in by a blunt instrument. He apparently was struck down on the sidewalk and then thrown into the gutter, after being robbed. Charles Fenner and David Conklin, sons of farmers, are under arrest. Sigler usually carried large sums of money with him.

Other Reasons John O. Hall Says

Why He Withdrew from Contest.

No Promise Relative to the City Auditorship.

To the Editors of the Ledger:

Replying to the communication, regarding the office of City Auditor in which one seeks to convey the impression that my failure to qualify as a candidate for Representative was the result of a promise of an election as Auditor, given by officials at City Hall, I wish to say that no such promise does or could exist.

My failure to file a nomination paper as candidate for Representative was for other reasons, not connected with any city office.

I trust you will give this denial as wide a publicity as the criticism above referred to.

Respectfully,
John O. Hall.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus deprivihg the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act.

CHAPTER VII—(Continued).

"The plot for the cutting down of the young tobacco plants, Captain Tabor," said I.

His eyes blazed at me, while his face was pale and grim.

"How many know of the goods I discharged from the Golden Horn yesterday?" he asked.

"Three men, and I know not how many more, and two women," said I.

"Two women!" he groaned out. "Pestilence on these tide waters which hold a ship like a trap! Two women!"

"But the concern is lest a third woman know," said I.

"If three women know, then heaven save us all, for their triple tongues will carry as far as the last trump!" cried Captain Tabor. Perturbed as he was, he never lost that air of reckless daring which compelled me to a sort of liking for him. "Out with the rest of it, sir," he said.

Then I told my story, to which he listened, scowling, yet with that ready laugh at his mouth. "'Tis a scurvy trick to serve a woman, both for her sake and the rest of us, to let her meddle with such matters," he said, "and so I told that cousin of hers, Master Drake, who came with her to give the order ere I sailed for England."

"Came any man save Ralph Drake with her then?" I asked.

"The saints forbid," he replied. "A secret is a secret only when in the keeping of one; with two it findeth legs, but with three it unfoldeth the swiftest wings of flight in all creation and is everywhere with no alighting. Had three come to me with that mad order to bring powder and shot in the stead of silk stockings and garters and cambric shifts and kerchiefs I would have clapped full sail on the Golden Horn, though"—he hesitated, then spoke in a whisper—"my mind is against tyranny, to speak you true, though I care not a farthing whether men pray on their knees or their feet, or in gowns or the fashion of Eden. And I care not if they pray at all, nor would I for the sake of that ever have forsaken, had I stood in my grandfather's shoes, the fleshpots of old England for that howling wilderness of Plymouth. But for the sake of doing as I willed, and not as any other man, would I have sailed or swam the seas had they been blood instead of water. And so am I now with a due regard to the wind and the trim of my sails and the ears of talebearers, for a man hath but one head to lose with you of Virginia. But, the Lord, to make a little maid like that run the risk of imprisonment or worse—knew you aught of this, sir?"

I shook my head.

Captain Tabor laughed. "And yet she rode straight to the wharf with you yesterday," said he. "Lord, what hidden springs move a woman! I'll warrant, sir, had you known, you might have battened down the hatches fast enough on her will, convict though you be, and, faith, sir, but you look to me like one who is convict or master at his own choosing and not by the will of any other." So saying, he gave me a look so sharp that for a second I half surmised that he guessed my secret, but knew better at once, and said that our business was to deal not with what had been, but with what might be.

"Well," said he, "and what may that be, Master Wingfield, in your opinion? You surely do not mean to hold the Golden Horn in midstream with her cargo undischarged until the day of doom lest yon old beldame offer up her fair granddaughter on the altar of her loyalty, with me and my heartles for kindling, to say naught of yourself and a few of the best gentlemen of Virginia. I forfeit my head if I set sail for England; naught is left for me that I see that shall save my neck but to turn pirate and king it over the high seas. Having swallowed a small morsel of my Puritan misgivings, what is to hinder my bolting the whole, like an exceeding bitter pill, to my complete purging of danger? What say you, Master Wingfield? Small reputation have you to lose, and sure thy reckoning with powers that be leaves thee large creditor. Will you sail with me? My first lieutenant shall you be, and we will share the booty."

He laughed, and I stared at him that he should stoop to jest, yet having a ready leap of comradeship toward him for it. Then suddenly his mood changed. Close to me he edged and began talking with a serious shrewdness which showed his mind brought fully to bear upon the situation. "You say, sir," said he, "that Mistress Mary Cavendish, in a spirit of youthful daring and levity, gave her grandmother a list of the goods which my Lady Culpeper ordered from England, and which even now is due?" I nodded.

"Know you by what ship?"

"The Earl of Fairfax," I replied, and recalled as I spoke a rumor that my Lord Culpeper designed his daughter Cate for the eldest son of the earl and had so named his ship in honor of him.

"You say that the Earl of Fairfax is even now due?" said Captain Tabor.

I replied that she was hourly expected by what I had learned. Then Captain Tabor, sitting loosely hunched with that utter abandon of all the muscles which one sees in some when they are undergoing a fierce strain of thought, remained silent for a space, his brows knitted. Then suddenly my shoulder tingled with the clap which he gave it and the cabin rang and rang again with a laugh so loud and gay that it seemed a very note of the May day. "You are merry," I said. But I laughed myself, though somewhat doubtfully, when he unfolded his scheme to me, which was indeed both bold and humorous. He knew well the captain of the Earl of Fairfax, who had been shipmate with him.

"Many a lark ashore have we had together," said Calvin Tabor, "and, faith, but I know things about him now which compel him to my turn—the devil's mess have we both been in—but I need not use such means of persuasion if I know honest Dick Watson."

The scheme of which Captain Tabor delivered himself with bursts of laughter enough to wake the ship was, to speak briefly, that he should go with a boat, rowing against the current by keeping close to bank and taking advantage of eddies, and meet the Earl of Fairfax before she reached Jamestown, board her and persuade her captain to send the cases of my Lady Culpeper's goods under cover of night to the Golden Horn, whence he would unload them next morning, and Mistress Mary could show them to her grandmother, and then they were to be reshipped with all possible speed and secrecy, the Earl of Fairfax meanwhile lying at anchor at the mouth of the river, and then delivered to my Lady Culpeper.

There was but one doubt as to the success of this curious scheme in my mind, and that was that Mistress Mary might not easily lend herself to such deception. However, Captain Tabor, with a skill of devising concerning which I have often wondered whether it may be more common in the descendants of those who settled in New England, who were in such sore straits to get their own wills, than with us of Virginia, provided a way through that difficulty.

"'Tis full easy," said he. "You say that the maid's sister will say naught against it—and you?"

"I will say naught against her safety," said I. "What think you I care for any little quibbles of the truth when that be in question?"

"Well," said Captain Tabor, "then must you and Mistress Catherine Cavendish show the goods to the maid and say naught as to the means by which you came by them; tell her they are landed from the Golden Horn, as indeed they will be; let her think aught she chooses, that they are indeed her own, purchased for her by her sister or her lovers, if she choose to think so, and bid her display them with no ado to Madam Cavendish if she value the safety of the others who are concerned in this. Betwixt the mystery and the fright and the sight of the trinkets, if she be aught on the pattern of any other maid, show them she will and hold her tongue till she be out of her grandmother's presence."

"It can be but tried," said I.

Then the captain sprang out on deck and ordered a boat lowered and presently had set me ashore and was himself, with a half dozen sailors, fighting way down stream.

I found my horse on the bank where I had left him, and by him, waiting anxiously, Catherine Cavendish. She listened with deepening eyes while I told her Captain Tabor's scheme, and when I had done looked at me with her beautiful mouth set and her face as white as a white flower on a bush beside her. "Mary shall show the goods," said she. "Such a story will I tell her as will make her innocent of aught save bewilderment, and as for you and me, we are both of us ready to burn for a lie for the sake of her."

Catherine anxiously waiting on the bank of the stream

NO REDUCTION

In the $3,000 Order for Schools.

At Meeting of the City Council.

Large Unpaid Bills in Poor Department for 1903.

There was an attempt in the City Council Monday evening to reduce the additional appropriation of $3,000 for schools to $2,000, which caused a lengthy debate. The amendment was defeated and the order passed with only three in opposition.

Councilmen Holmes and Polk were the absentees.

UNPAID BILLS.

The Overseer of the Poor sent a communication stating that the appropriation for his department for 1903 was exhausted and that there were bills unpaid amounting to $2,406.80. To Finance Committee.

PETITIONS.

The New England Telephone company petitioned for a location for poles on Goffe street and South Central avenue, and to attach wires to poles of other companies on Sea street. To Committee on Streets.

Several petitions for minor licenses were received and referred.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

The Committee on Licenses reported orders granting licenses to Faxon hall, Hancock hall and St. Mary's hall at $15 each, and an auctioneers license to Charles H. Johnson. Adopted.

The joint committee on Finance and Sewers reported an amended order for $12,000 instead of $22,000 for sewer extensions. Ordered to a second reading.

SCHOOL TICKETS.

Councilman Whiton offered a resolution setting forth that the street railway was discriminating in issuing its half fare school tickets by refusing to sell them to children attending private schools, and that the Mayor request the railroad to sell half fare tickets to all Quincy scholars attending schools in Quincy.

Mayor Bryant said that this matter was taken up with the railrad two years ago and that they then agreed to issue half-fare tickets to children attending private schools and that they had done so. It was something new if they did not do so now.

Councilman Whiton said that he had tried to buy some for a niece who was attending the Greenleaf street school, and had been refused.

Mayor Bryant—The railroad claimed that the Adams Academy, Woodward and Greenleaf schools were endowed institutions. He did not think the City Council had a very good case to go before the railroad to include all private schools. The way they drew the line was seemingly fair. He did not think it necessary to pass the order.

Councilman Whiton—They are now selling to the Adams Academy and Woodward children, and if the Greenleaf were included the amount would be small.

The order was adopted.

PUBLIC HEARING.

A public hearing was held on the petition of the Telephone Company to attach wires to poles of other companies on Arlington street. No one appeared for or against and the hearing closed.

PUBLIC SCALES.

Councilman Loud offered an order for $600 for public scales to be erected near the fountain in City Square. To Committee on Public Buildings.

GOFFE STREET IN DARKNESS.

Councilman Bass offered an order that the Mayor be requested to direct the Gas company to light Goffe street upon the same schedule that Adams street is being lighted until such time as the Electric Light company was in position to light the street as ordered. To Committee on Streets.

ELECTION PLACES.

Councilman Hughes offered an order for polling places for the State election. Adopted.

CALENDAR.

The order laying out Channing street took its second reading.

The following orders were passed to be ordained.

Granting the Telephone Co. a location for poles on Penn street and Newport avenue.

Granting the Telephone Co. a location for poles on Sea street, Sea avenue and Willard street.

Granting the Telephone Co. permission to attach wires to poles on Canal and Field streets.

SCHOOL APPROPRIATION.

The order appropriating $3,000 for schools took its second reading and the rules were suspended.

Councilman Piper offered an amendment making the amount $2000.

He said that when the order came up we were told that the cost to Quincy for text books and supplies was among the lowest. He found by the report of the State board that it was among the highest, standing number five in the list of cities. Also told that the teachers coming from other towns criticised the quality and quantity of supplies. It seems, if we pay more and get poor quality and quantity, something must be wrong. In a recent report Quincy has a little better showing, standing number ten in the list of cities. Were also told that the School Board asked for $9,000 for supplies and sundries. The $1,500 cut from that would leave $7,500. I find by the September report of the board that $8,612 was set aside for that purpose and that there was a balance of $3,823.46. Now, if they have a balance it hardly seems that bills are outstanding.

He would like the order to read so that $1,500 could go to evening schools and $500 to books and supplies. This amount with what they set aside will give them $9,100 for books and supplies. He believed economy should be practiced in the School board as in other departments.

Councilman Reardon would like to know if the text books were leased or purchased outright.

Councilman Bass hoped the matter would be settled tonight that the evening schools might open. He moved the Council go into the committee of the whole. Voted.

Councilman Whiton was elected chairman and C. A. Spear clerk.

Upon vote, Dr. Hallowell of the School board, appeared before the committee.

Dr. Hallowell said he had not prepared himself on this subject. He doubted if it was proper for him to appear as that duty devolved upon the chairman. He was simply present as a citizen.

In reply to questions he said the evening schools could not open until the necessary funds were provided. He was not prepared to discuss the comparisons made by Councilman Piper. The $3,000 was needed. It was not economical or prudent to perform the work without necessary funds. The committee put out competitive bids for its supplies. In reply to a question as to how he reconciled the statement that $9,000 would be needed for supplies, and now want more, he said, he presumed that the committee did not set aside a large enough amount as more children attended school than estimated, and that more took the higher branches than expected.

Councilman Reardon—If $2000 is appropriated will the evening schools be opened?

Dr. Hallowell,—Yes, if you appropriate $1500.

In reply to further questons, Dr. Hallowell said that he had no knowledge that the committee did not pay for its text books.

The Committee then arose and reported.

Councilman Nickerson opposed amendment to reduce to $2,000. They need the money. The Council cannot go into detail and find out where every cent is expended. He did not believe money had been squandered. They do the best they can. It was a mistake to cut the amount down. He believed schools were run economically.

Councilman Stone—The School Committee would not be expected to know how many children were to come to school. The records show they are doing business right and were educating the children cheap. They have been antagonized on every move they have made and it all comes from the same quarter.

Councilman Whiton—The text book matter is fixed by the State, and it was up to the council to furnish the money.

Councilman Reardon—Some people have visionary ideas. He did not believe in passing the $3000 order. The report shows a balance of $3000 for text books. It was just as easy for them to come before the council later, if necessary, and ask for a thousand more. Facts are facts, and are prepared by the State. They show schools are not run as economically as in other cities. It was better business to pass the $2000 order. Make the School Committee exercise economy as other departments.

Councilman Stone—Books have been bought but not paid for as the bills have not come in. If we do not want to provide money the School Board can contract bills and the City Council has got to pay for them.

Councilman Piper—Councilmen have no right to accuse any member of antagonizing. He was living up to his obligation. He had no antagonism but did not believe they had been economical.

Councilman Langelier—Statistics are misleading. Schools usually contracted large bills for supplies in August which were not paid until September or later.

The amendment of Councilman Piper was lost.

The order was then passed to be ordained, Councilmen Hughes, Piper and Reardon voting no.

Adjourned 9.05, until Oct. 17.

Delightful Afternoon.

The afternoon Monday at Mrs. Babcock's with Miss Higginson and Mrs. Lundberg was very interesting. Mrs. Lundberg is president of the Brookline Day nursery. She told how discouraging and difficult the first few weeks of the nursery work there was, with few children and inconveniences; now the association in Brookline rents a large old-fashioned house, with ample yard room, and care for more than sixty children each day. The work is a great blessing to the community. Miss Elizabeth Johnson, president of the Home Science association, gave some facts in connection with that efficient and active body here in Quincy. Mrs. Babcock in a resume of the philanthropic societies in Quincy mentioned the Quincy Charitable society as the oldest and one which does a great deal of relief work.

During the afternoon a letter was read from Miss Webster of Cambridge who is to be in Quincy Monday evening October 10th and give an illustrated talk with selections, upon the opera Parsifal to be given in Boston the last two weeks of October. This is to be a subscription evening with a necessarily limited number of listeners. Colonial hall is to be secured for the occasion.

New County Committee.

At the Norfolk County Republican convention on Monday the County campaign committee was increased to fifteen, which is favorable to a reorganization. The following were elected: William L. Baker of Brookline, Ephraim Snow, Jr., of Cohasset, Henry D. Humphrey of Dedham, Albion F. Bemis of Foxboro, Horace Grant of Franklin, A. H. Holbrook of Randolph, Augustus T. Beaty of Hyde Park, Lewis E. Flye of Holbrook, Mrs. B. Thurber of Milton, Henry T. Childs of Needham, Thomas F. Burke of Quincy, Hosea C. Witt of Stoughton, Golman Edmands of Wellesley, Edward B. Nevin of Weymouth, Harry A. Whiting of Walpole.

Adams Chapter.

Members of Adams Chapter Daughters of the Revolution gathered around the big fire in the old fireplace at the birthplace of President John Adams Monday afternoon for their first fall meeting. Mrs. Charles Belcher of Randolph read a paper on "Travel in Colonial Days" and the regular business of the chapter was discussed. A social hour followed with refreshments of chocolate and cake. The hostesses were Mrs. E. G. Pratt, Mrs. A. H. Gilson, Mrs. Frank Brewer and Mrs. Charles Wilson. The November meeting is to be an all day meeting; an old fashioned sewing bee and noon dinner.

SHOT IN HEART.

Was It Accidental or Was it Suicidal?

His Death Was Almost Instantaneous.

The Victim Fred Welch Was at His Office.

Frederick Welch, assistant foreman of the Granite Railway company, was shot and killed at his office at the company's quarry shortly after 7 o'clock this morning. Whether the shooting was accidental or intentional will probably never be known.

Mr. Welch, who is a widower and resides with his brother at 27 Robertson street, went to work this morning in apparent good health. He laughed and talked with the men and there was nothing to indicate that his end was near.

As he passed the night watchman, Michael O'Brien, he borrowed his revolver, stating that there was a rat around his office which he wished to shoot. He then returned to his office and a few minutes later was seen standing near the window.

A report of a revolver was heard, and rushing in the workmen found him leaning over a table. One of them asked, what was the matter Fred? He replied "I have shot myself." The next minute he fell over dead.

Medical Examiner Jones was called and upon examination found that the bullet, a 38 calibre, had penetrated the base of the heart.

The body was given in charge of an undertaker. The unfortunate man was 51 years of age.

The total number of drunks for the year was 719.

Y. M. C. A. Students.

The Y. M. C. A. educational courses are popular. It was estimated that over 2000 names were enrolled as students of the evening institute of the Boston Y. M. C. A. this week. This is the largest number ever registered. The automobile school, which was established last year, is very popular. The class in applied electricity will open its sessions on Nov. 1.

Candidate Entertained.

Sumner H. Foster, the Republican candidate for County Commissioner, entertained all the delegates to the convention at Hotel Bellevue after the convention. The spokesman of the Blanchard men regretted that the nomination had not been made unanimous, saying it was an oversight. Loyal support was promised to the candidate.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

The Brockton fair has grand weather for the opening day. It is usually favored with pleasant days. Many have gone from Quincy today, however, rather than take the risk of a storm.

The critics of the schools were in a hopeless minority at the City Council this week. Perhaps the order for the High School enlargment would have passed had it come to a vote.

A Quincy Point gentleman says the police should not stop with the three liquor raids in that ward on Sunday. That there are thirty-three other places which should be raided. It is up to the Mayor and Chief of Police to stop the sale of liquor at Quincy Point.

Civilization advances apace even in America. A number of recent straws show which way the wind is blowing. A lamentation comes up from Yale university that no foot ball material can be found in the new Freshman class. And Mark Twain has recently been to Fairhaven, Mass, to help dedicate a church. Better yet, the demand in public libraries for works other than fiction is on the increase.

Since 1857 Brookline has had a member of the Norfolk county commissioners but three years, although she pays the largest county tax, and stands next to Quincy in population. It is not surprising that there was a demand for representation, and that the other parts of the county were ready to concede the justice of claim. The little town of Stoughton has had representation for ten years which is long enough for any member. Sumner H. Foster of Brookline, the Republican nominee, was presented to the convention as the very best Brookline had. No better endorsement is needed.

There is a strong sentiment on the Pacific coast in favor of the policy of the Republican party regarding the Philippine islands. The merchants and business men of that section of the country see that their future interests are largely bound up with the development of our far eastern possessions, and the growth of trade in Asia. Until the Panama canal is finished they cannot hope to do much business with Europe. It is therefore no matter for surprise that these gentlemen have largely contributed, unsolicited, to the Republican campaign fund. The lumbermen of Washington and Oregon are especially interested in the Philippine Islands.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ The principal point of objection to the Luce caucus law in this city and elsewhere seems to be in the delay in getting returns. It certainly was not because of a plethora of votes, and if there is more red tape than is necessary for the correct return of the count, it ought to be easily eliminated. That isn't the vital part of the joint caucus act, and there seems to be little fault found with its more important provisions.—Haverhill Gazette.

☞ Naval Constructor Richard H. M. Robinson, U. S. N., is an example of what a young American is capable of accomplishing, and his accomplishment should act as an incentive to young men who have ambition and wish to get along in the world. Robinson, only 29 years old, is the builder of the battleship Connecticut, launched last week from the Brooklyn navy yard. To appreciate this with its full force one must stop to consider what this young man has done by being advanced sufficiently far to be entrusted with the construction of the finest battleship in the American navy, and only 29 years old. This is the commencement of an already brilliant career. He was the highest in his class at Annapolis, and its president for four years. During the war with Spain he was assistant to the United States naval attache at London, and aided in the purchase of the Albany and the New Orleans from Brazil.—Gloucester Times.

FUNERAL OF HOAR

A Few Soldiers Provide Only Touch of Formal Display

HYMNS AND EULOGIES

Simple Exercises Concluded In Less Than Hour--Business at Worcester Suspended--Many Thousand People View Body

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 4.—Funeral services for United States Senator George Frisbie Hoar were held here yesterday. In the presence of many persons representing societies and associations, the city of Worcester, commonwealth of Massachusetts and congress of the United States, the favorite hymns of the dead statesman were sung, the 90th Psalm was read and two clergymen spoke words in eulogy of the man who had been their friend for many years.

The day was beautifully clear and cool and residents of Worcester in greater numbers than ever had assembled for any cause, lined the streets through which the short procession passed. Public and private business in the city was suspended. Many buildings were draped and pictures of Senator Hoar were generally displayed with symbols of mourning in the windows. Members of the volunteer milltia who assisted in doing police duty provided the only touch of formal display.

The services, which were held in the little Church of the Unity, which Senator Hoar attended and in the councils of which he always had had a prominent part, were of a most unceremonious nature. Three hymns were sung. Rev. Dr. Rush R. Shippen of Brockton spoke briefly of his personal acquaintance with Senator Hoar and of the generosity, breadth of mind and beneficence to the Church of the Unity of his friend. Rev. E. E. Hale, chaplain of the United States senate, schoolmate and lifelong friend of the senator, spoke at greater length, after having read a Psalm and offered a brief prayer. Without attempt at oratory, Dr. Hale reviewed his acquaintance with Senator Hoar and mentioned lessons which might be drawn from the character of the man as revealed by their intercourse.

Less than an hour was needed for the simple exercises at the church, and after those present had taken a final look at the face of the senator, the body was removed to the city hall, to lie in state where the thousands whom the church could not accommodate might have opportunity to take final leave.

Thirty-five thousand people passed through city hall and viewed the body of Senator Hoar between 4:30 and 9:30 o'clock last night. The four hours allotted for this ceremony proved inadequate and an extension of an hour was made.

Fifty thousand people massed in front of city hall and adjacent ways and many cases of fainting women were noted. Police ambulances carried 19 people from the crush to their homes and others were cared for in city hall.

During the evening the body was removed to an undertaker's shop, where a death mask was made. Today it will be taken to Concord for interment.

"Censure" For Thirteen Deaths

New York, Oct. 4.—The coroner's jury which has been investigating the death of the 13 persons who lost their lives in a recent tenement house fire on Attorney street returned a verdict in which they found no person directly responsible for said deaths. The jury censures the tenement house department and the building department for lax supervision of the building.

Each Skull Held a Bullet

Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 4.—Much excitement has been created in the village of Sparta by the discovery of eight skeletons near the town. A bullet was found in each skull. The region in which the bodies were found was formerly a wild one and it is thought that the bodies may be those of early settlers, killed by highwaymen.

Nothing New From Manchuria

London, Oct. 4.—Small outpost fights constitute the sum of the activities reported from the vicinity of Mukden. The Japanese blockade of Port Arthur is so effective that General Stoessel has been unable to inform the war office at St. Petersburg of the situation there.

Sheriff Locked Up In His Jail

Ashland, Wis., Oct. 4.—Sheriff Peterson of Sawyer county was fined $150 by Judge Parish and sentenced to 30 days in jail for contempt of court in failing to capture John F. Dietz, for whom a warrant was issued last May. The coroner placed Peterson in his own jail.

Railway Disaster In Wales

Peckville, Pa., Oct. 4.—By an explosion in a mill of the Dupont-De Nemours Powder company's plant two men met instant death. This is the fourth explosion in these mills within four years, always with fatal results.

STRONGLY GUARDED

Marines Aboard and Around the Connecticut Prepared to Kill

New York, Oct. 4.—Guarded by marines with loaded rifles on board her and on shore, and with powerful electric searchlights playing over her, the newly launched battleship Connecticut, already the object of three serious attacks, lay at her berth in the Brooklyn navy yard last night.

The officers are using every conceivable precaution against the recurrence of the mysterious attempts to disable or destroy the vessel, and they think they have about rendered it impossible. Marines and secret service men are about her all the time.

While the regulations governing the construction of a vessel are strict, even greater precautions will be taken in future. A naval constructor will be on the new vessel until she leaves the yard, giving his personal supervision to every detail of the work.

A strict investigation involving much detective work is under way. Of this the authorities will not talk.

Chinaman Raises Fine Point

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Commissioner Gray has ordered the deportation of Wong Bing, a Chinaman, who conducted a store at Brockville, Ont., for many years and is, it is said, a naturalized British subject. Representations were made to Gray that the Dominion government would permit Wong Bing to re-enter Canada on his certificate, but Gray finds no authority for deporting Chinamen to Canada and rules that he must go back to China. Appeal will be taken on the point of the Chinaman's British citizenship.

Crane or Moody For Senator

Washington, Oct. 4.—Congressman Lovering of Massachusetts, who is in town, says, in speaking of the senatorial succession: "There are two men in Massachusetts who are easily thought before all others as worthy both of appointment and election, and either of whom will be certain of election, if appointed. These are ex-Governor Crane and Attorney General Moody. Ex-Secretary Long and General Draper have been mentioned, but the prospects of both are slim."

Killed His Child With Fire

Norfolk, Oct. 4.—Haywood Lenaire, a negro "voodoo doctor," set fire to his house here, and, unheeding the appeals of his 10-year-old son, sprang through a window, leaving the child to perish in the flames, and fled. Lenaire was arrested later and committed to jail to await examination. He made no statement concerning his crime or motive. The child's body, burned to a crisp, was found in the ruins of the house.

Charged With Conspiracy

Trenton, Oct. 4.—J. H. Stone, H. C. Quintard, James Russ and C. W. Russ, who were jointly indicted for conspiracy against the United States government steamship inspection laws through placing pieces of iron inside of cork life preservers manufactured for sale at Camden, pleaded not guilty before Judge Lanning. Stone gave bail in the sum of $5000, and the other three gave bail in the sum of $4000 each.

Sacrificed Life For Science

Orange, N. J., Oct. 4.—Clarence M. Daily is dead at his home in East Orange from the effects of a cancerous growth resulting from long continued persistence in experimenting with X-ray apparatus in the experimenting department of the Edison laboratory. The history of his case shows him to have been a martyr to science in his devotion to the solution of the mysteries of the X-rays and fluroscope.

Not Time to Intervene

Rome, Oct. 4.—Premier Giolitti authorizes a repetition of the denial that any project of mediation in the far east was discussed at his recent meeting with Count Von Buelow, the German chancellor, at Homburg. He adds that intervention is considered impossible until the belligerents shall be disposed to entertain peaceful ideas.

Weinseimer Loses a Point

New York, Oct. 4.—An application by the prosecution for a special panel of jurors to try the case of Philip Weinseimer, former president of the Building Trades Alliance, who is under two indictments for extortion, was granted by Judge Newburger. The application was unsuccessfully opposed by Weinseimer's counsel.

Corbin Makes a Denial

Omaha, Oct. 4.—General Corbin, who is here on his way to the Philippines to succeed General Wade, denies having said that army officers should not marry unless they had a salary of $2400. He produced a copy of his original statement, saying that it had been quite misunderstood.

Killed by Person Unknown

New York, Oct. 4.—The coroner's jury in the case of the shooting of Frank McNally, who was found dead in his saloon in Brooklyn, returned a verdict to the effect that he "met death at the hands of a person or persons unknown to the jury."

Hawaiian Politics

Honolulu, Oct. 4.—Complete nominations have been made by Republicans and Democrats and Home Rulers. There is a preponderance of natives on the Republican and Democratic tickets. The candidates of the Home Rule party are all natives.

Morse, the Humorist.

Curtis G. Morse, who will assist in the Bethany Brotherhood course tomorrow evening, was appreciated in Fitchburg. The Evening Star says: "Curtis G. Morse, the humorist, was delightfully entertaining, and was recalled over and over again. Mr. Morse seems to be a humorist pre-eminent. He does not declaim, but furnishes an excellent objective definition of what humor is. If you wish to laugh and have a pleasant taste in your mouth for days afterwards, be sure and hear Mr. Morse."

PEACE CONGRESS

Secretary Hay Makes Notable Address to Delegates

AMELIORATION OF WAR

Measures Must Be Taken Which May Lead Us Gradually to Wished-For Goal--World's Nations Looking to United States

Boston, Oct. 4.—The International Peace congress formally opened in Tremont temple yesterday afternoon, the auditorium being crowded with members of the congress on the floor and with as many of the interested public as could be accommodated in the galleries. The greetings of the city, state and nation were extended to the delegates by eminent men in the governments of each, and a cordial and sympathetic support of the purposes of the congress was pledged.

The principal speaker was John Hay, secretary of state in President Roosevelt's cabinet, who brought the greetings of his chief, and welcomed the delegates in the name of the government at Washington. Secretary Hay called attention to the comparatively peaceful history of the United States, and earnestly asseverated that its policies have always been peaceful where peace might be attained with honor.

"But fixed as our tradition is," said Mr. Hay, "clear as is our purpose in the direction of peace, no country is permanently immune to war so long as the desire and the practice of peace are not universal. If we quote Washington as an advocate of peace, it is but fair also to quote him where he says: 'To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.' Human history is one long desolate story of bloodshed. All the arts unite in the apparent conspiracy to give precedence to the glory of arms.

"In almost every sermon and hymn we hear in our churches the imagery of war and battle is used. We are charged to fight the good fight of faith; we are to sail through bloody seas to win the prize. The Christian soldier is constantly marshalled to war. Not only in our habits and customs, but in our daily speech and in our inmost thoughts we are beset by the obsession of conflict and mutual destruction. It is like the law of sin in the members to which the greatest of the apostles refers: 'Who shall deliver us from the body of this death?'

"We have all recently read that wonderful sermon on war by Count Tolstoi, in which a spirit of marvellous lucidity and fire, absolutely detached from geographical or political conditions, speaks the word as it has been given him to speak it, and as no other living man could have done. As you read, with an aching heart, his terrible arraignment of war, feeling that as a man you are partly responsible for all human atrocities, you wait with impatience for the remedy he shall propose, and you find it is—religion. Yes, that is the remedy. If all would do right nobody would do wrong—nothing is plainer. It is a counsel of perfection, satisfactory to prophets and saints, to be reached in God's good time.

"But you are here to consult together to see whether the generation now alive may not do something to hasten the coming of the acceptable day, the appearance on earth of the beatific vision. If we cannot at once make peace and good will the universal rule and practice of nations, what can we do to approximate this condition? What measures can we take which may lead us at least a little distance toward the wished-for goal?"

Secretary Hay said that the president was earnestly working to the end of mitigating the horrors of war, and called attention to the president's recent intimation that he will ask for a second conference of the nations of the earth at The Hague.

The responses for the foreign delegates were made by Rt. Rev. John Percival, D. D., bishop of Hereford, of London, and John Lund, member of the Norwegian parliament. Bishop Hereford said that the presence of Secretary Hay in itself gave a new character to the gathering. He felt grateful that the secretary's address should have been given in behalf of the President of the United States, as well as in his own behalf. "Mr. Hay is well known in Europe, and greatly respected and honored," the bishop continued. "His address will be far more valued in Europe because it contains words of Mr. Hay. It will be read all over the world and will have its influence in cabinets and chancellories, where no words of ours would be listened to at all."

Bishop Hereford then expressed the opinion that a change was coming in peace affairs of the world. "Our hope for peace," the speaker said, "is fixed upon the international policy of the United States in years to come." He declared that the nations of the world were looking to the United States to lead in the matter of adopting peace universally. In closing Bishop Hereford thanked God that the time had come when there will be no more wars of religion. He declared that the nations must get rid of the idea of national dominance and join in the national and international co-operation.

Mr. Lund presented the greetings of his country. He discussed in a general way the horrors of war and the necessity of the adoption of principles of peace for the development of the world. He bespoke the hearty support of Norway to any plan looking toward the spreading of peace in all quarters of the globe. In closing he laid marked emphasis upon the hospitable reception which he and the others from abroad had received in this country.

The other speakers were George R. Jones, president of the Massachusetts state senate, who welcomed the congress on behalf of the state, in the absence of the governor and lieutenant governor at Worcester. Mayor Collins spoke for the city of Boston.

A suggestion came in a message from Sir Thomas Barclay, a prominent Englishman, who has long taken an interest in the peace movement. The message was as follows:

"I am very sorry I am unable to attend the Boston conference. I attach immense importance to that conference, because such a number of distinguished, practical men have taken an interest in it. The next greatest step taken in the history of international relations will, I expect, be a treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and America. I wish the conference great success in their meeting."

The meeting was closed by all present joining in a hymn written especially for the occasion.

Parker In Touch With Campaign

New York, Oct. 4.—A glance into Judge Parker's private reception room at his apartments at the Hotel Seville reveals a veritable political workshop. It only needs a view of the stacks of correspondence and imposing-looking documents to corroborate the report that Parker intends spending much time between now and election day in New York, where he can keep in close touch with the campaign. Many reports are being made to Parker by individual workers which do not pass through the hands of the national committee and which are given his personal attention.

Lawyer's Shots All Told

Dublin, Ga., Oct. 4.—J. E. Hathaway, superintendent of the county chain gang, was shot and killed by Earl Camp, a lawyer. Camp says that Hathaway was intoxicated and attempted to prevent a woman passing him on the street. The woman cried for help and Camp went to her aid. This angered Hathaway, who knocked Camp down. While on his knees, Camp says, he pulled his pistol and fired five times. Each bullet went through Hathaway's body and he was killed almost instantly.

Democratic and License Gain In Connecticut Town Elections

New Haven, Oct. 4.—A net gain of one town to the Democrats, and a gain of two towns to the license column tells in brief the story of the town elections in Connecticut. An entire absence of partisan strife for office took from the elections the chief interest and it was only where there had been agitation by the no-license advocates that the vote bore comparison with that of last year.

The leaders of both the leading political parties had stated that the results of the elections could have no bearing on the November election and their opinion was well founded, for the figures have a purely local significance. For officers 128 towns went Republican as last year, while the Democrats got 33, as compared with 32 last year.

Great Damage by Runaway Engine

Boston, Oct. 4.—A "wild" engine with empty cab and no headlight escaped from the Roxbury shops of the New Haven railroad last evening, and after running a quarter of a mile collided head-on with an outbound Dedham train. Both locomotives were wrecked. The engineer of the passenger train was slightly bruised and a man and woman were cut by flying glass from a broken lamp, but not seriously injured. None of the others on the train suffered more than a severe shaking up.

Frost Cut Down Corn Output

Bangor, Me., Oct. 4.—A prominent broker in canned goods says of the sweet corn pack in Maine: "Just before the frost of last week I estimated the pack at 75 percent of the average. I now estimate it at 65 to 70 percent. For the last two or three years the pack has not much exceeded 300,000 cases, but previous to that period it ranged between 700,000 and 1,000,000 cases."

Thief May Become Murderer

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 4.—Frank J. Sharkey discovered a sneak thief in his room and while struggling with him was stabbed in the abdomen and head and is not expected to live. The injured man's sister fought the thief, but he escaped. The police traced him about the city for a time, but he disappeared and all efforts to locate him were futile.

Slaughter Begins Early

Fall River Weavers Decide to Continue the Fight

WON'T ACCEPT REDUCTION

Also Declare Themselves Opposed to Twelve-Loom Arrangement--Outspoken Non-Union Man Roughly Treated

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 4.—The first hostile demonstration in the city since the first two days of the strike occurred after a general meeting of weavers yesterday. A mob of a thousand people surrounded William Kershaw, a non-union weaver, and policemen had to take the man to the station until the crowd dispersed. They hooted and cursed, but no blood was shed.

Kershaw attended a mass meeting of weavers and made the following motion: "Mr. Chairman: I move that a committee of 25 be chosen from this meeting to confer with the manufacturers in regard to the grievances of the weavers and that they give an early reply." The motion was not seconded and the incident might have passed off if a motion was not then made by another weaver to the effect that no weaver should run more than eight looms. Kershaw replied that the president of the union had said at a recent meeting that the weavers could not stand out against the 12-loom system if improvements were made and the work were made as easy as 8-loom work.

From all parts of the hall rose loud cries of denunciation, and the 8-loom motion was carried, with Kershaw's vote alone against it. After the meeting the angry weavers followed Kershaw from the hall, hooting and jeering, and an officer had to run to Kershaw's protection. Women spat at him and he stood in defiance of them until the policeman concluded to take him to the station. As Kershaw was coming from the hall his hat was crushed on his head, but he escaped other violence.

A mass meeting of union and non-union weavers was held in the Bijou Theatre. It was the largest gathering of weavers held since the strike began, 10 weeks ago. It was voted not to accept the wage reduction and not to go to work until the notices were taken down. It was also voted not to go back to work until manufacturers decided to return to the old 8-loom system.

This latter vote puts a new phase on the strike and manufacturers are not agreed on the policy to be followed. Some of them want to have the request for a conference granted. Others say it is useless to talk over the situation further while the operatives are in the frame of mind indicated by the weavers during yesterday's meeting. While no formal meeting of the executive committee has been held, the members have talked with each other, and they were busy yesterday trying to get all the majority sentiment among the signers as to the policy now to be followed.

News that Samuel Gompers is to be in this city today and address a mass meeting of operatives has also served to add another feature of uncertainty to the situation. It is believed his presence will rouse great enthusiasm among the strikers and will tend to prolong the idleness. Under these conditions manufacturers as a rule are disposed to be slow in the matter of holding a conference which promises little more than an opportunity to emphasize what has been said from the beginning about the wage reduction.

Before the news of the weavers' action reached manufacturers there was some talk of an early reopening of the mills and some mill men said Oct. 17 would see a united attempt to start. But since the meeting the determination to say nothing about a reopening is growing and there is danger that nothing will be done until the first of November. President Borden says that no meeting of the signers was called yesterday, but today it is likely that an answer will be sent to the letter from the Merchants' association suggesting a conference. He believes no harm will come from a conference, but he does not feel as hopeful of good results as he and others did a few days ago.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist.

CHAPTER IX.

I KNOW not how Captain Calvin Tabor managed his part to transship those goods without discovery, but he had a shrewd head, and no doubt the captain of the Earl of Fairfax another, and by 8 o'clock that May day the Golden Horn lay at her wharf discharging her cargo right lustily with such openness of zeal and shouts of encouragement and groans of labor 'twas enough to acquaint all the colony. And straightway to the great house they brought my Lady Culpeper's fallals and clamped them in the hall where we were all at supper. Mistress Mary sprang to her feet and ran to them and bent over them. "What are these?" she said, all in a quiver.

"The goods which you ordered, madam," spoke up one of the sailors, with a grin which he had copied from Captain Tabor, and pulled a forelock and ducked his head.

"The goods," said she, speaking faintly, for hers was rather the headlong course of enthusiasm than the secret windings of diplomacy.

"Art thou gone daft, sweetheart? The goods of which you gave the list this morning, which have but now come in on the Golden Horn," spake up Catherine sharply.

Madam Cavendish was at table that night, though moving with grimaces from the stiffness of her rheumatic joints, and she ordered that the sailors be given cider, the which they drank with some haste and were gone. Then Madam Cavendish asked Mistress Mary, with her wonderful keenness of gaze, which I never saw excelled, "Are those the goods which you ordered by the Golden Horn?" But I answered for her, knowing that Madam Cavendish would pardon such presumption from me. "Madam, those are the goods. I have it from Captain Calvin Tabor himself."

Mistress Mary gave a little gasp and looked at me and looked at her sister Catherine, and well I knew it was on the tip of her tongue to out with the whole to her grandmother. And so she would doubtless have done had not her wonderment and suspicion that maybe in some wise Catherine had conspired to buy for her in England the goods of which she had cheated herself and the terror of doing harm to her sister and me. But never saw I a maid go so white and red and make the strife within her so evident.

We were well nigh through supper when the goods arrived, and Madam Cavendish ordered some of the slaves to open the cases, which they did forthwith, and all my Lady Culpeper's finery was displayed.

Never saw I such a rich assortment, and, calling to mind my Lady Culpeper's thin and sour visage, I wondered within myself whether such fine feathers might in her case suffice to make a fine bird, though some of them were for her daughter Cate, who was fair enough. Nothing would do but Mistress Mary, with her lovely face still strange to see with her consternation of puzzlement, should severally display every piece to her grandmother and hold against her complexion the rich stuffs to see if the colors suited her.

Madam Cavendish was pleased to express her satisfaction with them all, though with some demur at the extravagance. "'Tis rich enough a wardrobe for my Lady Culpeper," said she, at which innocent shrewdness I was driven to hard straits to keep my face grave, but Mistress Catherine was looking on with a countenance as calm as the moon which was just then rising.

Madam Cavendish was pleased especially with one gown of a sky color, shot with silver threads, and ordered that Mistress Mary should wear it to the ball which was to be given at the governor's house the next night.

When I heard that I started, and Catherine shot a pale glance of consternation at me, but Mistress Mary flushed rosy red with rebellion.

"I have no desire to attend my Lord Culpeper's ball, madam," said she.

"Lord Culpeper is the representative of his majesty here in Virginia," said Madam Cavendish, with a high head, "and no granddaughter of mine absents herself with my approval. To the ball you go, madam, and in that sky colored gown, and no more words. Things have come to a pretty pass." So saying, she arose and, leaning heavily on her stick, with her black maid propping her, she went out. Then turned Mistress Mary imperiously to us and demanded to know the meaning of it all. "Whence came these goods?" said she to Catherine.

"On the Golden Horn, sweetheart; 'tis the list you gave this morning," replied Catherine, without a change in the fair resolve of her face.

"Pish!" cried Mary Cavendish. "The list I gave this morning was my Lady Culpeper's, and you know it. Whence came these?" And she spurned at a heap of the rich gleaming things with the toe of her tiny foot.

"I tell you, sweetheart, on the Golden Horn," replied Catherine. Then Mary turned to me in a rage. "The truth I will have," she cried out. "Whence came these goods?"

"On the Golden Horn, madam," I said.

She stamped her foot, and her voice rang so shrill that the black slaves, carrying out the dishes, rolled alarmed eyes at her. "Think you I will be treated like a child?" she cried out. "What means all this?"

Then close to her went Catherine and flung an arm around her and leaned her smooth fair head against her sister's tossing golden one. "For the sake of those you love and who love thee, sweetheart," she whispered.

But Mistress Mary pushed her away and looked at her angrily. "Well, what am I to do for their sakes?" she demanded.

"Seek to know no more than this. The goods came on the Golden Horn but now, and 'tis the list you gave this morning."

"But it was not my list, and I deceived my grandmother, and I will go to her now and out with the truth. Think you I will have such a falsehood on my soul?"

Catherine leaned closer to her and whispered, and Mary gave a quick, wild glance at me, but I know not what she said. "I pray thee seek to know no more than that the goods came but now in a boat from the Golden Horn, and 'tis the list you gave this morning," said Catherine aloud.

"They are not mine by right, and well you know it." Then a thought struck me, and I said, with emphasis, "Madam, yours by right they are and shall be, and I pray you to have no more concern in the matter."

Then, so saying, I hastened out and went through the moonlight to the wharf to seek Captain Tabor and the captain of the Earl of Fairfax, who had come with his goods to see to their safety. Both men were pacing back and forth, smoking long pipes, and Captain Watson of the Earl of Fairfax, a small and eager spoken man, turned on me the minute I came within hearing. "Where be my Lady Culpeper's goods?" said he. "'Tis time they were here and I on my way to the ship. Devil take me if I run such a risk again for any man."

Then I made my errand known. I had some fifty pounds saved up from the wreck of my fortunes; 'twas a third more than the goods were worth. Would he but take it, pay the London merchant who had furnished them, and have the remainder for his trouble?

"Trouble, trouble!" he shouted out. "Trouble! By all the foul fiends, man, what am I to say to my Lady Culpeper? Have you ever had speech with her that you propose such a game with her?"

Captain Tabor burst out with a loud guffaw of laughter. "You have not seen the maid for whom you run the risk, Dick," said he. "'Tis the fairest"—

HEART WEAKENED

Postmaster General Payne Dies After Long Sinking Spell

THE END WAS PEACEFUL

Final Breakdown of One of Republican Party's Leading Advisors Due to Trying Political Duties and Postal Trouble

Washington, Oct. 5.—Henry C. Payne, postmaster general of the United States, a member of the national Republican committee, a stalwart member of his party, with the history of which both in his home state and nationally he has been identified for many years, died at his apartments at the Arlington hotel at 6:10 o'clock last night, aged 60 years. The death and its cause was announced in the following official bulletin issued by the attending physicians:

"The postmaster general died at 6:10 p. m. He died peacefully, without a struggle. Cause of death, disease of mitral valve and dilation of the heart."

HENRY C. PAYNE.

Mr. Payne had been in poor health for at least two years, but his last illness covered only seven days, an attack of heart trouble last week precipitating the end at a time when after a rest he seemed to have recovered a small measure of his vitality impaired by years of arduous labor. Death came after nearly six hours of unconsciousness.

The last day had been one during which practically all hope had been abandoned for some hours. The approach of dissolution began during the noon hour, when the sick man lost consciousness and no longer recognized those whom he had attempted to cheer during his illness by saying to them that he was all right.

The death of the postmaster general came as the result really of a succession of sinking spells, due to a weak heart that enfeebled the sick man, until finally the heart literally gave out.

Mr. Payne, in the capacity of member of the Republican national committee, had participated in six presidential campaigns and during the last four of them was a member of the executive committee of the national committee. He was the acting chairman of the national committee during the interim between the death of Senator Hanna and the election of Secretary Cortelyou as its head. The trying duties that then devolved upon him, supplementing as they did the strain of the postal investigation, sapped his vitality and led to his final breakdown.

During the sinking spell which ended in his death Mr. Payne suffered no pain, and was unconscious all the time. His breathing had become more and more difficult and he was unable to swallow, though the doctors sought to give him milk, coffee and beef tea.

Milwaukee People Feel Sorry

Milwaukee, Oct. 5.—News of the death of Postmaster General Payne, while not unexpected, came as a shock to his friends and acquaintances in Milwaukee, which has been his home city for the past 40 years. Expressions of regret are heard on every hand.

Cortelyou to Succeed Payne

Washington, Oct. 5.—In succession to Mr. Payne, George B. Cortelyou, chairman of the Republican national committee, will become postmaster general. Cortelyou's appointment to this position was determined upon several months ago by President Roosevelt, when Payne indicated his desire to retire from the department on account of the precarious state of his health. Mr. Payne would have resigned the portfolio long ago had it not been for the then pending investigation of the affairs of the department, but he said that he could not relinquish the duties of the office while the investigation was pending and expressed his determination to carry it to a conclusion. The intense mental and physical strain incident to the direction of the postal inquiry very seriously undermined his strength.

Poor Excuse For Lack of Courtesy

London, Oct. 5.—The Daily Graphic alludes editorially to the absence of any public courtesy towards the officers and men of the four cruisers of the American European squadron, which arrived at Gravesend Sept. 24 and which it excuses on the ground that London is so huge that it is difficult to organize collective action.

Church Workers.

The Senior Class of the Wollaston Unitarian Sunday school has made great improvements in the vestry of the church, this year. This class of boys gave what they called a "Coney Island fair," at the vestry, last February, and made about eighty dollars, which they voted to use for church improvements.

With a part of this money, they first wired the vestry. Electricians were not hired, but the boys set to work, themselves, and soon the vestry was as well wired as if professionals had been at work, and they had only expended the cost of the material.

The next work of the boys was to take down a partition between the library and kitchen, each of which were much too small for the uses to which they were put.

Now the kitchen is enlarged, the walls are cleaned, and painted, and the woodwork is varnished. The only outside help which was called in, was the services of a mason for one or two hours.

Boys who are willing to spend their time in such employment can certainly be said to have a deep interest in the welfare of their church.

CARLO IS DEAD.

The Friend of the City Square Patrolman Will Be Missed.

Carlo, the dog owned by Fred Betts, is dead. Poison administered by some person unknown is said to have been responsible for his demise. He probably died Sunday night, for he was found Monday in a field off Newcomb place.

He was a very clever dog. His delight was to accompany the night policeman in City Square on his beat. During the day he would sometimes go to his home or sleep on one of the sidewalks in City Square. At night, however, he was sure to be found dodging the heels of the policeman. Time and time have the officers tried to drive him away, but he would not budge. He would lie on the sidewalk in such a manner as to obstruct free passage, and many persons have fallen over him. No matter how hard a kick he got, however, he never offered to bite anyone.

Let anyone attack an officer, however, and he was alert.

He was independent as regard to his food, and while passing along the sidewalk, if he saw any dainty morsel hanging outside the market that pleased him, he would reach up and help himself.

His breed was a St. Bernard, and he was said to be the largest dog in the state. Frequenters of City Square will miss him.

GERMANY WAGES

Less than 30 Cents per Day in Some Provinces---Living High.

Thanks to Congressman McNary, the Ledger is receiving the "Daily Consular Reports," and they contain much of value and interest. Richard Guenther, consul-general at Frankfort, Germany shows that the conditions in America are much better than in Germany. He says:

Mr. R. Bruschke, secretary of the teamsters' union of Dresden, has published a volume entitled "Local Wages of Common Day Laborers." The German Empire is divided, for the purpose of this publication, into 1,939 districts, for which the local wages of male and female adult and male and female youthful laborers are given.

The wages of adult male laborers vary from 23.8 cents a day, in some parts of the province of Silesia, to 83.3 cents at Bremen. In the principal German cities the day wages for unskilled labor of adults are as follows: Berlin, 69 cents; Hamburg, 71.4 cents; Bremen, 83.3 cents; Aix la Chapelle, 57 cents, Breslau, 57.1 cents; Dusseldorf, 71.4 cents; Hanover, 64.3 cents; Cologne, 59.5 cents; Munich, 71.4 cents; Frankfort, 73.8 cents; Dresden, 66.6 cents; Leipzig, 71.4 cents; Stuttgart, 71.4 cents; Stettin, 59.5 cents; Mannheim, 64.3 cents; Konigsberg, 55.5 cents; Nuremberg, 67 cents; Magdeburg, 57.5 cents. It is somewhat surprising that wages in the metropolis, Berlin, should be lower than in a number of other German cities.

The lowest wages in Germany prevail in the purely agricultural districts in the eastern provinces, adjoining Russia. The highest wages are paid in the German seaports and in the industrial centres.

The hours of labor are never less than ten a day, and are frequently twelve.

When it is borne in mind that the necessaries of life, like meats and breadstuffs, are as high as and even higher than in the United States, and that rents of houses are nearly if not quite as high, the wages of unskilled laborers seem very low to an American.

—A Russian named Ivanhoff has written a book on the students of the University of Moscow. He asserts that most of them are dolts and good-for-nothings. The average amount each one has to spend is $13 a month; 11 per cent have no income at all, and depends on charity or help themselves along by giving lessons at $1.50 a month, or reading proofs in printing offices, or serving as choristers in the theatres.

RECOUNT OF VOTES.

The Lead of Messrs. Freeman and Nicoll Increased.

The Registrars of Voters met at City Hall Tuesday evening to recount the votes cast at the recent caucus for candidates for Representative to the General Court by the Republicans. The recount was held on a petition of Edward J. Sandberg, who was defeated for nomination by three votes by Harry S. Nicoll.

The recount was held in the Board of Health office and the votes of Wards One, Two, Three and Five were counted.

There were some changes by the recount, but the totals gave Nicoll a larger lead.

Lawyer McKay was present to represent Mr. Sandberg, and Frank Tinney was present as the representative of Mr. Nicoll.

The Registrars made quick work of the recount, going through 100 votes nearly every five minutes.

Ward One was the first to be recounted. In this ward Nicoll gained two votes, the others remaining the same.

In Ward Two, Taylor gained five votes and the other candidates remained the same.

In Ward Three Freeman and Nicoll gained one each, and John Roberts got one vote.

In Ward Five there was no change.

As a resut of the recount Nicoll increase his lead over Sandberg from three to six votes.

The vote for each candidate follows:

	Recount.	Caucus Vote.
Freeman	615	614
Nicoll	578	575
Sandberg	572	572
Taylor	65	60
Roberts	1	0
Broughton	1	1

A CHURCH HOME.

Appeal of Pastor and Calling Committee of Quincy Point Church.

The Quincy Point church should retain its publicity agent just as long as her services can be secured. An example of her good work is shown in the circular issued this week to the people of the district. It should pave the way for successful work.

The appeal in itself should result in a large increase in the church attendance at Quincy Point. If it is supplemented by a little personal work by an active committee there can be no doubt of big returns.

All people whether they go to church often or not desire a church home. At marriages and deaths, and in times of sickness, the services of a clergyman are appreciated. If half of the people at Quincy Point will give the Washington street church encouragement they will soon have a church of which they will be proud. There are many ways in which a church can be a blessing to a community if it has loyal workers and encouragement.

The appeal of the publicity agent above referred to, signed by the pastor and Calling Committee, reads as follows:

The Washington Street Congregational church, corner Washington and South street, Quincy Point is the only church in this section of the city. It can be made a great power for good in our midst.

The pastor, Rev. Leon H. Austin, is trying to do his part well, but one person cannot do it all; will you be one to aid him? How one may assist. By his presence at any or all of the services of the church.

Sunday Services: preaching service, 10.45 A. M.; Sunday school, 12.00 M.; Christian Endeavor society, 6.45 P. M.; evening song and preaching service, 7.30 P. M. Mid-week prayer meeting Friday, 7.30 P. M.

Can you sing? Mr. T. B. Pollard, No. 29 Edison street, is chorister—he would be pleased to have additions to the choir. If you can sing, little or much, come and help in the Sunday evening song service.

The Sabbath school is the stronghold of the church. Join it. If you have children let them attend it regularly. Mr. Charles H. Sherburne, No. 608 South street, is superintendent. He is greatly in need of teachers. Will you volunteer? Gladden his heart by helping him in this work, in which he has been engaged for years. If your home duties are so great, your health so uncertain, that this is impossible, drop a card to Supt. Sherburne and express your willingness to belong to the Home Department. Some one will call and explain the plan, and be pleased to enroll you as a member.

Join the Christian Endeavor Society. Another bulwark of the church. You can help make it social, educational, moral and spiritual. A direct path to church membership.

The mid-week prayer meeting of the church needs you. It needs you whether you are a Christian or not. Come and be convinced. We earnestly and cordially invite you to make this your church home. Come amongst us, and we will make every effort to make it pleasant for you.

Accident to Expressman.

A driver of one of Drew's Weymouth express teams drank more than was good for him on Tuesday, and that evening while driving homeward through Washington street at Quincy Point he lost his balance and fell from his team. He was carried to the office of Dr. Middleton and from there removed to the police station in the patrol wagon. Here City Physican Welch looked him over and found he had escaped with a few bruises. He was then locked up for drunkenness.

Birthday Party.

A surprise party was given Miss Anna Jacobsen on Tuesday, her birthday, at her home on Kendrick avenue, friends being present from Roslindale, Newton, Boston and Quincy. The evening was pleasantly passed with piano solos, singing, games, etc. The party broke up at a seasonable hour leaving many pretty gifts and wishing the young lady many happy returns of the day. Refreshments were served during the evening.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ The suggestion that Gov. Bates may allow the seat of the late Senator Hoar to go unfilled until the legislature may fill the vacancy is hardly to be taken seriously and looks rather as the effort of some unwise friend to make it possible for the governor himself to enter the race for the honor with an equal start with the others. But the governor is not likely to avail himself of that opportunity, nor will he sacrifice any of his own privileges in the contest if he makes an immediate selection of a temporary successor.—Haverhill Gazette.

A SPEECH UNFIT TO BE MADE

Bourke Cockran's Remarks Condemned by Democratic Party Organ.

[From the Brooklyn Eagle, Sept. 19.]

The Eagle published Bourke Cockran's speech in full on Sunday. That much was due to news. The Eagle gave to the speech not only full publication, but prominent placement. That was due to the magnitude of the meeting. The Eagle made no comment upon the speech when it published it, but cannot withhold candid comment from it today with justice to its readers or to itself.

As much of the speech as condemned the conduct of the governor of Colorado against mobs which claimed to act as labor organizations should not have been delivered and should be pointedly condemned by every law abiding newspaper. The mobs were made up of murderers, maimers, terrorizers and outlaws. As many as twenty-one murders and twice as many maimings were scored against them. Arson and terrorism further decorated the conduct of these "organized" outlaws. They threw down law. They sacrificed life. They wounded whom they could not kill, and they followed such performances, congenial to them, with dynamite and the torch. What they did was infamous. The condition which they brought about was intolerable. They made war, with its worst atrocities, on government, on order, on property and on life.

What was done against them by the state government of Colorado, either in its judicial or in its military capacity, was rightly done, bravely done, laudably done, sternly done, admirably well done. We hope that the doing of it will be approved by the people of Colorado. It will be approved by them if they love liberty, respect human and natural rights and deserve to enjoy those rights. It will be approved if the punishment of murderers is to be preferred to murder as an industry and if the vindication of law is to be preferred to the coronation of systematized crime.

It should be incredible that even Bourke Cockran should attack the action and misrepresent the record of the governor and government of Colorado in this matter. But, being not incredible, because he did so his condemnation of it should itself be condemned, and the injury which without rebuke of him would ensue to those whom he professed to advocate should be repaired as far as it can be, as explicitly, as earnestly and as soon as possible.

From much that Bourke Cockran said about free trade and a glorification of boycotts, from much that he said on collateral subjects, the Eagle differs, but those are matters of mere opinion, however unwise, premature or overdogmatic Bourke Cockran's opinions on them may be. They can be let pass. The things which we have detailed and denounced were immoral, incendiary and scandalous. We can imagine nothing more hurtful than those things to the cause which Bourke Cockran would or would affect to favor. As that cause is sincerely supported by the Eagle, this paper feels bound to note and to denounce the injury to that cause which Bourke Cockran, wittingly or unwittingly, has sought to inflict upon it. His was a speech, in the respects set forth, unfit to be made

NO BACKING DOWN

Fall River Operatives Will Not Accept Reduced Wages

TO ATTEND CONFERENCE

Foregone Conclusion That It Will Prove Fruitless--Gompers Urges Continuance of Struggle and Criticises Manufacturers

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 5.—The Textile council received a letter from the Retail Merchants' association stating that the cotton manufacturers had agreed to meet the operatives in conference on Thursday afternoon. It was voted to attend the conference and the operatives will be represented by the five secretaries of the local unions. The secretaries say that, while they are willing to attend a conference, they do not believe that it will result in any settlement of existing differences. The small riot Monday, they say, shows the temper of the weavers as nothing else could do. The temper of the other operatives is the same, and now that the real strike is commencing, there will be no backing down. The manufacturers and public generally do not believe that the conference will have any definite result.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, with which the United Textile Workers is affiliated, spoke at the Academy of Music, which was filled to overflowing with union and non-union operatives. Mr. Gompers was frequently interrupted by applause. Of the local situation he said that the reduction of 10 percent, accepted last year under protest, was something he could not understand. The operatives might as well have said "I thank you" to the manufacturers, for if that reduction had not been accepted in such a spirit the present reduction coming as a remedy for a falling market gave the manufacturers the idea that they must always look to the same remedy if the market continued bad. They could not economize on mills or machinery, but must look to the laborer.

"They don't want to cut into profits and dividends," he said. "For many years they have held full sway with the operatives and they think it is not necessary to give them a second consideration, but simply declare that they are going to cut. The only criticism I have to make of the managers is this: It is a blind, short-sighted policy to try to retain markets or gain markets by a reduction in the wages of the working people. If you reduce wages and allow it to go on it is very much like the maxim of the beginner in sin. The first step seems hard to take, but once in sin and wrong the next step is not hard. If the first reduction is accepted it involves another, and if these are successfully enforced upon the working people of the United States it simply means that in time the great sovereign American people would be reduced to the condition of the Orientals."

In closing, Gompers urged the operatives to continue the fight valorously so that their children and their children's children might look back with pride to the fight of 1904. At the conclusion of his address Gompers left the hall and President Golden spoke of the disturbance of Monday, urging the people to maintain order that the sympathy of all might remain with them.

BURMAN PLEADS GUILTY

Admits Smuggling and Conspiracy to Defraud Government

Boston, Oct. 5.—The trial of the alleged smuggling cases involving the Glasgow Manufacturing company, a customs broker and two government examiners, has started in the United States district court. No case in recent years has brought such a solid array of counsel into this court, or required so elaborate arrangement for the accommodation of the parties interested.

The six defendants in the case were Simon Burman, Samuel Grunburg, C. F. Baitler, who constituted the Glasgow Manufacturing company; President William Munroe of the firm of Stone & Downer company; J. W. Trafton and J. A. Shedd, who were examiners at the custom house.

Before the jury was impanelled, Simon Burman, one of the defendants, retracted his plea of "not guilty," made after the indictment, and pleaded guilty.

The defendants are charged with conspiracy to defraud the United States government out of duties on imported merchandise, and with having entered merchandise below their actual value. The Glasgow Manufacturing company people are alleged to have imported the goods and to have been in conspiracy with the other three defendants, so as to have the goods passed at the Boston custom house.

Concord, Mass., Oct. 5.—With fitting simplicity, the last services over the body of Senator Hoar were held in this town, the place of his birth, and several hundred of the senator's former townsmen reverently followed the body to the place of its burial in Sleepy Hollow cemetery. In the First Parish church a service of Scripture reading, song and prayer was conducted. Pastor MacDonald spoke no words of eulogy, reading instead Lowell's poem on Channing. Two of Senator Hoar's favorite hymns were sung by a quartet. At the grave brief services of burial were held and the body was committed to the grave.

It was his unpleasant duty in the latter place to oust the German's and Swedes who had made it famous. We wish to thank you for them. We have enjoyed them for months, and now we go back to our own church perfectly satisfied."

Peace Bureau Hopes That Powers May Intervene

ROOSEVELT COMMENDED

Struggles Between the Nations Could Be Averted by One Taking the Initiative In Referring Differences to The Hague

Boston, Oct. 5.—A general supplication, coupled with a demand, almost, for the institution of peace between nations of the world, was the keynote of the first deliberative session of the International Peace congress which was formally opened in this city. Delegates from the leading countries of the globe engaged in the proceedings, giving to the occasion all the dignity and importance of a momentous international assembly.

A feature of the session was an elaborate report received from the International Peace bureau for 1904, in which was reviewed what had been attained in the direction of peace by the peace workers of the world during the year just passed, and also was set forth the present war conditions of the world necessitating correctionary measures by those desiring the establishment of universal concord. The suggestion was made that some collective move might be made to induce the Russo-Japanese belligerents to return to peace. Regarding this the report said:

"It seems to us that at the present stage of the negotiations it is not impossible to find some middle ground between the extreme pretensions of the two powers. Furthermore, a war between Russia and Japan on the shores of the Yellow sea will, like most wars, settle nothing, but will serve only to prepare the way for others. It will necessarily result in the weakening of the two belligerents, and making them less capable of fulfilling their role in the civilization of the far east. An arrangement, on the other hand, based on mutual concessions recommended by the great powers, would leave both of them a sufficiently large sphere in those vast regions scarcely yet open to the commerce of the world."

Edwin D. Mead, chairman of the organization committee of the congress, spoke earnestly in favor of the reduction of great navies and a general disarmament among nations. Robert T. Paine, Sr., of Boston was elected president of the congress, and Dr. B. F. Trueblood, also of this city, secretary.

Responses were made by one delegate from each of the countries represented at the congress, including Alderman Snape of Liverpool for Great Britain. Mr. Snape referred to Secretary of State Hay's appearance at the peace meeting as the representative of the United States, and took occasion to remark upon what an astounding thing it would be considered in England did the British minister of foreign affairs officially represent Great Britain at a similar meeting. A general commendation of President Roosevelt's call for another Hague conference marked the other addresses.

Numerous letters and cablegrams were received by the congress, giving endorsement to the peace movemnt. A noticeably large number of greetings were received from Baptist denominations and conferences in various parts of the country. Memorials were also received from the New Orleans board of trade and the Philadelphia board of trade.

Two mass meetings under the auspices of the congress were held last night. At one was considered the work and influence of The Hague tribunal. Oscar S. Straus, formerly United States minister to Turkey, and a member of The Hague court, presided. Mr. Straus advocated a revision of The Hague treaty so that it might be rendered certain that when nations enter into a struggle some one of them would take the initiative in referring the difference to The Hague tribunal.

Joseph G. Alexander of England said that the International Law association, which he represented, always considered international arbitration as a great ideal worthy of attainment. He paid a high tribute to the purity and blameless public life of the late Senator Hoar. "In order to bring peace between nations," he said, "there must be a court of justice or arbitration. The Hague conference was first intended to consider the subject of disarmament; but, although unsuccessful in this, it achieved the wonderful success of constituting a permanent tribunal of arbitration. Public opinion must demand that all international disputes be submitted to this tribunal."

Mr. Alexander ended with an eloquent appeal for the spread of brotherly kindness.

The other mass meeting was conducted by the Christian Endeavor societies.

Former Cabinet Officials Are to Take the Stump For Parker

New York, Oct. 5.—More prominent Democrats yesterday flocked to the support of Judge Parker than on any previous day since the St. Louis convention. Among them were such men as James H. Eckels, comptroller of the currency under former President Cleveland; G. N. Morgan of Connecticut, treasurer of the United States under the same administration; Robert VanWyck, former mayor of New York; W. R. Hearst, Senators Brown of Georgia and Stone of Missouri; Captain Richmond P. Hobson, former Senator Murphy of Troy and former Governor Campbell of Ohio. Among other callers were a dozen men well known in national politics.

Judge Parker concluded his busy day with a dinner at the Hotel Seville, having as his guests Messrs. Hearst, Taggart and Sheehan. The dinner lasted for nearly three hours and every phase of the campaign was gone over. Mr. Hearst offered the columns of his papers and his influence as president of the National Association of Democratic Clubs to the service of Judge Parker.

Mr. Eckels will make speeches in several doubtful states, talking particularly on the general subject of finance. Mr. Morgan will devote most of his time to Connecticut and Van Wyck offered to make himself useful in any capacity the candidate desires to suggest. Captain Hobson will tour Alabama.

Olean, N. Y., Oct. 5.—Lieutenant Governor Higgins, the Republican candidate for governor, and his associates on the ticket chosen at the Saratoga convention, were formally notified of their nomination at the home of Higgins. Bruce, the nominee for lieutenant governor, and Julius Mayer, candidate for attorney general, responded for the remainder of the ticket.

New York Sure For Democrats

New York, Oct. 5.—Norman E. Mack, member of the Democratic national committee of New York, speaking of the election outlook, said: "The state of New York will return a majority of from 75,000 to 100,000 for both the Democratic national and state tickets. The reports received by the national committee from various sections of the country have been most satisfactory, especially from the so-called doubtful states."

Conyers, Ga., Oct. 5.—In the course of his speech here, Colonel Goree, Republican candidate for congress, was named as an "imfamous liar" by Colonel Livingston, present Democratic congressman and candidate to succeed himself. EMERGENCY RATION

A man has lived forty days without other food than his own fat.

Fat is man's emergency ration. The fat is stored in convenient hollows all over the body against the day of necessity.

Consumption makes heavy demand on the storage of fat. Nature uses fat to fight the disease. The crying need of the consumptive is fat.

Scott's Emulsion contains the best fat to be had, next to human fat itself. Scott's Emulsion is a natural substitute for human fat. It prevents waste. It furnishes the consumptive with nature's own weapon for fighting the disease.

Brockton Fair.

The public schools of Brockton were closed yesterday, the opening day of the Brockton fair, that all the children of that city might see the exhibits and witness the sports. All sports except horse racing were heartily entered into by the school boys. There were potato races, sack races, lace shoe races, 100-yard dashes, tug-of-war between representatives of the Lincoln, Union, Sprague and Whitman schools, and numerous sports.

At the nursery the wall is well covered with placards as follows:

DON'T FORGET
To Come Back
ONCE IN A WHILE And See If Your BABY IS HAPPY.

The horse racing was not very exciting as would naturally be expected the first day of the fair. Fall River's high school team defeated the Brockton high 10 to 0.

Today the attendance is very much larger and many of the citizens of Quincy are in attendance, but Thursday is the day and several of the large stores here will be closed all day or open for an hour or two in the morning.

TODAY'S COURT.

It took but little time to dispose of the cases that came before Judge Avery this morning

James Maguire was arraigned for exceeding the speed limit with an automobile on September 27 in the Blue Hills Parkway and pleaded not guilty. Three witnesses testified for the government and the officer who had timed the defendant testified that he covered 400 feet in thirteen seconds. The Judge informed the defendant that the government had made out a case against him, but allowed him to retract his plea of not guilty and plead nolo contendere, which he did and was fined fifteen dollars.

William F. Kennedy was charged with drunkenness. Case continued to November 29.

Patrick Shea pleaded guilty to a similar charge and his case was contined for sentence to Oct. 10.

Frank Stone, aged 15, was arraigned for destroying property of the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. Case continued till tomorrow when it will be heard in the juvenile session.

Mrs. Jennie E. Hannon pleaded guilty to maintaining a liquor nuisance and the case was continued to November 5 at the request of the officer to enable the defendant to pay her fine. The police were not disposed to be severe in this case because the defendant was only technically guilty, the real offenders being her boarders who persisted in bringing liquor to the house for their own use on Saturday nights.

Several bulk-heads have remained closed since the Sunday raids.

—The New York police authorities have decided after some discussion that women may smoke cigarettes while riding in automobiles if they want to.

☞All persons interested in the watches to be contested for at G. A. R. fair can obtain books at Mrs. I. M. Holt 32 Cottage street.

☞ Eyeglasses fitted scientifically. No guess work.—Williams.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus deprivihg the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist.

CHAPTER IX—(Continued).

"What care I for fair maids?" demanded the other. "Have I not a wife and seven little ones in old England? What think you a dimple or a bright eye hath of weight with me?"

"Time was, Dick," laughed Captain Tabor.

"Time that was no longer is," answered the other crossly; then to me, "Send down my goods by some of those black fellows, and no more parleying, sir."

"But, sir," I said, "'twill be a good fifteen pounds for Mistress Watson and the little ones when the merchant be paid."

"Go to," he growled out, "what will that avail if I be put in prison? What am I to say to my Lady Culpeper for the nondeliverment of her goods? Answer me that." Then came Captain Tabor to my aid with his merry shrewdness. "'Tis as easy as the nose on thy face, Dick," said he. "Say but to my lady that you have searched and the goods be not in the hold of the Earl of Fairfax, and must have miscarried, as faith they have, and say that next voyage you will deliver them and hold thyself responsible for the cost, as you well can afford with Master Wingfield's money."

"Hast ever heard my Lady Culpeper's tongue?" demanded the other. "'Tis easy to advise. Would you face her thyself without the goods in hand, Calvin Tabor?"

"Faith, and I'd face a dozen like her for fifteen pounds," declared Captain Tabor. Then, with another great laugh, "I have it; send thy mate, send thy deaf mate, Jack Tarbox, man."

"But she will demand to see the captain."

"Faith, and the captain will be on board the Earl of Fairfax seeing to a leak which she hath sprung and cannot leave her," said Tabor.

"But in two days' time the governor sails in my ship for England."

"Think ye the governor will concern himself about my lady's adornments when he be headed for England and out of reach of her complaints?"

"But how to dodge her for so long?"

"Dick," said the other solemnly, "much I have it in mind that a case of fever will break out upon the Earl of Fairfax by tomorrow or next day."

"Then think you that my lady will allow her lord the governor to sail?"

"Dick," laughed Captain Tabor, "governors be great men and you but a poor sailor, but when it comes to coin in wifely value thy weight in the heart of thy good Bridget would send the governor of Virginia higher than thy masthead. None but my Lady Culpeper need have hint of the fever."

"I have a sailor ailing," said the other doubtfully, "but he hath no sign of fever."

"'Tis enough," cried the other gayly. "His fever will rage in twelve hours enough to beat the 'tween decks."

"But," cried Captain Watson, speaking angrily and yet with a certain timidity, as men will do before a scoffing friend and their own accusing conscience, "you ask me to forswear my self."

"Nay, that I will not," cried the other. "By the Lord, I forgot thy conscience, good Dick. Well, I have enough from my ancestors of Plymouth to forswear and forswear again and yet have some to spare. I—I will go to my Lady Culpeper with the tale and save thy soul thy scruples and thy ears the melody of her tongue. I will acquaint her with the miscarriage of the goods and whisper of the sick sailor, and all thou hast to do is to loiter about Jamestown, keeping thy Bridget well in mind the while, and load thy ship with the produce of the soil which the beggars of Virginia give of their loyalty to his majesty King Charles, and then to take on board my Lord Culpeper and set sail."

"'Tis a fearful risk," groaned the other. "Though I am a poor man, and I will admit that my Bridget"—

"'Tis a fearful risk for you, Captain Tabor, and through you for my mistress," I interrupted, for I did not half like the plan.

"Our ships lay alongside, and I am hailed by a brother mariner in distress both at the prospect of the displeasure of a great and noble lady and the suspicion of his honesty, but for that latter will I vouch with my own and if needs be will give surety that the list of goods which she ordered shall be delivered next voyage," said Calvin Tabor.

"Her tongue, you know not her tongue," groaned the other.

"Even that will I dare for thee, Dick, for thee and that fair little maid who is dabbling her pretty fingers in that flaming pudding with which only the tough ones of a man should meddle," said Captain Tabor. "And as for risk for me, my sailor men be as much in the toils for Sabbath breaking as their captain, should yesterday's work leak out, and not a man of them knoweth the contents of those cases, though, faith, and I heard them marveling among themselves at the weight of feathers and silken petticoats, and I made port in the nighttime before, and not a soul knew of it nor the unlading save those which be bound to keep the secret for their own necks, and, and—well, Captain Tabor be not averse to somewhat of risk. It gives a savor to life." So saying he rolled his bright blue eyes at me and Captain Watson with such utter good nature and daredeviltry as I have never seen equaled.

It was finally agreed that Captain Tabor's plan should be carried out, and I wended my way back to Drake Hill with a feeling of triumph to which I of late years had been a stranger. I know of nothing in the poor life of a man equal to that great delight of being of service to one beloved.

I reflected with such ever increasing joy that it finally became an ecstasy, and I could almost, if seemed, see the colors of it in my path; how, had it not been for me, Mary Cavendish might have been in sore straits, and I verily believe I was as happy for the time as if she had been my promised sweetheart and was as proud of myself.

When about half way to Drake Hill I heard afar off a great din of bells and horns and voices, which presently came nearer. Then the road was filled up with the dancing May revelers, and verily I wondered not so much at those decrees against such practices before the Restoration, for it was as if the savages which they do say are underneath the outer gloss of the best of us had broke loose, and I wondered if it might not be like those mad and unlawful orgies which it was said the god Pan led himself in person through Thessalian groves.

Those honest country maids, who in the morning had advanced with rustic but innocent freedom, with their glossy heads crowned with flowers, and those lusty youths, who were indeed something boisterous, yet still held in a tight rein by decency, had seemingly changed their very natures, or rather, perhaps, had come to that pass when their natures could be no longer concealed. Along the road in the white moonlight they stamped as wantonly as any herd of kine; youths and maids with arms about each other and all with faces flushed with ale drinking, and the maids with tossing hair and draggled coats, and all the fresh garlands withered or scattered.

And the old graybeard who was Maid Marion was riotously drunk and borne aloft with mad and feeble gesturings on the shoulders of two staggering young men, and after him came the aged morris dancers, only upheld from collapse in the mire by mutual upholdings, until they seemed like some monstrous animal moving with uncouth sprawls of legs as multifold as a centipede, and wavering drunkenly from one side of the road to the other, lurching into the dewy bushes, then recovering by the joint effort of the whole.

High Episcopal Prelates In Convention at Bos on

PLEA BY BISHOP DOANE

Would Have Anglican Church Strive to Reach Better Understanding With Church of Rome and Various Protestant Bodies

Boston, Oct. 6.—What was without question the most remarkable assemblage of bishops, priests and laymen of the Episcopal church was that which met the eye within Trinity church when the office of holy communion was celebrated as the first service of the Episcopal general convention. From any point of view the service was an impressive one. Hosts representing the apostolic succession from all over the United States and even from China, Japan, Porto Rico, the Philippines, England, and her dependency, Canada, were to be seen in the long procession. All had assembled in Trinity to give glory to God and to ask for continued blessings on the Episcopal communion.

The English primate was last in a long procession of dignitaries which passed up the aisle of Trinity church, where the opening service was held in the presence of an immense congregation. He recited one of the prayers in the office of holy communion and read the gospel. The celebrant was Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle of Missouri, presiding bishop; the gospeller was Rt. Rev. James Carmichael, bishop coadjutor of Montreal, and the preacher Bishop Doane of Albany.

Bishop Doane welcomed the Archbishop of Canterbury and then devoted a large part of his sermon to the divisions in Christendom. His address referred to the barriers which separate the Anglican church—a church both Catholic and Protestant—from the other denominations, and considered how the barriers might be eliminated in some degree. He thought an attempt should be made to find the starting point of disagreement and thus to be in a position to reach a better understanding with the church of Rome and the various Protestant bodies. Bishop Doane added that the recognition of papal supremacy was impossible, but thought that the church might readily recognize the primacy of the bishop of Rome on account of the antiquity of the Roman see. His sermon was a plea for the broadening of the church's sphere.

In the house of deputies Rev. C. L. Hutchins, for 27 years its secretary, called the deputies to order. Several candidates for chairman were nominated, including Rev. Dr. Hutchins and Rev. Dr. McKim of Washington. Most of the broad church dioceses supported McKim, and he was elected on the second ballot by a vote of 201 to 160. The election was not made unanimous. Rev. Dr. Hutchins was the candidate of the high churchmen. He was re-elected secretary, but decided that after such a long service in that office he would decline. Rev. Dr. Anstis of Philadelphia, assistant secretary since 1877, was then elected to the position.

In the house of bishops, Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts was elected chairman, whose duty it is to aid the presiding bishop, Dr. Tuttle of Missouri. Rev. Dr. Hart of Middletown, Conn., was re-elected secretary.

The bishops of Albany and Massachusetts presented the Archbishop of Canterbury to the other bishops. The English primate briefly addressed the house, announcing that he would give his message to the church when he addressed the house of deputies.

The following are the officers of the club: President, William Thomas; Vice president, Mr. Smith; Secretary, Abner Packard; Treasurer, William Walker.

REASONS WANTED.

Why Did John O. Hall Withdraw from Representative Contest?

No one wishes to doubt the statement of John O. Hall that it "was for other reasons not connected with any city office" that he failed to file a nomination paper as a candidate for Representative, but many would like to know the reasons.

The voters were led to expect that at the Republican caucus they would have the privilege of making a selection of two nominees from five candidates. Many were assured by Mr. Hall, up to the last moment, that he was a candidate, and that under no circumstances would he withdraw. He said an effort had been made to keep him out, but it would not work.

With five candidates in the field, others doubtless thought it best to keep out, and it is not surprising that interest lagged when the field was reduced to three.

Many would have been pleased to support Mr. Hall in the caucuses, in preference to the other gentlemen, and they think an explanation is necessary.

FIRST OF COURSE.

Opening of the Bethany Brotherhood Entertainments.

The Bethany Brotherhood entertainment course has auspiciously opened at Bethany chapel on Wednesday evening. There was a full house to greet the Copely Square Concert Company of Boston and Curtis G. Morse, the entertainer.

The concert company includes three clever artists who gave a varied and interesting program. Encores were general, but perhaps the most popular numbers were the selections on the bells by Miss Marion Whitaker, especially Sousa's El Captain march. There were pleasing duets for violin and piano, and for mandolin and guitar, by Miss Blanch and Miss M. Isola Sears, and the latter also appeared in a duet for xylophones with Miss Whitaker. A selection from Romeo and Juliet was given as an xylophone solo, and there was also a charming violin solo. The last number was by the company, who rendered "Our Director" on banjo, xylophone and guitar.

Mr. Morse has appeared before a Quincy audience, and is always enjoyed. He was down this evening for three numbers and was recalled each time. His make-up, drollery and witticism were captivating, and the audience would have been pleased to hear him in more selections.

CHURCH WEDDING.

Popular Atlantic Young People Married Last Night.

The Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, was the scene of a brilliant wedding Wednesday evening when Miss Emma Gay Curtin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Curtin, and Mr. Frank Maxwell Coe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Coe, were united in marriage by the Rev. J. H. Whitaker of Manchester, Mass., formerly of Atlantic.

The bridesmaids,—Miss Alice G. Coe, sister of the groom, Miss Helen E. Comins of Wollaston, Miss Corinna P. Wilde of Atlantic, and Miss Addie May Ruggles of Dorchester, entered the church from the vestry, going down the center aisle to meet the bride who was escorted by her father, and preceded by her sister, Miss Helen Curtin, who acted as maid of honor. The bridal party then proceeded to the altar where they were met by the groom and his best man, Mr. Fred E. Chick of Malden.

The bride was beautifully gowned in poi de pæon trimmed with duchess lace. She wore the conventional veil, and carried bride roses. Her only jewel being a pearl and diamond brooch, the gift of the groom. The maid of honor was in pink mousseline de soie, and the bridesmaids' gowns were of white crepe de chine. They carried daybreak pinks tied with pink ribbon.

The ushers were Mr. Frank E. Curtin, brother of the bride, Mr. William E. Creelman of Cambridge, Mr. Herbert M. Bacon of Boston, and Mr. John Lingley of Wollaston.

The church was beautifully decorated under the personal supervision of Mr. Wilson J. Sanborn. About the altar was a forest of fir trees and evergreens, while palms, ferns, cut flowers and brilliant hydrangeas made a very fitting setting for the bridal party.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 233 Atlantic street which was attended by relatives and intimate friends, many coming from the surrounding cities.

The house was profusely decorated with asparagus vine and cut flowers, the receiving party standing in a bower of green, carrying out the general motif of decoration. Refreshments were served by Hendrie, caterer.

The display of gifts was both beautiful and extensive, showing the popularity of the bride and groom.

After a short trip the young couple will return to their new home at 41 Marion street, Wollaston, where they will receive their friends on Tuesdays after December first.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

It would give the people of Norfolk and Plymouth counties and of Massachusetts in general, considerable pleasure to see Hon. John D. Long the ex-Governor and the ex-Secretary of the Navy appointed as successor of the late Senator Hoar. He is an able speaker, and has all the qualifications for the position together with an excellent record as a public official. He has a National reputation and would maintain the prestige of the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts in the upper branch of Congress. We understand Gov. Bates is very favorable to his appointment.

THE SAND WASP.

Ingenious Manner In Which This Insect Uses a Hammer.

The deliberate use of a tool by a little sand wasp might well be supposed to indicate reasoning power, says an exchange. A well known naturalist, Dr. Peckham, watched a wasp dig a hole in the earth and deposit therein an egg, together with a spider which she had stung into paralysis to feed the grub which should be hatched in due course. Then she filled up the hole with sand or earth and jammed it down with her head.

When at last the filling was level with the ground she brought a quantity of fine grains of dirt to the spot, picked up a small pebble in her mandibles and used it as a hammer in pounding them down with rapid strokes, thus making this spot as hard and firm as the surrounding surface. Before we could recover from our astonishment at this performance she had dropped her stone and was bringing more earth. In a moment we saw her pick up the pebble and again pound the earth into place with it. Once more the whole process was repeated, and then the little creatures flew away.

"The whole of this performance," writes Sir Herbert Maxwell in "Memories of the Months," "is so unexpected that even Dr. Peckham's high reputation as a scrupulous observer might fail to convince skeptics that he had not been deceived, but similar behavior on the part of a wasp of the same species has been recorded independently by Dr. Williston of Kansas university."

The Talismanic Moonstone.

The remarkable peculiarity of the moonstone is that, while in all other gems internal seams are called flaws and detract from their value, in the moonstone they are called "magic mirrors, because those favored mortals who are gifted with the illumination of the astral light can by its aid read on those surfaces of milky white the reflections of the past and the promises of the future."

The Only Cure.

Binks—I wish they would cut out these ballad singers at the vaudeville. They make me tired. Jinks—Well, you might get somebody to remove their noses. Then they wouldn't have anything to sing through.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Stingy.

"Now I know," sobbed the six months' bride to her husband, growling over her extravagance, "why you used to call me a flower. You thought I was an orchid and that I could live on air."—New Orleans Picayune.

A PLEA FOR PEACE

Memorials to Be Sent Emperors of Fighting Nations

AMERICAN AID IS SOUGHT

President to Get Peace Advocates' Resolutions Relating to Friendly Intervention by the Powers In Far Eastern War

Boston, Oct. 6.—Resolutions intended to bring about, if possible, an end to the Russo-Japanese war, were adopted at the meeting of the International Peace Congress. By the terms of these resolutions the congress will address an appeal to the emperors of Russia and Japan to terminate the struggle, and each of the powers signatory of The Hague convention will be formally requested by the congress to press upon Russia and Japan the importance of putting an end without further delay to the present war.

It was also voted that the resolutions referring to friendly intervention by the powers be presented to President Roosevelt by a committee of the congress. The resolutions were passed after a lengthy discussion in which many of the most prominent foreign delegates participated.

During this discussion Delegate Creamer of England took occasion, while favoring the declarations, to characterize the treaty between England and Japan as a blunder, and to charge that this treaty doubtless had much to do in bringing on the Russo-Japanese war. Thereupon Great Britain's policy of being a party to the treaty was defended by Bryce Jones, M. P.

The deliberative proceedings of the day took on an added interest from the fact that a leading Hindoo from India, Baba Bharati, was introduced to speak as the representative of his country. The most intense applause that has been evoked thus far during the convention greeted the Hindoo, who, dressed in the bazarre costume peculiar to his people, delivered a passionate speech in almost clear English, denouncing on the one hand the attempt of Christianity to thrust Christianity upon India as its religion, and the policy of the English people of India invading Tibet.

It was voted during the session to refer the subject of reconciliation of France and Germany on the Alsace-Lorraine question to the Berne bureau for study by a special committee. Part of the phraseology of a cablegram prepared to be sent to Andrew Carnegie was objected to by a delegate from New York, and it was finally re-arranged so that Carnegie was hailed as an earnest worker for the world's better political order, instead of a worker for the world's "just and rational organization."

Three public meetings under the auspices of the congress were held last night. One was for workingmen in Faneuil Hall, where the principal speaker was Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. At Park street church a meeting was held by the women delegates to the congress. The duties of women in the peace cause was considered by several speakers, chief among them being Baroness von Suttner of Austria. The duties of business men in the peace movement was set forth in another meeting in Tremont Temple, with addresses by prominent merchants.

Tells Remarkable Story

Rome, Oct. 6.—Captain Baccari, who was sent by the Italian government to the Congo to study the country with a view to the possible settlement of Italians there, asserts that no sooner had he arrived in the Congo than he was poisoned at the instigation of state officials, and only escaped death because, being a physician, he was able to treat himself. Subsequently, Baccari alleges, the governor general tried to have him locked up as a lunatic.

Lightning Destroys Oil Plant

Findlay, O., Oct. 6.—The plant of the National Refining company was completely destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of upwards of $200,000. The fire started by lightning striking a 30,000-barrel tank. When the tank exploded thousands of barrels of burning oil were spread over the surrounding territory. Spectators who had gathered turned and fled wildly from the on-coming sea of fire. A number of persons were burned, but none fatally.

Payne's Death Causes Sorrow

Washington, Oct. 6.—A vast number of telegrams expressing sorrow at Mr. Payne's death have been received from all over the country, a large portion of them coming from Wisconsin. A request has been made by friends of the family in Milwaukee that consent be given for a public service in that city.

Unconditional Surrender

Chicago, Oct. 6.—Fourteen hundred members of the Amalgamated Rubber Workers' union, after a five weeks' strike against the leading rubber manufacturing companies, reported at the factories and announced their readiness to return to work under whatever terms were offered.

Creditors In the Lurch

New York, Oct. 6.—The petition of Floyd, Crawford & Co., involuntary bankrupts, shows debts of $212,172 and assets of $44,426. The indebtedness is all unsecured.

BOUNCED BY M'CLELLAN

Civil Service Commission and Park Commissioner Dropped

New York, Oct. 6.—W. P. Schmitt, commissioner of parks for the borough of the Bronx of Greater New York, and five members of the civil service commission have been summarily removed from office by Mayor McClellan.

The removal was made after an investigation of charges laid before the mayor by the Civil Service Reform association. These charges allege that Schmitt exploited positions in his department for political purposes by discharging certain employes and employing others in violation of the civil service rules, "with the co-operation of the civil service commission."

The men removed from office besides Schmitt are J. H. McCooey, president of the board, and his colleagues, Jerome Siegel, E. F. O'Connor and E. A. Crowninshield. Hal Bell, the other member of the board, had already resigned. In a letter to Bell, McClellan says that at the time he accepted Bell's resignation he was not aware of the seriousness of the charge, otherwise he would have refrained from acting upon it, that all the commissioners might be treated alike.

Half an hour after these officials were removed, the appointment of a new board was announced with Bird S. Coler, former comptroller, as president.

Resignation Causes Sensation

Montreal, Oct. 6.—A sensation has been created in political and marine circles over the resignation of Captain Salmon, wreck commissioner. That official was conducting the investigation into the Canalia-Cape Breton collision, and has given out for publication letters addressed to him by Raymond Prefontaine, minister of marine and fisheries, in which the minister sought to interfere with the rendering of the decision. Prefontaine's law firm are solicitors for the owners of the Canalia.

Dismissal Sentence Commuted

Washington, Oct. 6.—First Lieutenant Thomas Gunn, U. S. A., retired, was convicted recently by court martial at Fort Sheridan, Ills., of duplicating his pay accounts and sentenced to dismissal. The president has approved the findings and sentence of the court, "but in view of the unanimous recommendation of the court that clemency be extended, the sentence is commuted to a forfeiture of the officer's pay to $40 per month for a period of one year."

Peter Sells Is Dead

Columbus, O., Oct. 6.—Peter Sells, the showman, died last night at his home here of apoplexy, aged 55 years. He was stricken six weeks ago. He, with his brothers Ephraim, Allen and Lewis, established the Sells brothers shows in 1872. He had been in the show business continuously since. Only one of the four brothers, Lewis Sells, survives.

A St Vincent Phenomenon

Kingston, St. Vincent, Oct. 6.—A dust cloud overshadowed this island all day Sunday. It was accompanied by intense heat, giving the impression that the Soufriere volcano was erupting. No detonations were heard. An investigation was made by a party which ascended the mountain yesterday. They report there are no indications of an eruption.

Commander Sargent's Assignment

Washington, Oct. 6.—The navy department has detached Commander Sargent from duty as a member of the general board of the navy in this city and directed him to command the cruiser Baltimore, now in the Suez canal on her way to the Asiatic station. Commander Sargent will join his ship in Chinese wafers.

Crowds Coming to America

Vienna, Oct. 6.—There is a great increase in the number of emigrants going to America by the Cunard line. There are now 3000 awaiting passage at Fiume. The authorities are unable to find accommodations for them and the minister of the interior has been requested to allow them to sleep in empty railway cars.

Squatters Enter Protest

San Juan, P. R., Oct. 6.—One thousand squatters on lands assigned by presidential proclamation for army and navy purposes have protested to Governor Winthrop against the destruction of their houses, which they have been ordered to vacate. The governor will give consideration to the protest.

Hunter Shot In Back and Killed

Cleveland, Oct. 6.—Louis Sellbach, vice president of the Paul Schmidt company, wholesale liquor dealers in this city, was shot in the back and instantly killed while duck hunting on Lake Erie. Sellbach had been made a Democratic presidential elector two days ago.

Steel Plates For Japan

Minneapolis, Oct. 6.—Fifty cars of heavy steel plate, said to be intended for the Japanese government, are now being trans-shipped here. They are from the Carnegie company at Pittsburg and are consigned to the company's agent in Japan.

Speculated Unsuccessfully

Chicago, Oct. 6.—F. E. Roberts, produce commission dealer, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. Liabilities are scheduled at $268,000 and assets $4500. The failure was attributed to unsuccessful speculation.

Persistent Consumption Germs

St. Louis, Oct. 6.—That phthisis of the lungs cannot be cured was the statement made at the tuberculosis congress in a paper by Professor Otto Schroen of the Royal university of Naples, which explained that a patient suffering from consumption could live for years in apparent health, but under favorable circumstances the germ of the disease would become active and destroy the lung tissues.

Completely Wrecked at Last

Norfolk, Oct. 6.—Battered continuously by heavy seas since she dragged anchor and went ashore near Virginia beach last February, the big sailing ship Henry B. Hyde broke in two as a wrecking tug was endeavoring to drag her from the beach. The Hyde was bought by Norfolk men after she stranded and has been twice pulled off the beach, but each time was blown back again.

Plumbing, Heating and Gas Fitting.

Next to Washing Dishes

the most despised drudgery of house keeping is the care of the several fires and the sweeping up of the ashes and dust they produce. Unless, of course, you own a Hot-Water or Steam System — only one fire then needed and no dust or ashes in the living rooms.

IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators

Do not delay too long. Did not your experience last winter with the Old Hot Air Furnace teach you it was time to change. Compare the Cost of the Fuel saved in years to come, not the First Cost of the Heating job. Speaking of Plumbing, that's our stronghold. Try us and be convinced.

Declares That He Would Give Roosevelt a Battle Royal--Comparison of Platforms of the Two Great Parties

New York, Oct. 6.—Thomas E. Watson, nominee of the People's party for the presidency, was entertained by his friends last night at a "dollar dinner." Mr. Watson was late in arriving. He came alone, clad in a plain business suit. He walked through the long line of tables, looking neither to the right nor the left, and took his seat at the centre of the guests' table. This was the signal for prolonged cheers of welcome.

After Joseph Buchanan, Dr. John H. Girdner and J. G. P. Stokes had spoken Mr. Watson arose and began his speech by saying:

"Oh if the pretense up at Esopus would only get out of my way; Oh, if Judge Parker would only get out of my way and give me the Democratic papers and give me the Jeffersonian speakers and give me that noble army that followed Bryan in '96; if he would only give me all these I would show the Republican party and Theodore Roosevelt a great militant Democratic party from sea to sea. I would accept his challenge. I might not whip him, but he would know he had had a fight. I am a fighter.

"On July the fourth I wasn't even a newspaper item; but now they are fighting me with newspaper cartoons and editorials. I long for and love the thunder of the guns and if only Judge Parker would get out of my way and let me command the army that he may command, I would give Theodore Roosevelt a battle royal.

"The government which does not grant protection to all, equal opportunity to all, equal justice to all, prostitutes its power and is false to its mission. If your system is not what it should be, yours is the fault, for you have within your hands the weapon with which it was intended you should forever defend your liberties—the ballot.

"Where is the greater part of all this wonderful production of wealth which has taken place here for the last 100 years? Almost entirely it is in the hands of men who never created one dollar of it.

"Had the government governed justly, the probability is that we would never have had a labor question in this young republic—never a strike, never a lockout, never a Cripple Creek horror, never a Chicago pandemonium. The frightful tenement house cancer would not now be eating its way into the vitals of social order.

"In this campaign of 1904 Theodore Roosevelt might safely swallow Parker's platform without the slightest fear of an attack of acute indigestion; and Parker might take off his shoes, and waltz barefooted all over Roosevelt's platform and be in no danger of running a splinter in his foot.

"Jeffersonians. Your flag was pulled down at St. Louis, and you were left without leaders. I have picked up your flag from the ground where it lay and I call upon you to rally to it. Refuse, and you have done violence to your own sense of right. Refuse, and you have put party above principle."

ECONOMIC REFORM

Line on Which Bryan Will Fight After Election Is Over

Columbus, O., Oct. 6.—William J. Bryan, in a letter to Chairman Garber of the Democratic state committee, declining to visit Ohio during the present campaign, says:

"While Judge Parker announces himself as unqualifiedly in favor of the gold standard, he is no more objectionable upon this question than President Roosevelt and he does stand for many things in which the silver Democrats are interested.

"The election of Parker and Davis would remove from the arena of politics the question which stands in the way of consideration of economic questions and for this reason I believe that every Democrat who supported the ticket in 1896 and 1900 should interest himself in the success of the ticket this year.

"When the election is over I want to renew the fight for economic reform and I believe that we will be in a better position to do this with Judge Parker elected than with Roosevelt at the head of the nation. It is also important to secure congress, for without the house of representatives the president could not carry out his policies."

DENIAL FROM BATES

Was Not Asked to Name Moody to Succeed Hoar

Boston, Oct. 6.—Senator Hoar never asked Governor Bates to appoint Attorney General Moody United States senator, to succeed him. The governor authorized the press to state that there was absolutely no truth in, or foundation for, the statement published to the above effect.

Governor Bates said that he had never received a letter or any communication of any kind from Senator Hoar upon the subject in question, and that the deceased senator had never mentioned the matter to him. He desired the press to make this denial as emphatic and as explicit as possible.

It is well known that Hoar thought very highly of Moody, and had expressed his regret that he left the house of representatives to enter the cabinet; for he believed that, had Moody remained in congress, he would have stood an excellent chance to succeed Speaker Henderson when that official made his spectacular exit.

Ex-Governor Crane will probably succeed Senator Hoar, and the appointment is likely to be made almost any time now.

Reception to Judge Parker

New York, Oct. 6.—The first public reception to Alton B. Parker since his nomination for the presidency was tendered him last night by the Manhattan club at its house here. The clubhouse was taxed to its utmost capacity to accommodate the invited guests. It would be impossible to estimate accurately the number of persons with whom the candidate shook hands. From the time one mounted the first stairway it took just an hour to reach the main reception room, where Judge Parker stood. The crowd was kept moving and it was three hours before it diminished in the least. The candidate untiringly shook hands and exchanged greetings with every guest. His varied and cordial greetings were the subjects of admiring comment.

Concedes Nebraska to Roosevelt

Norfolk, Neb., Oct. 6.—W. J. Bryan, during the course of a speech here last night, said Roosevelt would carry Nebraska because the Democrats and Populists had named separate electoral tickets. "The only trouble we have to find with Judge Parker," he said, "is that he is too much like Roosevelt."

Peace Among Populists

Indianapolis, Oct. 6.—The Star says that a coalition of the two Populist parties in Indiana has been effected. The Fusionists, under the peace agreement, withdraw their state ticket from the field and the state ticket nominated by the mid-roaders becomes the Populist ticket in Indiana.

Decision Favors La Follette

Madison, Wis., Oct. 6.—The supreme court has decided the La Follette ticket regular. Three judges, Marshall, Dodge and Winslow, are for the La Follette faction. Chief Justice Cassedy dissents. The opinion will be filed later by Justice Marshall.

She had been cruelly beaten and abused before being choked to death. There is no clue to the assailant.

ACCEPTS THE CHALLENGE.

President In His Letter Speaks For Himself and Party.

[From the New York Globe, Rep.]

He speaks for himself and party, and there is neither uncertainty nor timidity nor a shadow of evasion in a single sentence of his letter. "A party fit to govern," he says, "must have convictions," and he leaves no opportunity for any one to deny that he has both convictions and the courage to maintain them. Whether men agree with him or not they cannot fail to grasp his meaning and cannot accuse him of shuffling or equivocation.

It is not in any sense a defensive document, but rather a defiant acceptance of the Democratic challenge to show why a change is not desirable. Every point in the Democratic indictment is met, and many points not mentioned publicly in that indictment are stated and answered. The Panama canal policy, the coal strike settlement, the Northern Securities suit, the pension order, are all treated in the same frank and fearless fashion, though the Democrats have either not ventured to mention them at all or have expressed their disapproval in veiled and guarded terms.

Those advocates of Judge Parker who have been beseeching him to utter a "clarion note" will find that much desired thing in the president's letter, for it sounds through every part of it.

TOM TAGGART OF GILGAL.

The Mystery Reminds One of Banquo's Ghost.

One of the most amusing "finds" of the campaign is the reproduction of Secretary Hay's "Pike County Ballad," published in 1871, entitled "The Mystery of Gilgal," with its reference to "Taggart hall" and Tom Taggart standing behind his bar. It is certainly a curious coincidence that Pike county should have had a barkeeping Tom Taggart back in the early seventies.

Here is the poem in full:

TOM TAGGART OF PIKE COUNTY; OR, THE MYSTERY OF GILGAL.

The darkest, strangest mystery
I ever read or heern or see
Is 'long of a drink at Taggart's hall—
Tom Taggart's of Gilgal.

I've heern the tale a thousand ways,
But never could git through the maze
That hangs around that queer day's doin's,
But I'll tell the yarn to youans.

Tom Taggart stood behind his bar;
The time was fall, the skies were far;
The neighbors round the counter drawed
And ca'mly drinked and jawed.

At last come Colonel Blood of Pike
And old Jedge Phinn, perniscus-like,
And each, as he meandered in,
Remarked, "A whisky skin."

Tom mixed the beverage full and far
And slammed it, smoking, on the bar.
Some says three fingers, some says two—
I'll leave the choice to you.

Phinn to the drink put forth his hand;
Blood drawed his knife, with accent
bland:
"I ax yer parding, Mister Phinn—
Jest drap that whisky skin!"

No man high toneder could be found
Than old Jedge Phinn the country round.
Says he, "Young man, the tribe of Phinns Knows their own whisky skins!"

He went for his 'leven inch bowie knife—
"I tries to foller a Christian life,
But I'll drap a slice of liver or two,
My bloomin' shrub, with you!"

They carved in a way that all admired
Tell Blood drawed iron at last and fired.
It took Seth Bludso 'twixt the eyes,
Which caused him great surprise.

Then coats went off, and all went in;
Shots and bad language swelled the din;
The short, sharp bark of derringers,
Like bull pups, cheered the furse.

They piled the stiffs outside the door;
They made, I reckon, a cord or more;
Girls went that winter, as a rule,
Alone to spellin' school.

I've searched in vain, from Dan to Beer-Sheeba, to make this mystery clear,
But I end with hit as I did begin—
"Who got the whisky skin?"

HAD AN AUTO LICENSE

No Machine Registered, However, In the Name of Gurney

Boston, Oct. 6.—Investigation at the office of the highway commissioners into the case of Hugh Gurney, secretary of the British embassy, who was fined for overspeeding his automobile in the town of Lee, brings out new facts concerning the position of the state.

It appears that Gurney holds a license to operate an automobile in Massachusetts, thus indicating that he is familiar with the state law and considered himself bound by its provisions to that extent. But no automobile is registered by Gurney, and Amos Schermerhorn, who is said to have been driving the machine when Gurney was arrested, has no license as a Massachusetts operator.

If Gurney owned the machine and it was not registered he was violating the law. If Schermerhorn was operating the machine it was being operated unlawfully. The British ambassador has authorized the statement that the case is settled, but the Massachusetts officials are not yet satisfied, and will go to the root of the matter, though there may be no further official action.

Killing Was Accidental

Patten, Me., Oct. 6.—Coroner Finnegan held an inquest on the body of William Violette, who was shot by Leo Coady, who mistook him for a deer. The coroner decided that the shooting was accidental and exonerated Coady from blame. Coady, who was hunting with his father, discharged his gun at a signal from the elder Coady. The bullet passed through the tree behind which Violette was standing and killed him.

Auto Tumbled on Occupants

New Haven, Oct. 6.—Through the overturning of a big touring car in this city, Mrs. H. A. Ryder, 70 years old, is dangerously hurt and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. W. F. Markwick, has painful injuries. Rev. Mr. Markwick was driving the machine when it became lodged in trolley car tracks. In the effort to free the automobile, it overturned and fell on the three occupants.

Vermont Legislature In Session

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 6.—The Vermont legislature convened and organized by re-electing John H. Merrifield speaker of the house and George H. Prouty president pro tem of the senate. The old officers of both branches were also elected. One of the first resolutions introduced calls for an examination of accounts in the auditor's office according to law.

Labor and Politics

Boston, Oct. 6.—The National Cotton Spinners' union convention condemned Governor Bates for his veto of the women and minors overtime bill, and members of the union were requested to work for his defeat in the coming election because of his action. Members were also directed to make a campaign for the adoption of the 58-hour law.

Thieving Butler Arrested

Boston, Oct. 6.—Edwin S. Johnston, a butler formerly employed by James H. Proctor at his summer home in Ipswich, was arrested here in a pawnshop, charged with the larceny of property from his employer to the value of $15,000. Officers recovered all of the stolen property, which had been shipped to this city.

Guilty of Murdering Wife

Wentworth, N. H., Oct. 6.—Henry Wilkins, charged with the murder of his wife, pleaded guilty before a trial justice here and was taken to the county jail at Haverhill. Beyond saying that he killed his wife with an axe and that he thought his act was justifiable, Wilkins would say nothing regarding the crime.

REV. DANIEL STEELE

Celebrates His Eightieth Birthday at Milton.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Steele the veteran minister and author celebrated his 80th birthday Wednesday at his home on Eliot street, Milton. The house was effectively decorated with autumn leaves and ferns.

During the afternoon eighty children of the Dorchester M. E. church called upon him and presented him with eighty carnations.

In the receiving party were Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Allen, Miss Carrie Steele and Miss Grace Steele. Members of the Dorchester church presented him with a handsome set of Plato. In the evening an orchestra furnished music and refreshments were served.

The New Battleships.

The battleship Connecticut, which was launched on the 29th of September, required for her construction just two years of time, says the Herald. The material for the Connecticut was ordered on Oct. 1, 1902; it reached the navy yard Dec. 11, the keel was laid March 10, 1903, and the stem set up July 28, 1903. The sister ship of the Connecticut, the Louisiana, which was built at Newport News, was launched on Aug. 27—that is, about a month before the Connecticut—and was begun at the same time. Both vessels are to be delivered ready for sea on March 15, 1906. It will thus be seen that to complete a large battleship ready for service requires, under favorable conditions, substantially three years and a half of time. The cost of a craft like the Connecticut, when ready for sea, is approximately $7,500,000. Under certain circumstances, such a ship is, no doubt, worth the money that it cost to build her; but it can well happen that, as the outcome of foolish fears or of mistaken national policy, our government may invest much more money than it should in constructions of this character.

Many of the men were unable to work at the shipyard this morning on account of the rain.

John Griffin pleaded guilty to a charge of drunkenness and was fined $3.

John Field was charged with being drunk by Officer Johnson. He pleaded not guilty and contended that he could not have been intoxicated as he had taken only two glasses of beer. He was found guilty and fined $3. Later the sentence was revoked and the case continued one week to enable the defendant to obtain the money wherewith to pay his fine.

Charles Sonia, charged with breaking street lamps belonging to the Electric Light company pleaded guilty. The prosecuting attorney asked that a precedent be established by imposing a severe sentence. Defendent was fined $25.

John D. Nolan pleaded guilty to drunkenness. Case continued till the 13th inst., at which time defendant is to pay a fine of five dollars.

Esther Robertson, arraigned on a liquor nuisance complaint, was not ready for trial and the case was continued till next Monday. Plea, not guilty.

Michael Loring's case came up on a continuance and was placed on file.

William McLaughlin pleaded guilty to being drunk and was placed on probation after being cautioned by the court as to the possible consequence of being found drunk again.

The case against Carl J. O'Neil, after a private consultation between the judge, the prosecuting officer, and defendant's attorney, was continued till Jan. 7, and the defendant placed on probation in the meantime.

The Court then took up the cases of Joseph Kelley and Howard B. Bailey, charged with breaking and entering and larceny at Randolph. Lawyer Tirrell appeared for the defendants and caused a plea of not guilty to be entered.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist.

I stood well back to let them pass, being in that mood of self importance, by reason of my love and the service rendered by it, that I could have seen the whole posse led to the whipping block with a relish, when suddenly, from their tipsy throats, came a shout of such import that my heart stood still. "Down with the king," hallooed one mad reveler, in a voice of such thickness that the whole sentence seemed one word; then the others took it up, until verily it seemed to me that their heads were not worth a farthing. Then, "Down with the governor! Down with Lord Culpeper!" shouted that same thick voice of the man who was leading the wild crew like a bellwether. He forged ahead, something more steady on his legs, but all the madder of his wits for that, with an arm around the waist of a buxom lass on either side, and all three dancing in time. Then all the rest echoed that shout of "Down with the governor!" Then out he burst again with, "Down, down with the tobacco, down with the tobacco!"

But the volley of that echo was cut short by five horsemen galloping after the throng and scattering them to the right and left. Then a great voice of authority, set out with the strangest oaths which ever an imagination of evil compassed, called out to them to be still if they valued their heads and cursed them all for drunken fools, and as he spoke lashed with his whip from side to side, and his face gleamed with wrath like a demon's in the full light, and I saw he was Captain Noel Jaynes, and well understood how he had made a name for himself on the high seas.

After him rode the brothers, Nicholas and Richard Barry, two great men, sticking to their saddles like rocks, with fair locks alike on the head of each flung out on the wind, and then came Ralph Drake, rising in his stirrups and laughing wildly, and last Parson Downs, but only last because the road was blocked, for verily I thought his plunging horse would have all before him under his feet.

They were all past me in a trice like a dream, the May revelers scattering and hastening forward with shrieks of terror and shouts of rage and peals of defiant laughter, and Captain Jaynes' voice, like a trumpet, overbearing everything, and shouts from the Barry brothers echoing him, and now and then coming the deep rumble of expostulations from the parson's great chest, and Ralph Drake's peals of horse laughter, and I was left to consider what a tinder box this colony of Virginia was, and how ready to leap to flame at a spark even when seemingly most at peace, and to regard with more and more anxiety Mary Cavendish's part in this brewing tumult.

After the shouting and hallooing throng had passed I walked along slowly, reflecting, as I have said, when I saw in the road before me two advancing—a woman and a man leading a horse by the bridle—and it was Mary Cavendish and Sir Humphrey Hyde.

And when I came up with them they stopped, and Humphrey addressed me rudely enough, but as one gentleman might another when he was angered with him, and not contemptuously, for that was never the lad's way with me. "Master Wingfield," he said, standing before me and holding his champing horse hard by the bits, "I pray you have the grace to explain this matter of the goods."

I saw that Mistress Mary had been acquainting him with what had passed and her puzzlement over it.

"There is naught to explain, Sir Humphrey," said I. "'Tis very simple. Mistress Mary hath the goods for which she sent to England."

"Master Wingfield, you know those are my Lady Culpeper's goods, and I have no right to them!" cried Mary. But I bowed and said, "Madam, the goods are yours and not Lady Culpeper's."

"But I—I lied when I gave the list to my grandmother!" she cried out, half sobbing, for she was after all little more than a child tiptoed to womanhood by enthusiasm.

"Madam," said I, and I bowed again, "you mistake yourself. Mistress Mary Cavendish cannot lie, and the goods are in truth yours."

She and Sir Humphrey looked at each other. Then Humphrey made a stride forward and, forcing back his horse with one hand, grasped me with the other. "Harry, Harry," he said in a whisper, "tell me, for God's sake, what have you done?"

"The goods are Mistress Mary Cavendish's," said I. They looked at me as I have seen folk look at a page of Virgil.

"Were they, after all, not my Lady Culpeper's?" asked Sir Humphrey.

"They are Mistress Mary Cavendish's," said I.

Mary turned suddenly to Sir Humphrey. "'Tis time you were gone now, Humphrey," she said softly. "'Twas only last night you were here, and there is need of caution, and your mother"—

"But Humphrey was loth to go. "'Tis not late," he said, "and I would know more of this matter."

"You will never know more of Master Wingfield, if that is what you wait for," she returned, with a half laugh, "and, Humphrey, your sister Cicely said but this morning that your mother was overcurious. I pray you go, and Master Wingfield will take me home. I pray you go!"

Sir Humphrey took her hand and bent low over it and murmured something. Then before he sprang to his saddle he came close to me again. "Harry," he whispered, "she should not be in this business, and I would have not had it so could I have helped it, and, I pray you, have a care to her safety." This he spoke so low that Mary could not hear, and moreover she, with one of those sudden turns of hers that made her have as many faces of delight as a diamond in the sun, had thrown an arm around the neck of Sir Humphrey's mare and was talking to her in such dulcet tones as her lovers would have died for the sake of hearing in their ears.

"Have no fears for her safety," I whispered back. "So far as the goods go, there is no more danger."

"What did you, Harry?"

"Sir Humphrey," I whispered back, while Mary's sweet voice in the mare's

Sir Humphrey bending low over Mary's hand

delicate ear sounded like a song, "sometimes an unguessed riddle hath less weight than a guessed one, and some fish of knowledge had best be left in the stream. I tell thee she is safe." So saying I looked him full in his honest, boyish face, which was good to see, though sometime I wished, for the maid's sake, that it had more shrewdness of wit in it. Then he gave me a great grasp of the hand and whispered something hoarsely. "Thou art a good fellow, Harry, in spite of—in spite of"—then he bent low over Mary's hand for the second time and sprang to his saddle and was off toward Jamestown on his white mare, flashing along the moonlit road like a whiter moonbeam.

Then Mary came close to me and did what she had never before done since she was a child. She laid her little hand on my arm of her own accord. "Master Wingfield," said she softly, "what about the goods?"

"The goods for which you sent to England are yours and in the great house," said I, and I heard my voice tremble.

She drew her hand away and stood looking at me, and her sweet forehead under her golden curls was all knitted with perplexity.

"You know—you know I—lied?" she whispered like a guilty child.

"You cannot lie," I answered, "and the goods are yours."

"And not my Lady Culpeper's?"

"And not my Lady Culpeper's."

Mary continued looking at me, then all at once her forehead cleared.

"Catherine, 'twas Catherine," she cried out. "She said not, but well I know her; she would not own to it—the sweetheart. Sure a falsehood to hide a loving deed is the best truth of the world. 'Twas Catherine, 'twas Catherine, the sweetheart, the darling. She sent for naught for herself, and hath been saving for a year's time and maybe sold a ring or two. Somehow she discovered about the plot, what I had done. And she hath heard me say, that I know well, that I thought 'twas a noble list of Lady Culpeper's and I wished I were a governor's wife or daughter that I could have fine things. I remember me well that I told her thus before ever the Golden Horn sailed for England, that time after Cicely Hyde slept with me and told me what she had from Cate Culpeper. A goodly portion of the goods were for Cate. 'Twas Catherine. Oh, the sweetheart, the darling! Was there ever sister like her?"

GUILD HIS RUNNING MATE

Four-Cornered Contest For State Treasurer With Chances In Favor of Whipple--Difficulty In Agreeing Upon Reciprocity

Boston, Oct. 7.—With four candidates for the nomination of state treasurer and an apparent difficulty by party leaders to agree on the Canadian reciprocity plank, the Republican state convention, which is being held here today, is not as devoid of convention strife as has been the case usually in the past. The aspirants for state treasurer include John J. Whipple of Brockton, Elisha T. Brewster of Springfield, Elisha T. Harvell of Rockland, and Arthur B. Chapin of Holyoke.

JOHN L. BATES.

The committee on resolutions struggled for many hours for an agreement on the reciprocity issue. A delegation headed by Congressman McCall, who but recently unqualifiedly announced himself in favor of Canadian reciprocity, vigorously urged that a call for reciprocal trade relations with Canada be made a part of the party's platform. The Boston Chamber of Commerce, which has strongly favored reciprocity, was also represented by its president, William H. Lincoln, and its secretary, Elwyn G. Preston.

Governor John L. Bates was renominated by acclamation for a third term, with Lieutenant Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., also for a third term. William M. Olin of Boston, the present secretary of state, was renominated, as were Attorney General Herbert Parker of Lancaster and State Auditor Henry A. Turner of Malden.

CURTIS GUILD, JR.

Attorney General Moody was the permanent chairman of the convention, which was called to order by Thomas Talbot, chairman of the state committee. Former State Attorney General Pillsbury presented the name of Governor Bates, Congressman McCall named Lieutenant Governor Guild and former Governor Long nominated Attorney General Parker. Dana Malone of Greenfield is chairman of the committee on resolutions.

It is conceded by all candidates for state treasurer that Whipple has more votes than any of the other aspirants, although it is not granted that he has a majority of the votes of the convention. A. P. Langtry of Springfield was until recently prominently mentioned for the nomination, but he withdrew in favor of Chapin.

Feels Grateful For Sympathy

Paris, Oct. 7.—Madame Bartholdi, widow of the sculptor, received a cablegram from President Roosevelt offering in the name of the American people his deep sympathy on the occasion of the death of her husband. Madame Bartholdi replied: "No more flattering consecration could be given the memory of my husband. Please receive for yourself and the American people the homage of my deepest gratitude."

NIGHT SCHOOLS.

The Quincy Y. M. C. A. Arranging to Give Instruction.

During the next ten days more than 35,000 men will be enrolled in the educational classes conducted by the Young Men's Christian Associations of this country. The object of these night schools is to give to men who work during the day a chance to make up their deficiencies and add to their skill as workmen. Practical subjects are taught in line with their practical trade or the career for which they have the ambition and grit to prepare by evening study. Special classes are also for employed boys.

The average age of those enrolled last year was about 25. Many students were men of 35 to 40. These Association schools especially emphasize individual instruction. Their teachers are trained experts who practice during the day what they teach at night. Massachusetts and Rhode Island have fifty of the largest industrial centres in New England, in each of which is a Christian Association. Thirty-four of these conduct night schools adapted to the vocational needs of men. Leading educators and business men are advisors and backers of this practical work of industrial betterment.

The Quincy Association are contemplating work of this character this season. A committee was recently appointed as follows: R. C. Drinker (chairman), R. H. Allen, Alex Falconer, W. H. Mitchell, Dr. H. M. Willard. This committee have met twice and have plans formulated for courses for machinists and stone workers.

Work will be commenced about November first in rooms hired for the purpose and the classes will be moved when the new building is ready.

Grand Opportunity.

The opportunity to learn a trade is, for many men in positions which promise no future, the beginning of prosperity. Such an opportunity is offered the young men of Boston and vicinity by the M. C. M. A. Trade School, which opens for its fifth term Monday evening, Oct. 10, in the Mechanics building, at the entrance numbered 111 Huntington avenue. Classes are held three evenings each week in carpentry, masonry and plumbing. A skilled workman shows each student how to handle his tools, and instructs him in the properties of the materials used, and the general principles of the trade to be learned.

Part of the expense is met by the income of a small fund left by Dr. George C. Shattuck, a philanthropic citizen of Boston, in 1858. By far the greater part of the expense, however, is borne by the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, whose membership includes most of the leading master mechanics of Boston. A small tuition fee is charged each student, largely for the purpose of securing the more earnest of the many applicants for admission.

Out-of-town students reduce traveling expenses by using school tickets, which are issued by the railroads at very low rates.

The pupils of the school are of two kinds—those who have already worked at some trade long enough to acquire some knowledge, and are able to earn small wages, but who wish to learn the more difficult and complicated branches of the trade in order to get better pay; and young men who have had no experience at any trade, but who desire to become practical and skillful mechanics.

Brockton Fair.

It is estimated that 45,000 attended the Brockton fair on Thursday; but the receipts were not as large as on the big day last year. Awards were made at the horse show, and Herbert T. Drake's beautiful show mare, Fleet Autograph, won in the gentlemen's roadsters class. The other features were up to the usual standard.

Hall for Councillor.

The Republican convention for this Councillor district, the second, held at Boston, Thursday, unanimously renominated Hon. Frederick S. Hall of Taunton for the Governor's Council.

TEN YEARS OLD.

Anniversary and Rally Day of Atlantic M. E. Church.

Sunday will be observed as the tenth anniversary and rally day at the Atlantic M. E. church with a sermom at the 10.45 A. M. service by Rev. Herbert H. Deetz, who was pastor at the time the church was dedicated. In the evening there will be a special service with historical sketch and sermon.

At 9.30 A. M. a love feast is announced.

At the Sunday school session at 12 M. there will be a special program including address by the pastor.

The Junior Epworth League of which Edith Greenard is superintendent, will meet at 3.30, and the Epworth League at 6 P. M.

At the evening service at 7 o'clock there will be a historical sketch by Mr. John Ramsdell, and sermon by the presiding elder, Rev. Willard T. Perrin.

DOROTHY Q. HOUSE.

Colonial Dames to Have a House Warming Tomorrow.

The opening of the "Dorothy Q" house, which recently came into possession of the society of Colonial Dames, will be tomorrow at which time the society will meet in the house and have lunch.

The mansion has been put in thorough repair, redecorated and restored as far as possible to its original state. It is proposed by the society to make collection of articles of historic value and to furnish several rooms.

Quite a lot of antique furniture has already arrived, and the Dorothy Q room is now practically furnished.

The society has not completed its plans as yet, but it is understood that there will be free days and days upon which admission will be charged.

Red Men in Attendance.

The funeral of Frederick Welch was held Thursday afternoon from his home on Robertson street. The services were largely attended, Hodenosaunee tribe of Red Men of which he was a member attending in a body. The services were conducted by Rev. Edwin N. Hardy of Bethany church. There was singing by Mrs. R. B. Worster and Mrs. Frank S. Moore. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery where the Red Men performed their burial service.

On Trial List.

Several Quincy cases are in order for trial at the Superior civil court at Dedham this term, including George F. Faircloth vs. Peter J. Williams, Joel F. Shepard et al vs. Charles M. Bryant, First Congregational Society vs. City of Quincy, Alice M. Abbott vs. Lillian I. Littlefield and trustee, Annie M. Bates vs. City of Quincy, and James P. King vs. City of Quincy.

Nearly Fourteen Hours Clipped Off

New York, Oct. 7.—Tired, travel-stained, generally bedraggled, but happy in the knowledge that they had broken the record between Chicago and New York, Bert Holcomb and Harry Sandall arrived here in a 35-horse power automobile. The run was made in 51 hours and 15 minutes corrected time, clipping 13 hours and 58 minutes from the best previous record.

Young Victims of Shipwreck

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 7.—During a heavy fog the steamer Boscowise struck a reef on Harbledown island and was wrecked. Four children were drowned. The crew and 185 passengers were saved. The Boscowise had on board nearly 200 Indian passengers. The drowning of the children occurred in connection with the launching of a small boat.

Mont Pelee In Violent Eruption

Kingstown, St. Vincent, Oct. 7.—Steamer Sibun reports that when the steamer passed the island of Martinique on Sept. 30 Mont Pelee was in full eruption. The volcano was emitting stupendous black clouds and balls of fire. This accounts for the dust clouds reported to have been seen throughout the Windward Islands.

BIG GAIN

In Number of Children of School Age.

Nearly One-Half in Ward One.

Small Increases in Wards Three and Five.

An increase of 175 children of school age since last year is the report of Charles H. Johnson, who has just completed the school census of the city. The total of 6059 includes only those who are over five years of age and under fifteen years of age. Of course there are hundreds who have passed their fifteenth birthday who are attending school who would swell the total considerably.

The ages are very equally divided, but the four lowest years are all over 600 and show that an increase in school attendance is sure. Over 700 give their ages as 14 but many are probably over 15.

	WARDS 1	2	3	4	5	6	Total in City

GOOD AFTERNOON.

The Daily Ledger is issued under disadvantages this week, as the proprietor, editors and reporters are attending court at Dedham.

Whether the enrollment of pupils at the High school in this city is slightly larger or slightly smaller than that of last year or the year before, or whether it is greater or less than the average for a period of years, is a matter of no special importance. The truth is that an enrollment of only a few more than 400 pupils in the High school of a city of between 60,000 and 70,000 inhabitants is not creditable to the city, and there is good reason to inquire why. The member of the school committee who introduced the topic at the meeting of Monday evening was clearly in the line of his official duty, and what he says deserves serious attention instead of quibbling or flippant response.—New Bedford Standard.

The situation in New Bedford seems to be the reverse of Quincy, and a matter of regret. The above paragraph is only the introductory to a column editorial in the Standard, which maintains that the High school is instituted like all other public schools, to benefit the community through training of the children. The paper maintains that New Bedford is not receiving the benefit from her High school that she should because of the small attendance.

Quincy, a smaller city, which educates 675 in her High school, is indeed fortunate and should do everything possible to get the benefit from the large number who desire an education that they may command good salaries and be prosperous in life. It is prosperous people that Quincy wants as citizens.

Drift of Opinion.

☞A New York opera manager has a rule forbidding members of his company from marrying unless they receive a salary of $35 a week, so that Gen. Corbin's proposed army regulation is not without precedent. Love in a cottage does not appear to stand any kind of a show in this cruel world nowadays. —Haverhill Gazette.

☞The handshake has become a political issue. The opposing candidates seem to be trying to outdo one another in the strenuousness of their greetings. The Philadelphia Record may be said to have started the controversy as to which candidate is the best one to shake, figuratively and literally. Here is the Record's graphic picture of the Parker handshake:

"Mr. Parker would take hold of the right arm of the handshaker at the elbow and hold it firmly with his left hand, which has a stout grip. Then grasping the outstretched hand with his own right hand he would shake vigorously, not only the hand but the forearm, the upper right arm being held with the strong left hand grip. The caller could not have got away if he had wished, and he did not wish to."

Republican papers have promptly sprung to the rescue of their candidates and pen pictures of each digit in action have become numerous.

Matters have come to such a pass in this campaign that William Allen White's suggestion that there should be two presidents, one to transact official business and the other to shake hands with the admirers and visitors, does not seem as absurd as it did at first. If it has come to the point where the independent voter will cast his ballot for the best handshaker we fear all other issues will be relegated to that blissful state of innocuous desuetude where even a belated telegram cannot find them.—Des Moines, Ia., Register and Leader.

—When a girl gives a young man her picture without his asking for it, the least he can do is to make her think that he is going to pay seven dollars for a frame for it, and put it on his dressing case.—Somerville Journal.

NAVAL ARMAMENTS

Peace Congress Would Arrest and Reduce Them

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

Resolution In Criticism of It Voted Down--A Letter From Carnegie Outlines Bold Coalition Plan to Prevent War

Boston, Oct. 7.—The arrest and subsequent reduction of military and naval armaments throughout the world was called for yesterday at the session of the International Peace Congress, when resolutions were adopted expressing the opinion that the first task which the world's new convention suggested by President Roosevelt should take up was the gradual disarmament of the powers. The thanks of the congress were extended to President Roosevelt for his pledge to take the first steps towards a convocation of a new international peace conclave.

The most pronounced forensic and oratorical moment which the congress yet has seen came when a Boston delegate, Charles F. Dole, proposed to amend the disarmament resolution by a declaration that no necessity existed for the United States to view with suspicion the powers of Europe and that, therefore, it was quite unnecessary for America to enforce the Monroe doctrine by building up such an immense navy.

Several delegates warmly opposed the amendment, first, on the ground that such a resolve should properly come before a congress composed of American delegates merely, and second, on the ground that the congress had no right to criticize the American government for upholding by a suitable naval force, a doctrine, by the enforcement of which, war had been excluded from the western hemisphere, and by means of an insistence upon the open door in the east preventing war also in that section of the globe. The Dole amendment was defeated by a large majority.

Resolutions were unanimously passed congratulating the powers at the marked favorable development in signing of permanent and obligatory treaties. Baroness Von Suttner of Austria announced to the congress that a treaty of importance to both countries was about to be signed by Great Britain and Austria.

A letter was read from Andrew Carnegie, dated Scotland, in which he suggested a coalition of great world powers—Britain, France, Germany and America, perhaps—which shall say to the nations of the earth that there shall be no more war, and which shall be prepared to enforce that edict by a combination of strength that shall compel acquiescence from any country not willing to submit its differences with a neighbor to arbitration by The Hague tribunal.

The idea has been suggested before by others, but hardly with the boldness with which Mr. Carnegie advances it. He suggests that Great Britain, France, Germany and the United States might form a combination whose edict would perforce be respected. Should it be defied, he believes that swift, sharp discipline of the first offending country would ensure against a second necessity for action. To abolish all war at one blow, he says, is a great object; for he believes the peoples of the four nations named would risk much; but he argues that, given a coalition of sufficient strength, the real risk would be small. He further declares that the time is opportune, and that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hay are just the men to lead such a movement.

Failure of Cotton Company

Montgomery, Ala., Oct. 7.—Judge Sayre has appointed receivers for the Alabama Cotton Products company, a concern operating throughout this state. The liabilities are placed at $323,755. The receivership is attributed to failure of the American Cotton company, with which the other company was connected.

Assets Exceed Liabilities

Washington, Oct. 7.—A schedule of the assets and liabilities of T. E. Waggaman, former treasurer of the Catholic university, who was recently declared a bankrupt, shows assets of $5,607,924 and liabilities of $4,622,940. The largest item of assets is real estate, the value of which is given at $3,229,511.

Collision Scared Passengers

New York, Oct. 7.—As the ferryboat Hamburg was leaving her slip in Hoboken last night, tug William McClarey ran into her port bow, smashing the ferryboat's railing. About 50 passengers were on the ferryboat and there was considerable excitement.

Russians May Have Got Away

A SHREWD OLD LADY.

How She Got Her Will Drafted and Fooled Her Lawyer.

A certain lawyer, famed for high charges, had incurred the enmity of an old lady on account of the same. Wishing to get even with him, she consulted him about drafting her will. As she was a very wealthy old lady, without near relatives, she had many charitable associations to benefit, and the accurate draft of the will required much patience, skill and time. Among the provisions she made a generous bequest to this lawyer and nominated him executor. After the execution of the will she called for her bill, whereupon the lawyer, with the vision of ample fees in the prospective settlement of the estate and the memory of the generous bequest, told the old lady that under the circumstances he should charge nothing, but finally, to satisfy her business scruples, made out a receipt in full to date for $1, whereas the smallest sum he could have properly charged would have been $100.

The old lady marched home with her will, set herself to work, copied it out carefully word for word, leaving out the bequest to the lawyer and nominating a new executor.

In the course of time she died, and the disgust of the lawyer at the contents of the will was so great that he inadvertently let out the secret, to the huge delight of his brother lawyers.—Leslie's Monthly.

The Sacred Twelve.

The "patriarchal and apostolical number of twelve" as the proper and only admissible number for a jury trying cases according to the common law has come down to us from remote antiquity. Yet this number was not always universal. In 1652 a Cornish custom to have juries of six was declared to be bad, but evidence was given that such juries had been widely used in the county, and by a special statute of Henry VIII. juries of six were allowed in Wales. But the jury of the grand assize consisted of sixteen men, which still finds a parallel in the jury of presentments of the Liberty of the Savoy. The modern grand jury, the coroner's jury and the jury at lunacy and ecclesiastical inquisitions number anything between twelve and twenty-three, whereof twelve at least must agree on a verdict.—London Law Journal.

Gordon's Sudan Throne.

Gordon's Sudan throne is a folding chair he always sat in at Khartum and carried with him on his camel journeys. It was a little straight backed chair, having a skeleton frame of round iron, a carpet back and seat, gilt knobs for ornament, and small pads on the arms for comfort. The carpet had grown dim in the African sun, which deprived it of all royal pretensions, so that when Gordon returned from his governorship of the Sudan and suddenly asked, "Where is my throne? Has it been brought in?" they were all surprised. His throne! Nobody had seen a throne. But at length the camp stool was found where it had been stowed away.—Chambers' Journal.

Higher Prices.

We reprint the following, taken from the Boston Post, as it is of interest to all our readers.—Ed.

"The Cause of Higher Prices," a report just issued by the Massachusetts Bureau of statistics of Labor, includes 151 letters on this subject from prominent men in all departments of business. From a summary of all the correspondence it is shown that the majority of these writers think the present high prices are due, first to labor unions; secondly, to trusts, and thirdly to the "temperament of the American people."

The greatest cause for the present and the predicted high prices, as shown by the general trend of the correspondence, is the labor unions. What has accomplished it, is said to be "shorter hours and higher wages." With these conditions, according to the correspondents, the price of an article must necessarily be higher. Many manufacturers assert that a laborer is often receiving more money than his labor is worth. By the time the article gets to the consumer, after such a high productive cost, together with the middleman's profits, the price of the article is greatly advanced.

The temperament of the American people today is said to play an important part in the gradual rise of prices. This increasing extravagance of the people is brought about by the higher education. It is their desire to live in better houses, wear up-to-date clothing, finer shoes and indulge in more costly amusement.

DOUGLAS IS NAMED

Chosen to Head Ticket of Massachusetts Democrats

HARMONY CONVENTION

A Promise to Fight For Reciprocity With Canada, to Which Republicans Are Charged With Turning a Deaf Ear

Boston, Oct. 7.—For the first time in very many years, if not within the entire history of the party in this state, the Democratic state convention, which was held here today, was a meeting in which harmony was a keynote and the prearranged plans of the leaders of the party were carried out without any consequential opposition.

William L. Douglas of Brockton, who has been prominent in the party for many years, was selected as the nominee for governor, and his name was placed before the convention by Congressman John A. Sullivan. For the second place on the ticket John C. Crosby of Pittsfield consented to stand as a result of the earnest solicitations of the party leaders. He was placed in nomination by James E. McConnell of Fitchburg. In accepting the nomination for governor Mr. Douglas said:

"I thank you for the nomination as your standard bearer for governor. To be the unanimous choice of my fellow Democrats is an honor that I fully appreciate and I pledge you my word that I shall endeavor to conduct a clean and vigorous campaign along the lines laid down in your platform. Massachusetts has been known to elect a Democratic governor in a presidential year, and surely the issues this year appeal with especial force to the business interests, as well as to those whose bread is earned in the sweat of their brow.

WILLIAM L. DOUGLAS.

"I am not a politician. I am a business man. That is my excuse for participating in politics at this time. The issues are business issues. Who is to be chosen as chief executive of the commonwealth this year will be determined by the votes of the sober, serious, independent thinking men, and I have faith to believe these votes will be recorded for the Democratic candidate.

"I am known to be an advocate of reciprocity—an idea, they tell us, is Republican. Yes, it was good Republican doctrine in the days of Blaine and McKinley, but today reciprocity is a dead issue with the leaders of the Republican party. I have no doubt that pressure from within the party has been sufficiently strong to induce the Republican leaders to insert some sort of reciprocity plank in their platform today; but every thinking person will be quick to see its insincerity. I am convinced that political expediency and cajolery can no longer control the votes of the business men of this commonwealth. The Republican party has repeatedly been pledged to give us reciprocal business relations with our friends and neighbors on the north; but just as frequently has that power turned a deaf ear when New England business men appealed for their rights. New England and its interests have been ignored because New England habitually contributes its electoral vote to the Republican party. The welfare of New England can best be obtained by making Massachusetts a doubtful state.

"We can undoubtedly secure sufficient votes to elect our state ticket, and it will serve as an effective warning to the Republican party managers here and at Washington that Massachusetts is in earnest in demanding real reciprocity, which means a wider market for our products, a more equitable market for the purchase of our raw material, more labor for our working people, and lower prices for the necessities of life.

"I know the representatives of the party assembled here today will do their full duty when they return to their homes, and with such a matchless leader as Alton B. Parker, I shall not be surprised if our efforts to build up a strong opposition party have been crowned with success.

"My views on tariff revision, reciprocity and other issues will be laid before you in a more formal manner later in the campaign.

"Gentlemen of the convention, I accept the nomination, and again thank you for the honor."

The remainder of the state ticket is as follows: Secretary of state, Henry T. Schaeffer of Worcester; state treasurer, Edmund D. Codman of Boston; attorney general, John P. Leahy of Boston; auditor, Francois Pettrault of Southbridge.

Charles S. Hamlin, who was assistant secretary of the treasury under President Cleveland, was chairman of the committee on resolutions, and the delegates heard a platform which contained a vigorous expression of Democratic principles, especially with respect to the issue of Canadian reciprocity, upon which the Democrats learned the Republican leaders were experiencing more or less of difficulty in agreeing upon a compromise.

The convention also nominated presidential electors and the members-at-large of the state committee.

The convention, which was held in the Boston theatre, was opened by John J. Flaherty of Gloucester, chairman of the executive committee. Nathan Mathews, Jr., formerly mayor of Boston, was the permanent chairman of the convention.

Scofield Takes Cook's Place

Milwaukee, Oct. 7.—Samuel A. Cook, former candidate for governor, issued a lengthy statement last night, giving his reason for withdrawal from the stalwart ticket. The gist of his statement is a review of his past utterances that he would withdraw unless a decision by the supreme court was in his favor. Former Governor Scofield, who has been selected to fill the vacancy, made a statement in which he says that he has faith in the judgment and in the desire for fair play of the Republicans of Wisconsin, and is certain that they will "rebuke the high-handed methods by which Mr. La Follette attempted to steal the party convention."

Montana Workmen With Parker

New York, Oct. 7.—Judge Parker expects to return to Esopus today. The number of callers at his apartments at the Hotel Seville yesterday was the largest during his present visit. Several delegations were also received and the reception room was crowded most of the day. A telegram from Montana announced that the labor convention of the state had endorsed the Democratic electors. The Montana delegation declared the action of the labor party makes Montana certainly Democratic.

Taft Talks on Philippines

Indianapolis, Oct. 7.—Secretary of War Taft was the principal speaker at the closing meeting held in connection with the convention of the National Republican League of the United States. Secretary Taft devoted substantially all of his speech to the issues respecting the Philippine islands. He showed that 7 percent of the people in the islands spoke Spanish and that the remainder were in a condition of ignorance hard for the Americans to understand.

Democrats Need Campaign Funds

New York, Oct. 7.—George F. Peabody, treasurer of the Democratic national committee, has issued an appeal for contributions for the campaign fund. He says that the Democratic party has no industrial favorites from whom it can draw campaign subscriptions, but must rely for necessary funds upon patriotic citizens who believe in a government of law under the constitution, honestly and economically administered.

Vermont Returns All In

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 7.—The official vote for governor is announced as follows: Bell (Rep.), 48,115; Porter (Dem.), 16,556; Cummings (Pro.), 1173; Morse (Soc.), 769. The majority for Bell was 29,610.

AS FAR OFF AS EVER

Conference Fails to Settle the Wage Question at Fall River

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 7.—The secretaries of the five labor unions and a committee of the signers of the wage reduction agreement were in conference for three hours yesterday afternoon, but no agreement was reached in the cotton mill labor situation. The manufacturers presented a statement saying that new mills to the extent of 2,300,000 spindles have been built in the last three years in a section of the country where wages are much lower than it is now proposed to pay and where restrictive legislation is almost unknown.

"During the last three years," the statement said, "we have managed to pay the highest rate of wages since 1875. In the meantime the margin of profit has dwindled until it has, in many cases, entirely disappeared, and there has been a loss in the manufacture of our goods. In view of the above facts it is impossible to entertain any suggestion of compromise or deviate in any particular from the basis of wages announced to go into effect July 25, 1904."

The representatives of the operatives presented their well known arguments in opposition to the stand taken by the manufacturers and the situation was discussed in a most friendly spirit. Neither side would make the slightest concession, and the arguments employed were exactly the same as were used 11 weeks ago.

Fire Pursues High School Pupils

Alfred, Me., Oct. 7.—Twenty students of the high school, whose sessions have been held in the second story of the town hall since the high school building was destroyed by fire a week ago, barely escaped from their room late yesterday during a fire which completely gutted the town hall. The single stairway was cut off by the flames shortly after the last pupil had passed down. The fire originated from an unknown cause in a closet beneath the stairway.

ANTIKISSING CLUB.

Georgia Girls Band Together to Prohibit Osculation.

Recently half a dozen pretty Georgia girls discussed kissing from various standpoints—hygienically, financially, etc.—and decided that it is a silly and unsanitary practice, says a Lexington (Ga.) dispatch to the New York World. Accordingly they organized as the Antikissing club and adopted a constitution which provides, among other things:

"Each member shall sign the following pledge with her own blood, secured from her lips:

"'I pledge myself to never kiss any one except father, mother, brothers, sisters, husband and children.

"'I pledge myself furthermore to never kiss my betrothed until I become his wife.

"'If I fail to keep this pledge, I will pay a fine of $25 and ask the club to erase my name from the roll.'

"On the marriage of any member of this club in good standing each member shall pay $5 to the treasurer, who shall present the amount as a bridal gift to the bride.

"The amount paid in by those who fail to keep the pledge shall be held by the treasurer as a fund to be divided among those who prefer spinsterhood.

"All members of the club must attend the marriage of members, and all hymeneal ceremonies will be arranged by an appointed committee.

"Any member who applies for divorce shall pay to the treasurer $50 and have her name removed from the roll.

"On the death of any member in good standing each member shall pay to the treasurer $5, to be used in erecting a shaft to the deceased, which shall be a marble pillar 3 by 4, surmounted by a figure of a woman in Greek costume, three feet high, with the first finger of the right hand touching closed lips. The only inscription shall be, 'Here rests a modest, sensible and faithful member of the A. K. C.'"

Fortunately for the Georgia boy the A. K. C.'s failed to insert a clause prohibiting hugging. But when a member is being hugged she will murmur the warning, "Please remember I am an A. K. C."

CASE NOL PROSSED.

Messrs. Meyer, Prescott and Moore Discharged by Court.

The cases of Andrew A. Meyer for subornation of perjury, and of Charles L. Prescott and C. M. Moore for purjury, came up in court in Boston this morning. The district attorney after hearing the facts of the case refused to prosecute and the cases were nolprossed.

The history of the case in brief was as follows. Sometime ago a contractor obtained judgment against Meyer, who appealed. He was obliged to give a bond to protect his appeal, and it was alleged that he obtained Moore and Prescott to go on his bond. It was also alleged that their bond was worthless, and that he committed subornation of perjury in inducing them to go on his bond and that they committed purjury by giving a worthless bond.

INDIAN INVENTIVENESS.

Birch Bark Canoes and Snowshoes Its Best Productions.

That the North American Indian never rose to a high level of civilization may be attributed to his lack of inventiveness as well as to his indolence and improvidence. He reared no enduring structures and constructed no instruments for the manufacture on anything but the smallest scale of articles of use and exchange. This seems at first glance like a satisfactory explanation of the undeveloped state of his civilization.

It is nevertheless not true that the Indian lacked inventiveness. He has left at least two worthy monuments of his capacity for invention, although our own civilization has converted them from articles of necessity into what are practically playthings.

These two evidences of the Indian genius are the birch bark canoe and the snowshoe. For beauty and utility in the uses for which it was designed no product of the white man's art working with the same materials could have surpassed the Indian canoe. The snowshoe, as the Indian designed and made it, moreover, is a distinct work of art and, like the violin of the older masters, seems incapable of improvement.

It may be argued that these are articles of the simplest kind, but the genius that inspired their invention and construction is none the less worthy to rank with that which manifests itself in our own civilization in works of an ampler but not more beautiful design. —Boston Globe.

SECRET INK.

Writing Which May Be Made Invisible or Visible at Will.

There are several ways in which two persons can correspond with each other unknown to even the people before whose eyes the very letter is held. Ovid taught young women when writing to their lovers they should use new milk as ink. This when dried is invisible, but by scattering coal dust or soot upon the paper the writing becomes legible. Ansonius adopted this method when writing to Paulinus.

Diluted sulphuric acid, lemon juice, solutions of nitrate and chloride of cobalt or of chloride of copper write colorless, but on being heated the characters written with the first two become black or brown and the latter green. When the paper becomes cool the writing disappears and leaves the paper blank again. Saltpeter dissolved in water and equal parts of sulphate of copper and sal ammoniac dissolved in water are two good invisible inks.

There are also some inks which are invisible when dry, but visible when moistened with another liquid. Thus a solution of muriate of antimony washed with tincture of galls becomes yellow, green vitriol ink washed with the same solution turns black, nitrate of cobalt washed with oxalic acid turns blue, arseniate of potash with nitrate of copper green, solution of gold with muriate of tin purple.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

makes pale, thin children fat and chubby. Overcomes wasting tendencies and brings back rosy cheeks and bright eyes.

It's surprising how quickly children respond to Scott's Emulsion. It contains just the element of nourishment their little bodies need. They thrive on it.

Even a few drops in the baby's bottle have a noticeable effect for good. Nothing better than Scott's Emulsion for growing children.

Why do substitutes for Scott's Emulsion cost less? Because they're worth less. With one you wait in vain for the benefits you had looked for. In Scott's Emulsion you get them. It never disappoints. That's worth the few cents difference in cost.

Industrial Education.

Crowning the German system of industrial education stand the great technical high schools says United States Deputy Consul Meyer, at Chemnitz, Germany. Their name and fame have gone out into every country where men are interested in the application of science in industry. Though Germany has achieved great things in other fields of education, it is the technical high schools that form the noblest monument to the deep thought, untiring energy, and unquenchable enthusiasm of German educators and statesmen in the field of industrial education.

Their history dates back for over a century, and is a story of modest beginning and growth into educational institutions which are today the acknowledged peers of the historic universities, and which will in the future, by virtue of their unwavering pursuit of science and their faithful application of knowledge in industry, vindicate their position as the great schools of the age.

Their preeminent mission for the enrichment of commerce and industry, for the production of things convenient and comfortable, for the creation of a greater security in life and property, will envelop these institutions in a halo of public esteem, which will eclipse even the historical prestige of the ancient classical universities.

The total annual tuition fees average $71.40 and $83.30. The total attendance in 1903 was 14,626.

Unitarian Club.

The first dinner of the Wollaston Unitarian Club, of which Hon. Eugene H. Sprague is president, will be held in the vestry of the Unitarian church on Tuesday evening, October 11th, at 6.30 o'clock.

Col. Edward Anderson of Quincy will address the club on the subject of the Peace Convention from a soldier's standpoint.

Baba Premanand Bharati, of Brindaban, India, who was one of the speakers at the International Peace convention, will talk on the Peace movement from the view point of the East.

TODAY'S COURT.

Harold Nelson and Samuel McCormick were fined $3 each for drunkenness at Quincy.

Timothy Sheehan was sent to the State farm for drunkenness at Quincy.

Edward J. Connor was arraigned for drunkenness at Weymouth. Case continued until Nov. 15.

The continued case of Mary G. Collie for violation of the liquor law at Quincy was heard. She was fined $50.

The continued cases of Howard L. Bailey and Joseph F. Kelley for breaking and entering and larceny at Randolph, were called and they were held in $300 each for the grand jury.

THE RIVER THAMES.

Its Prettiest Point Is From Marlow to Hurley Lock.

For the ordinary Londoner the Thames only begins at Richmond, but from there on to Oxford every reach is a delight. Magnificent as is the Hudson, it has the disadvantage of being too big for a rowboat. One might just as well be on the Atlantic. Anything smaller than an Albany day boat seems lost on its majestic breadth. But the Thames is made for the single and double sculler, the punt, the Canadian canoe and the small electric launch.

And to my mind the best of all starting points is Marlow. It is about an hour and a half's run from town and therefore well beyond the range of 'Arry and 'Arriet, who are the pests of an English as mosquitoes are of an American holiday. Marlow in itself is a delightfully typical village, with its broad main street, its old inns and manor house and its sweet smelling cottages ablaze with country flowers. And the two mile row upstream to Hurley Lock focuses the Thames at its best. It is one of the beauties of this river that it has a perfect setting. It winds in and out among wooded hills, past fields and flower laden meadows and between banks that the cleverest gardeners in the world have done all they can to beautify.—Sydney Brooks in Harper's Weekly.

AN ERRATIC VOLCANO.

Rose From the Sea, Formed an Island and Sank Again.

On June 16, 1810, the Sabrina, a British sloop of war, observed smoke arising from the sea near St. Michael's, off the Azores, and made for it, believing that a naval engagement was in progress. Her crew found, however, that great tongues of flame were issuing along with the smoke and that they had cleared for action to fight a volcano.

Forty-eight hours later an island made its appearance, having risen from a depth of forty fathoms in that period, and in another day it was fifty-one feet above the surface, with a length of about three-quarters of a mile. By July 4 the Sabrina's people were able to land on this new shore, which was then 300 feet high, with a circumference of fully a mile, with a stream six yards wide running from the center to the sea.

They took formal possession of it for his Britannic majesty, hoisting the union jack on its most conspicuous point, but by degrees the island sank until about the middle of October it vanished below the surface, with the union jack still on it, like a battleship sinking with colors flying after a fatal engagement.—London Standard.

INSECT CONVERSATION.

Antennal Language Among Ants Is a Demonstrated Fact.

Every observer of insect life seems convinced that in one way or another insects do converse. How this is done is not so easily determined. Sometimes it may be by sound, as in the case of bees with their busy hum; sometimes by touching one another on the head or abdomen, as ants do, but far more frequently by the antennae, so that Huber calls this tactile communication "antennal language."

His own experiment demonstrates the fact. Having placed a colony of ants in a closed and darkened chamber, he found them at first all scattered in disorder, but he soon saw one who had discovered an outlet return to the rest. Of these he touched a few, and speedily the whole community marched out in regular lines, evidently with the one thought of liberty.

Ants have been known to post sentinels, to send out spies and to return to their nest by signal for re-enforcements. The very aphides, the ants' milk kine, appear to understand antennal language, as do wasps also, according to Banks and Knight, for if their sentinels give no warning a nest may easily be taken.

A Fish Peculiarity.

There are some indications that fishes possess a sixth sense, the organs of which are the pores of the head and of the lateral band. This band is a row of little canals connected with the external world by holes through the scales. In these cavities, under which runs a large nerve, are found nerve heads or terminations like those of other sense organs. The use of this apparatus is unknown.

Not In Silence.

"You're forever trying to give the impression that you're a martyr," snapped Mrs. Henpeck. "I suppose you want everybody to think that you suffer in silence?"

"No," replied Mr. Henpeck; "I suffer in the perpetual absence of silence. A little silence would be a positive pleasure to me."

The Real Thing.

"Are the members of your dramatic club very enthusiastic?"

"Are they! Why, when we presented 'Hamlet' in the next village last week half the company walked all the way home on the railroad track just to give it a professional flavor."—Puck.

Member of Don't Worry Club.

"Oh, I wish I was like Richley, don't you?"

"Why?"

"Because he doesn't have to worry about his bank account running low."

"Well, neither do I. I haven't got any."—Philadelphia Press.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms.

CHAPTER X.

IT was an industrious household at Drake Hill both as to men and women folk. The fields were full of ebony backs and plying arms of toil at sunrise, and the hum and whir of loom and spinning wheels were to be heard in the negro cabins and the great house as soon as the birds.

Madam Judith Cavendish was a stern taskmistress, and especially for these latter duties. Had it not been for the stress of favor in which she held me I question if my vocation as tutor to Mistress Mary would have had much scope for the last year, since her grandmother esteemed so highly the importance of a maid's being versed in all domestic arts, such as the spinning and weaving of flax and wool and preserving and distilling and fine needlework. She set but small store by Latin and arithmetic for a maid, not even if she were naturally quick at them, as was Mistress Mary, and had it not been that she was bent on keeping me in her service at Drake Hill I doubt not that she would have clapped together the maid's books, whether or no, and set her to her wheel. As it was, a goodly part of every day was passed by her in such wise, but so fond was my pupil of her book that often I have seen her with it propped open for her reference on a chair at her side.

It was thus the next morning, the morning of the day of my Lord Culpeper's ball. It was a warm morning, and the doors and windows of the hall were set wide open and all the spring wind and scent coming in and dimity curtains flying like flags, and the gold of Mistress Mary's hair tossing now and then in a stronger gust, and she and Catherine cramming down their flax baskets, lest the flax take wings to itself and fly away. Both Mary and Catherine were at their flax wheels, but Madam Cavendish was in the loom room with some of the black women. Mary had her Latin book open, as I have said before, on a chair at her side, but Catherine span with her fair face set to some steady course of thought, though she, too, was fond of books.

Never a lesson had she taken of me, holding me in such scorn, but I questioned much at the time, and know now, that she was well acquainted with whatever knowledge her sister had got, having been taught by her mother and then keeping on by herself with her tasks. When I entered the hall, having been to Jamestown after breakfast and just returned, both maids looked up, and suddenly one of the wheels ceased its part in the duet and Catherine was on her feet and her thread fallen whither it would. "Master Wingfield," said she, "I would speak with you."

"Madam, at your service," said I, and followed her, leading out on the green before the house. "What means this—what means this, sir?" she began when she was scarcely out of hearing of her sister.

"What did you about the goods? Did you—did you"—

She gasped for further speech and looked at me with such a haughtiness of scorn as never I had seen. It is hard for any man to be attacked in such wise by a woman and be under the necessity of keeping his weapons sheathed, though he knoweth full well the exceeding convincing of them and their fine point to the case in hand.

"Did you—did you"—she went on—"did you purchase those goods yourself for my sister? Did you?"

I bowed again. "Madam," said I, "whatever I have, and my poor flesh and blood and soul also, are at the service of not only your sister, but her family."

I marveled much as I spoke thus to see no flush of shameful consciousness overspread the maid's face, but none did, and she continued speaking with that sharpness of hers, both as to pale look and voice, which wounded like cold steel, which leaves an additional sting because of the frost in it. "Know you not, sir," said she, "that we cannot suffer a man in your position, a—a—to purchase my sister's wardrobe?" Then, before I knew what she was about to do, in went her hand to a broidered pocket which hung at her girdle and out she drew a flashing store of rings and brooches and one long necklace flashing with green stones. "Here, take these," she cried out. "I have no money, but such an insult I will not suffer that my sister goes clad at your expense to the ball tonight. Take these. They are five times the value of the goods."

I would in that minute have given ten years of my life had Mistress Catherine Cavendish been a man and I could have felled her to the ground, and no man knowing what I believed I knew could have blamed me. The flashes of red and green from those rings and gewgaws which she held out seemed to pass my eyes to my very soul.

"Take them," she said. "Why do you not take them, sir?"

"I have no need of jewels, madam," I said, "and whatever the servant hath is his master's by right, and his master doth but take his own and no discredit to him."

She fairly wrung her hands in her helpless wrath, and the gems glittered anew. "But—but," she stammered out, "know you the full result of this, Harry Wingfield? She, my sister Mary, thinks that I—I—sent to England for the goods for her. She knows that I have some acquaintance with what she hath done, and she—she is blessing me for it, and I cannot deny what she thinks. I—I—cannot tell her what you—you have done, lest—lest"—

To my great astonishment she stopped short with such a flame of blushes as I had never seen on her face before, and I was at a loss to know what she might mean, but supposed that she considered that the shame of Mistress Mary's wearing finery which had been paid for out of a convict's purse would be more than she could put upon her and yet that she dared not inform her lest she refuse to wear the sky blue robe to the governor's ball and so anger Madam Cavendish.

"Madam," I said, "your sister is but blessing you for what you would have done, and wherefore need you fret?"

"God knows I would," she broke out passionately. "Every jewel I possess, the very gown from my back, would I have sold to save her this had I but known. Why did she not tell me? Why did not she tell me? Oh, Harry, I pray you to take these jewels!"

"I cannot take them, madam," I said. Yet such was her distress I was sorry for her, though I believed it to be rooted and grounded in falsity and that she had no need to regard with such disapprobation her sister's being indebted to an English gentleman who gave her in all honor the best he had. Yet could I not yield and take those jewels for more reasons than one; not only should I have lost the dear delight of having served Mary Cavendish, but I had a memory of wrong which would not suffer me to touch those rings nor to allow that innocent maid to be benefited by them since I cannot say what dark suspicions seized me when I looked at them.

Catherine offering her jewels to pay for Mary's wardrobe

"My God," she said, "was ever such a web of falsehood as this? Here must I bear my sister's blessings upon me for what I have done, and I knowing all the time that 'twas you, and yet she must not know." Then again that flame of red overspread her face and neck to the meet of her muslin kerchief, and I knew not why.

"Madam," I said, "one deception opens the way for a whole flock." And I spoke with something of a double meaning, but she only cried out, with apparently no understanding of it, that things had come to a cruel pass, and back to the house she went, and I presently followed her to get my gun, having a mind to shoot a few wild fowl, since my pupil was at her wheel.

Our bargains are made by marking down our own stock to a low price, not by purchasing inferior goods to make an attractive price.

It is a mistake to infer that we carry only high-priced fabrics. We have medium grades as well, and our prices are low because our expenses are proportioned over a volume of business exceeded by few in our specialty in the United States, and equaled by none in New England.

Lovely hours! while Summer lingers,
Holding back with golden fingers
Fading bloom and fleeting bird,
Many visions fancy weave;
Hark! a footfall on the leaves,—
And, lo, a magic bark is heard
Grating on the sandy shore;
Everywhere the Red man's spirit
Glides as in the days of yore.

INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE.

Arthur E. Baxter Enters the Contest for the Legislature.

Arthur E. Baxter, a well-known Republican and labor man, has decided to enter the Representative contest this year. He is not the least dismayed by the fact that there are already nominated two Republicans, two Democrats and two Socialists, but this morning took out nomination papers at the City Clerk's office at City Hall,

Arthur E. Baxter, popularly known as "Ed" Baxter, is a native of Quincy. He was born Sept. 3, 1851, in the house now No. 57 Gay street, owned by John W. Moore. When about three years old he moved to West Quincy, and made his home in the family of the late Horace Johnson, at the corner of Cross and Crescent streets, now the residence of Dr. Thomas J. Dion, till the death of Mr. Johnson in 1891.

Mr. Baxter received his education at the Willard school and attended the Quincy High school three years.

At the age of seventeen he began to learn the trade of a granite tool sharpener and has worked at it ever since, with the exception of a short time in 1892, when he was appointed an Immigrant Inspector by the Hon. Charles Foster, then Secretary of the Treasury.

He has been a life long Republican and was elected a member of Republican Town Committee from West Quincy in 1882, and was elected to the regular or auxiliary committee continuously till 1896, altough he resigned in 1891 and voted for Gov. Russell instead of Charles H. Allen, on account of the latters opposition to labor measures in the House of Representatives.

He was appointed a Ward 4 Republican election officer every year from the establishment of precinct voting till 1897.

He has been a member of the Granite Cutter's National Union nearly 15 years. He was financial secretary three years, and for two years treasurer of the Tool Sharpeners' Branch No. 1 of this city.

He has served many times over the joint executive committee of the Granite Manufacturers' Association and Granite Cutters National Union when making new bills of prices.

In 1895, a petition bearing on 300 names, including those of the senator and representatives from this district, was presentated to Gov. Wolcott asking his appointment as member of State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation.

If elected to the Legislature, the cause of labor will have a consistent friend in the House of Representatives.

Since Oct. 1897, Mr. Baxter has resided at the Hancock House, and is now employed by the monumental firm of Bishop & LeCount of Garfield street.

WAS UNANIMOUS.

Asa P. French Renominated for District Attorney.

Quincy delegates were prominent at the Republican convention for district attorney for the Southeastern district held at Wesleyan hall, Boston, yesterday, Councilman George Adams serving ably as chairman, and another Quincy councilman being elected on the district committee of five.

George W. Stetson of Middleboro was secretary of the convention.

CHAIRMAN ADAMS.

There was no opposition to Asa P. French, Esq., of Randolph, the efficient district attorney, and upon motion of Judge Grover of Canton, seconded by George F. Nudd, he was unanimously renominated by acclamation.

The following district committee was elected: W. S. Baker, of Brookline; George W. Stetson of Middleboro; E. R. Stone of Quincy; J. S. Allen of Brockton; J. F. Collingswood of Plymouth.

District Attorney French was presented to the convention, and accepted the nomination, thanking the delegates for a continuation of their confidence.

FOR THREE DAYS.

Missing Man Found on a Much Traveled Street.

Joshua Brown of Garfield street, who has been missing since Monday, was found by the police yesterday under a tree at corner of South and Scammell streets. His feet were partly paralyzed and he was in a precarious condition. He left home Monday afternoon, and not returning that night, his family became worried and inquires were made at the Boston police headquarters and the hospitals.

No trace of him could be found. His family then instituted a search but they were also unsuccessful. Yesterday the Quincy police were called in and they succeeded in finding him as stated above.

Brown's own story of his whereabouts since Monday seem hardly credible, yet there is nothing known to the contrary. He says that he left home Monday to go to Badgers shop at West Quincy. He got on to the wrong car and became somewhat dazed. When he came to himself he was on a car on Quincy avenue.

He got off the car at the corner of Scammell street and walked through toward South street. Here his feet became paralyzed and he lost his mind. When he came to himself he was under the tree where he was found. Here he claims that he has laid ever since. Part of the time he was conscious and part of the time unconscious.

During his conscious moments, he says that he saw people passing along the street and called to them for a drink of water and for something to eat but no help was proffered.

According to his story, therefore, he was under the tree at the corner of South and Scammell street since Monday. When found by the police his clothing was wet through and his feet were partly paralyzed, which would appear to substantiate his story. It hardly seems possible, however, that any person could have been out through the stormy cold weather the past week and not have died from exposure. His condition now is serious and his recovery a matter of doubt.

WHIPPLE CAPTURED

Outlawed Farmer Killed Himself After Being Trapped

East Glastonbury, Conn., Oct. 8.—In an attempt to make good his threat not to be taken alive, John Whipple, the outlaw farmer, put two bullets into his head when he found himself cornered by a posse of armed men in the barn of Theodore Evans on the South Glastonbury highway last evening.

Since Sept. 12 Whipple has defied the officers of the law who wanted him in the first place for shooting a neighbor, and later for setting fires which destroyed two sets of farm buildings, and since last Sunday on the additional charge of shooting State Officer Louks. Almost every day for three weeks Whipple has kept in the woods. It was known that he was heavily armed and that he would shoot anyone who attempted to take him.

The trouble grew out of money matters with a neighbor, Frank W. Starman, which finally led to a foreclosure of the mortgage on Whipple's house and the placing of Whipple's children by the town in places where they would have proper care.

Hartford, Oct. 8.—John Whipple, who was brought to the Hartford hospital, died shortly before midnight.

A $100,000 Hanna Mausoleum

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 8.—Three sons of the late Senator Hanna are to erect a $100,000 mausoleum on the family lot in Lake View cemetery, Cleveland, to contain 18 catacombs for members of the Hanna family. It will be 49 feet long, 25 wide and 24 high. A Worcester concern has been awarded the contract, and the work is to be completed by spring.

Tardy Arrests For Old Crime

Clinton, Mass., Oct. 8.—Nason N. Robinson of this town was arrested in Boston last evening, charged with holding up two trolley cars here on Jan. 9 and March 2 last. The police say that Robinson made a confession implicating John O'Malley, also of this town. O'Malley was arrested last night as he stepped off a Leominster trolley car.

Dangerously Shot by Stepson

Auburn, Me., Oct. 8.—James Hiltz, aged 50, was shot last night by his stepson, Harris Tobin, 16 years old. A bullet from a 22-calibre revolver pierced his left lung and his condition is critical. Tobin surrendered to the police. He gave no explanation of the shooting.

Hotel Proprietor Fails

Boston, Oct. 8.—Patrick H. Hurley, proprietor of a hotel at Worcester, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. The total liabilities are $47,516.20, all of which are unsecured, the assets amounting to $500. There are about 90 creditors, chiefly for supplies to the hotel.

Gifts to Customs Examiner

Boston, Oct. 8.—In the testimony in the Glasgow Manufacturing company smuggling case, evidence was offered to the effect that John W. Trafton, one of the examiners at the custom house, had received gifts of furniture from the defendant company.

Despondent Over Ill Health

Malden, Mass., Oct. 8.—Joseph W. Davis, 54 years old, former member of the city council, committed suicide last night at his home. Davis had been in ill-health and this is supposed to have made him despondent.

CHAPIN THE WINNER

Named For Treasurer by Massachusetts Republicans

THE RECIPROCITY PLANK

Boston Chamber of Commerce Gets "Long End" of It--Democratic Platform Assails the Protective Tariff

Boston, Oct. 8.—At the Republican state convention all of the candidates, excepting one for treasurer, were selected by acclamation. Arthur B. Chapin of Holyoke was nominated as a candidate for this office.

Chairman Moody spoke at length upon the issues of the campaign. He bases his hope of victory upon the record of the party, which he presented at length. His reference to reciprocity was conservative and in line with the national platform and the president's letter of acceptance. He pointed out the strong character of the presidential candidate as one of the many reasons why he expects victory.

The platform contains a plank on reciprocity which is a compromise, but is in the nature of a concession to the Chamber of Commerce committee of one hundred. The plank reaffirms, in substance, what President Roosevelt said in his message to congress in 1902, which was substantially that no treaty can be made which may not affect injuriously some interest, even if it should conserve to the greatest good of the greatest number; we favor reciprocal treaties, when, in the language of the president, "the minimum of damage done may be disregarded for the sake of the maximum of good accomplished."

A feature of the session was an address by Senator Lodge, who declared he never had opposed reciprocity which would benefit the United States and made a sweeping reply to those who have criticized his course in congress and during the campaign.

While the delegates were voting for candidates for treasurer the hall presented an animated appearance. The committee on credentials reported that credentials had been received from 1537 delegates, a few more than at first reported. The report showed 1511 votes had been cast, and of these Arthur B. Chapin of Holyoke received 821; John J. Whipple of Brockton, 688; scattering, 2. The number necessary for choice was 755. Mr. Chapin was declared elected as the party's candidate for state treasurer. The announcement was greeted with a great outburst of enthusiasm.

Opposed to Protective Tariff

Boston, Oct. 8.—With the exception of a brief debate over the proposition to reduce the membership-at-large on the state committee from 25 to 18 in number, the proceedings of the Democratic convention were conducted without friction. The entire state ticket was nominated by acclamation.

The platform adopted by the convention endorsed the national candidates and platform; assailed the protective tariff, charging that the system of protection was responsible for the prosperity of "the huge industrial giant, otherwise known as 'infant industries,' basking peacefully in the sunshine of the Dingley tariff, content with the assurance that no Republican government agent will 'run amuck' or in any way disturb their monopolistic tranquility." The platform also declared in favor of Philippine independence.

Previous to the adjournment of the convention, resolutions eulogistic of the services of the late Senator Hoar were unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

National Committee Won't Interfere

Chicago, Oct. 8.—National Committeeman New, who has had particular charge of Wisconsin for the Republican national committee, has returned to Chicago. "We had hoped that the decision of the supreme court would bring about harmony," he said, "but we realize that it is not for the national committee to interfere nor to give instructions to the Wisconsin voters."

To Index 700,000 Names

New York, Oct. 8.—State Superintendent of Elections Morgan has arranged with the police department to have the lists of all registered voters in Greater New York delivered to him for compilation into a card index. This index will embrace probably 700,000 names. Morgan says the plan is directed toward making a clean election.

Parker Returns to Esopus

Esopus, N. Y., Oct. 8.—Judge Parker reached home from New York last evening and at once drove over his farm and inspected the progress made in the fall ploughing. He then worked on his correspondence. There were no callers at Rosemount in the evening.

Scofield's Nomination Ratified

Milwaukee, Oct. 8.—The national Republican (Stalwart) state central committee have ratified the selection of Edward Scofield to fill the vacancy caused by the withdrawal of S. A. Cook from the head of the "Stalwart" ticket.

Mrs Curzon's Condition Grave

A HEARTY GREETING

Reception to English Primate In the Cradle of Liberty

OLNEY TOUCHES ON WAR

Its Spirit Must Be Exorcised and Tide of Militarism Checked--Archbishop Makes Graceful Response to Welcome

Boston, Oct. 8.—Archbishop Thomas R. Davidson was tendered a grand reception by the citizens of Boston in Faneuil hall here. He was honored, not especially as the head of the Anglican church, but as one of the leading citizens of Great Britain, and as a member of one of the branches of the British government. Representatives of Boston's proudest families were in the throng, touching elbows with men and women distinctly of the rank and file; musicians of world-wide fame, professional people, as well as those in humble working garb, formed the dense mass of humanity which made the historic place almost suffocating.

The archbishop was loudly applauded when he entered the hall with Bishop Lawrence, former Secretary of State Olney, President Eliot of Harvard university and Major Higginson. Major Higginson presided, and introduced as the first speaker President Eliot, who, in a brief address, referred to the spirit of toleration in religion which had been established in this state. President Eliot, who is a Unitarian, said that in welcoming the distinguished Englishman, who is the head of the Anglican church, the decendants of the Puritans were not abandoning the faith of their fathers. His address was in a facetious vein.

Richard Olney in his address spoke of the war spirit which, he said, was prevalent at the present time. He thought the tide of militarism should be checked. Mr. Olney said that The Hague tribunal and other like contrivances, however commendable in purpose and skilful in method, cannot reach the root of the matter. "To abolish war the war spirit must be exorcised. That is an end which may well inspire the best energies of all Christian men and Christian churches. Nothing can promote it so effectively as giving check to the rising tide of militarism in this country. And if our friend from over the seas shall contribute to that result by counsel and speech and the powerful influence he deservedly exerts on both sides of the Atlantic, his visit to this country will resolve itself into a mission of beneficence of which it would be difficult to exaggerate."

The chairman next presented the guest of honor as a stanch patriot and a great public servant, whose coming to America "will bring advancement in religious, educational and social bonds of sympathy, which, Heaven knows, are so much needed." The English primate was accorded an enthusiastic reception. When he could make himself heard, he said:

"I thank you and the distinguished speakers who preceded me for the cordiality of this greeting. As life rolls on we find ourselves more and more accustomed to the unexpected, but if I had been asked six months ago the most unlikely thing that could happen to me I should have said a reception like this in this place. I should indeed be misusing your kindness if I saw in this warm welcome anything of a denominational or political character even in the smallest degree. It is given to one who, perforce, occupies a high place in England, and, I feel I may add, has striven, even though inadequately, to perform faithfully the duties that concern the wellbeing of his country in social, industrial and educational matters. To one who has thus striven, the welcome you have accorded me today is most pleasant."

He then spoke of the famous buildings of the world, and said that few can show a prouder record or have felt the glory of liberty in its largest sense like Faneuil hall. "I can lay claim to no eloquence of tongue which fills us duller folk with a mixture of envy and despair, but I want you to know that that the courtesy of your act is another instance of the links which bind us together in absolute bonds more closely every day."

Our severance of a hundred years, the primate said, was an object lesson, but now the English-speaking world should be like one personality and try to do what it can for the rest of the world. The two great nations have become identified with liberty and freedom under wise control wrought out in a way that no other race of men has known. English-speaking people are absolutely irresistible for the world's peace. He said he was glad to echo Mr. Olney's words, especially those concerning international amity. Our hope is for the world's absolute freedom. In closing the archbishop said: "I never can forget what you have done for me this day."

Wager Between Horse Lovers

New York, Oct. 8.—To support his theory that it would be better for the thoroughbred race horse if he were not trained or raced until at least 4 years old, President Williams of the California Jockey club has matched his 4-year-old H. F. Perley against Sidney Paget's 2-year-old Ralbert. Paget believes that thoroughbreds are not harmed by early training. A side bet of $2000 and the ultimate ownership of both racers depends upon the result of a three-furlong spin.

Cambridge, O., Oct. 8.—Herbert O. Barber, former vice president of the defunct Commercial bank of Cambridge, who disappeared June 11, with his brother-in-law, P. C. Patterson of the bank, returned home last evening and was arrested. Barber and Patterson's joint shortage is estimated at $150,000. Barber's bond was fixed at $25,000, which he furnished.

LABOR MEN FOR ROOSEVELT

Leader of the Car Mechanics Says the Workingmen Favor Republicans.

Charles W. Stanglen of Baltimore, supreme chief of the Car Inspectors, Car Builders and Railway Mechanics of America and chairman of the conference committee of the railway employees of Maryland, whose duties carry him from one end of the country to the other, says:

"From the standpoint of the laboring class there is no doubt of the election of Roosevelt and Fairbanks with the majorities that characterized the last two campaigns. The working people are almost unanimously for the Republican nominees. I have traveled considerably in West Virginia lately, and it is my honest belief that the Republican majority in the Panhandle State will be larger than ever. Davis will never be able to carry his own state."

CONGO CRUELTIES

King Leopold Charged With Being Personally Responsible

A BLOT ON CIVILIZATION

Terrible Atrocities Committed For Sake of Wealth and Self-Aggrandizement--Branches of Peace Bureau All Over World

Boston, Oct. 8.—King Leopold of Belgium was assailed for his policy as sovereign of the Congo Free State at a public meeting held here in connection with the sessions of the International Peace congress. The meeting, which was one of the largest of the congress, had been called to consider the mutual relation of races and the menace to the world's order through the exploitation of weaker peoples.

The attack upon King Leopold was delivered by E. T. Morel of England, who represented the Congo Reform association. Mr. Morel charged that the king was personally responsible in a large measure for the cruelties which are practiced on the natives of the Congo Free State in the terrific endeavors of monopolistic commercial organizations to obtain from the country all the ivory and rubber that was possible.

The government policy of the Congo also was bitterly denounced by Rev. W. M. Morrison, for seven years a missionary in the Congo land.

When Head had concluded his defense of King Leopold, Charles F. Dole, chairman of the meeting, put the question to the audience of whether it was sane and just and reasonable in this supposedly Christian era that any person should have the right to will the control and destiny of the land and people, like that of the Congo State, to any other people or nation, as King Leopold seemed to have done when he made a will leaving the Congo either to Belgium or, if Belgium refused to pay the money expended in the Congo, then to the republic of France.

The king was defended by George H. Head of England, who submitted that Leopold had done all possible to remove the cruelties and who also urgently asserted that whatever profits came from the trading and development in the Congo did not pass to King Leopold at all, but were expended instead to the development of the Congo State and in public works in Belgium.

The congress accepted a report of the committee on propaganda, recommending that the congress in 1905 be held in Switzerland. The same committee's report in favor of the establishment of branches of the Berne Peace bureau in the leading cities of the world, so that the doctrines of peace might be effectually disseminated throughout the globe, was also adopted unanimously. The congress adopted resolutions recommending all nations to enter into a treaty ensuring, in case of dispute between countries, that the difference would be submitted for settlement to a union of all the powers.

A second public meeting was later held to consider the progress of the peace movement in Europe, with addresses by prominent foreign delegates to the congress.

In a brief, after-dinner speech delivered before the International Peace congress in Horticultural hall last evening, Booker T. Washington arraigned the Belgian government for the alleged outrages in the Congo Free State and declared that he had evidence of abuse and cruelty, and said that a state of affairs existed that was a blot upon modern civilization.

Introducing Mr. Washington, President Paine of the congress referred to him as "honored almost universally throughout this country, but especially in Boston." The company arose and greeted Washington as they did no other guest of the evening.

After acknowledging the unusual and spontaneous reception, Washington at once plunged into an earnest denunciation of the wrongs which, he claimed, were being perpetrated upon the blacks of the Congo Free State. "I have testimony direct," said he, "from Dr. Shephard and from the lips of Dr. Morrison, two men who have gone into the Congo Free State to work among their own peoples. The influence of the civilized world should be felt and should free these people from the barbarities they are now suffering. Their villages have been burned, their people murdered and maimed. Dr. Shephard tells me that he has seen with his own eyes, in one village, 81 human hands hung up to dry to be presented to the Belgian authorities to show that the soldiers had done their duty. And these atrocities are committed for the sake of wealth and self-aggrandizement. Europe should set a better example to my people in Africa.

"There is another condition concerning which my race should have the sympathy and help of such an organization as this. There exist in our own country mobs of men who are given to lynching and burning men for supposed or real crimes without due process of law. Race hatred never settled any problem upon this earth. The way for one race to show a greater degree of superiority over any other is by a greater degree of kindness, of thoughtfulness and of brotherly love. No race is free indeed so long as it is ruled by passion and brute force." Mr. Washington closed by pledging to the cause of peace the efforts of his people.

ANARCHY IN MOROCCO

Various Tribes Have the Whole Country at Their Mercy

London, Oct. 8.—The Times Tangier correspondent describes the growth of anarchy throughout Morocco. The tribes, the correspondent says, only refrain from open rebellion because there is nobody against whom to rebel, as the sultan's authority is non-existent except inside the towns. All attempts to collect tribal levies and to secure recruits have failed. The sultan remains at Fez, with only a few hundred ill-paid, lawless soldiers.

Moorish officials everywhere, the dispatch adds, are taking advantage of the situation to amass money while the sun shines and the governor of Tangier is already seriously compromised in affairs with several of the legations.

Time Not Ripe For Mediation

London, Oct. 8.—Replying to a letter from the International Arbitration and Peace association suggesting that the time is at hand when England, in concert with other powers, can, with good hope of success, appeal to the governments of Russia and Japan to suspend the conflict in the far east, Foreign Minister Lansdowne writes as follows: "Neither of the belligerents having expressed any desire for mediation on the part of other powers, his majesty's government does not consider that it could, with advantage, take such action as is suggested by your committee."

Mothers Needlessly Scared

New York, Oct. 8.—False rumors that a so-called "Black Hand" plot was on foot to destroy a public school in the upper East Side caused a riot of several hundred Italian women, mothers of the children attending the school, which excited the neighborhood, alarmed the teachers and pupils and required a force of police to quell. Finally the women were driven away and after 1900 children in the school had been quieted they were sent home to their parents an hour before the usual time.

American Flag Saved Him

San Diego, Cal., Oct. 8.—Pursued by the Mexican authorities after being released from jail on bail, Captain Manha of the schooner May took refuge on the British steamer St. Denis, where the captain locked him in and nailed the American flag on the door. The attempt to retake him was abandoned. Manha arrived here on the St. Denis last night. He had been arrested on the charge of poaching guano from Mexican territory.

Improved Trade Conditions

New York, Oct. 8.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says that with the crops almost beyond danger, prices of securities at the highest point since May, 1903, and idle machinery resumed at many factories and mills that have been closed for months, the business outlook grows steadily brighter. Confidence is manifested by an increased disposition to provide for future requirements.

As to Payne's Successor

Washington, Oct. 8.—It is understood that it is the belief of the officials of the department of justice that, as the vacancy in the office of postmaster general occurred during the recess of congress, the president is authorized to designate an acting postmaster general to serve until former Secretary Cortelyou is ready to assume his new duties as postmaster general, instead of for 30 days only.

Waggaman Owes the Pope

Washington, Oct. 8.—Pope Pius X. appears among the unsecured creditors of T. E. Waggaman, recently declared a bankrupt. The item due him as reported by Waggaman in his schedule of debts filed in the bankruptcy court is referred to as a certain check not presented for payment. The check is stated to be for $500.

Wilson Goes With Funeral Party

Washington, Oct. 8.—The special train carrying the body of Henry C. Payne and the funeral party left here late yesterday. Secretary Wilson is the only cabinet officer who went with the train, but the plans contemplate Secretary Shaw and Secretary Metcalf joining the funeral party later.

Shells Exploded In Fort

Antwerp, Oct. 8.—Three shells exploded in Fort Sainte Marie, at Calloo. Eleven soldiers were killed and many were injured. The explosion occurred while the shells were being placed in the magazine, which was completely destroyed.

An Increase In Expenses

Washington, Oct. 8.—The estimates for the department of agriculture, as finally framed by Secretary Wilson for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1905, aggregate $5,699,810. This is an increase of $268,270 over the present year.

Negro Killed Deputy Sheriff

Tacoma, Fla., Oct. 8.—Deputy Sheriff Chamberlain was shot by a negro near his home here while in a wagon with his wife. He died instantly. Excitement is at the highest pitch and trouble is feared if the negro is caught.

Broader Liberty For Womankind

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

THE general movement toward a broader liberty and higher status for womankind, which in England has been rather formidably designated as "the revolt of the daughters," IS A GENUINE MOVEMENT, arising naturally out of the present period of preparation for an ideal "woman's age"—that is to say, a time when woman, graduated from the restrictions of a purely domestic life, shall make her thought and sentiment, her whole distinctive feminine nature, A DIRECT AND IMPORTANT INFLUENCE in shaping into order the vast complex world of society. The demands of the daughters do not appear to be excessively radical in themselves, however much they may shock the conservative British matron. According to Alys Pearsall Smith, who has spoken very sensibly and clearly for her sisters in this category, the girls want, in case they are ambitious for a college career, THE SAME ENCOURAGEMENT FROM THE FAMILY THAT THEIR BROTHERS GET UNDER SIMILAR CIRCUMSTANCES. And since in the matter of marriage they have an acknowledged right to arrange their own lives why not let them likewise arrange their lives if they do not marry?

SELF SACRIFICE, ALYS SMITH DECLARES, MAY BE CARRIED TO THE POINT OF PERVERSION IN ENCOURAGING SELFISHNESS IN OTHERS.

Blessed are they that ask little, FOR THEY SHALL GET NOTHING, whereas "the girls who insist upon an opportunity for self development and training at perhaps the cost to their parents of some passing pleasure will in the end bring far more interest and satisfaction into their lives than the one who has wasted her days of development in sacrificing all her highest powers to the petty occupations and amiabilities demanded from her, often so unthinkingly, by the home circle." In short, the grownup girl of the period wants to be treated AS A RESPONSIBLE HUMAN ADULT who has outgrown chaperons and who is capable of being trusted with liberty and a latchkey and an opportunity in life.

Their "discussion" of these matters is like that of the decollete question. The average normal woman, not to speak of the one who is fortunate enough to be exceptionally gifted in the matter of material charms, simply dresses low necked on the proper prescribed occasions as a right and privelege—ONE MIGHT ALMOST SAY A DUTY. The only persons who feel called upon to criticise or dispute the matter are those in whom the propriety of wearing dresses closed to the throat is BUT TOO OBVIOUS.

America to Lead the World

By Rev. R. S. MACARTHUR of New York

IF Japan wins it will mark the first step toward Anglo-Saxon supremacy of the world. Japan will lead China, Britain will lead Japan, AND AMERICA WILL LEAD BRITAIN. The rest of Europe will follow easily. Look at decadent Portugal, bigoted, poverty stricken Spain, volcanic France, Austria-Hungary about to disintegrate, and so on. Put them all under the rule of two Anglo-Saxon nations and the world will be FOR CIVILIZATION, PEACE AND CHRISTIANITY.

THE YELLOW PERIL IS, THEN, THE GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY FOR THE WORLD.

Why Heroes' Fame Is Accidental

By T. P. O'CONNOR, Member of British Parliament

HOW accidental the fame of heroism AND EVEN THE HEROISMS THEMSELVES! All the heroisms of the Homeric heroes would have been not unrecorded only, but unachieved, if it were not that a jealous woman was overlooked in an invitation to a wedding.

There are hundreds in every great city, and in every country there are thousands of men, women and children, with a latent capacity of heroism who go through life unnoted or despised BECAUSE NO ACCIDENT HAS EVOKED IT. Again, the recognition or irrecognition of those heroisms which accident has evoked is often accidental. They happen, perhaps inopportunely, when attention is absorbed by something which imposes more upon the public imagination. In the same week in which the name of the boy hero of the Norge was in every paper and on every lip a boy hero who threw himself in front of an express train to seize a little brother and fling him aside off the track at the cost of his own life ATTRACTED HARDLY A MOMENT'S NOTICE.

Some time since a milk wagon, containing only a little girl of three, was stopped in its runaway flight down the street by a boy apparently about twelve. First of all, with extraordinary presence of mind, the lad rolled a large empty tub which was standing at a shop door into the middle of the road, and when this made the horse swerve and slacken for a moment his furious pace the boy seized and hung on to the bridle, at the same time throwing up his legs and clasping them tightly around the horse's neck. This brought the frightened brute to a dead stop and allowed the bystanders to hurry up and lift the little girl from the cart. While they were fussing about the girl the boy slipped quietly away, and neither then nor since could any trace of him be discovered.

BECAUSE OF HIS MODESTY, AND BECAUSE OF THAT ONLY, THAT BOY IS NOT A HERO.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

The Bostons must win both games in Boston today to obtain the lead in the American league. An "awful big" crowd is expected at the game, and excitement will run high.

Previous to the publication of the Ledger, today, probably not one in ten could guess which grammar school of the city entered the largest number of graduates in the High school this year. It is not always the school that has the largest enrollment.

Only seventy-eight years ago yesterday, Oct. 7, 1826, the first incorporated railway in the United States was opened at Quincy, Massachusetts. Thus in the lifetime of the octogenarian of today the whole railway system of the country has been constructed, and Quincy gave it the start.

In a political campaign supposed to be serious enough to change the policy of the Government the intelligent and serious American voter will demand something better as a reason for changing his party preferences than carping criticisms of the nation's Chief Executive or chronic opposition to the party in power. Many once dominant issues are now in the political graveyard.

A remarkable admission is made by a very prominent metropolitan newspaper to the effect that platform makers, candidates and spellbinders are powerless in their efforts to frame the issues upon which the present campaign turns. One who has read President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance is certainly not at a loss to know what are the issues of the day.

One evidence of the remarkable progress of this country during Republican policies and administrations, is found in the fact that some things which the world needs are made in this country alone. England, for instance, has neither plants nor tools for the manufacture of steel cars, and the London underground railways have been obliged to place orders in New York for four hundred steel cars. This is equal to two millions of dollars in work and materials for the United States.

Drift of Opinion.

☞Springfield is to build a new technical high school building to accommodate 500 pupils at a cost of $150,000. The plans are so drawn that extensions to accommodate as many more pupils will involve an extra cost of only $40,000. Extravagant school building is evidently not in favor in Springfield.—New Bedford Standard.

☞One feature of the campaign that makes a man wonder at the use of spell blinders is lauding of Admiral Schley for the destruction of the Spanish fleet and abusing the President for alleged imperialism. If Admiral Schley's victory at Santiago was not a logical step towards expansion or imperialism, what in the name of Aguinaldo was it?—Lynn Item.

☞The law of Ohio struck heavily at crime when it provided a life sentence for the burglar of an inhabited house, and a grand jury at Chicago suggests another heavy blow in its recommendation that fine and imprisonment be the punishment for the pistol carrier, or the dirk carrier, instead of the present general provision of fine or imprisonment. The Chicago suggestion, if adopted, would make the imposition of a jail sentence mandatory. The pistol carrier or the dirk carrier is found in every community—a menace to the law-abiding citizen, a law unto himself and an inciter of himself to seek redress at his own hands rather than at the hands of the law. The revolverless or the dirkless citizen is no menace to any man, and the way to bring him to that condition is by adding imprisonment to the fine now provided—and then enforce the statute, as the courts are enforcing the statute imposing life sentences on the burglar of an inhabited house.—Cincinnati Commercial.

TRADE UNIONS.

Discussed by English Delegate to the Peace Conference.

Peter Curran, one of the delegates from England to the Peace Congress in Boston, gave an address in Hancock hall last evening at the smoke talk held under the auspices of the Shipwrights, Joiners and Caulkers Union.

There was a large crowd present, and Mr. Curran, who comes from a shipbuilding center of England, was given a hearty welcome. G. H. Kirnan, one of the Fore River yard superintendents presided, and in opening the meeting said that the chief weakness of most labor unions was too much local government and control of funds.

This allows unwarranted strikes between unions and employers by hotheaded and unreasoning members. After his experiences of twenty-five years in shipbuilding centers in England, Germany and America, he was convinced that the best workmen were trade unionists, and that their efficiency conserves the best interest of the employers.

Mr. Curran was then introduced. He said he believed when nations go to war, the workingmen are the principal sufferers, as they not only supply the money by paying war taxes, but supply men whose lives are sacrificed. There were other wars than international ones. Internal wars, especially when organized capital and labor meet and carry with them poverty and destruction. Not perhaps to the extent of international wars, but to a very great extent.

The strike weapon is a dangerous one. We, trade unionists, claim the right to strike if there is no other possibility.

If employers turn a deaf ear to the appeal of the voice of labor, we ought to strike to receive our rights. But every other method should be used before workmen threw down their tools.

He was sorry to say that the industrial outlook in the old country was far from being satisfactory.

Many of the shipbuilding yards on the Tyne and Clyde were practically idle. They have not recovered from the South African war. The cost of commodities have gone up from 2s, 6d, to 3s, 3d, compared with five years ago.

He criticised the so-called Americanizing of the British industries, such as the bonus and task-work systems, saying that they turned out mere automatons, where, under the old system, work was so divided and subdivided, finished mechanics were produced.

President John F. Tobin, of the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, spoke on trade Unions from American experience.

Refreshments were served and vocal and instrumental music was furnished by members of the union.

ANCIENTS RETURN.

The Hospitality of the South Thoroughly Enjoyed.

The Ancients have arrived home from Norfolk, Va., and the Quincy delegation say it was the best trip they ever had. Everything possible was done for them, so there was nothing to do but enjoy themselves, which they certainly did.

The reception at Norfolk was most kindly. Mayor Riddick opened the city wide to the visitors and a large local committee looked after the comfort and pleasure of the visitors. There were 257 men in the company, and their gorgeous uniforms completely captuated the female hearts. "Ain't they just grand" and "I could live on the sight of these splendid looking men" were some of the remarks heard.

As the command marched from the steamer to their hotel they were greeted with constant applause from the thousands that lined the streets and occupied every point of vantage.

A deed of the city was presented to Capt. Usher by President Burwell and the Massachusetts boys made good use of it.

Upon arriving in Boston yesterday, the company marched to the armory where it was dismissed after a speech of thanks by Capt. Usher.

W. R. C. Convention.

The Norfolk association of the Woman's Relief Corps, which includes Avon, Brookline, Foxboro, Franklin, Hyde Park, Canton, Randolph, Needham, Quincy and other towns, is to be entertained next Wednesday by Huntington F. Wolcott Corps of Milton. The convention will be held at the Congregational church, the exercises beginning at ten o'clock. It is expected between 300 and 400 will be present, also fifty G. A. R. men.

Basket Ball Team.

The Quincy basket ball team will begin its season's games in Hancock hall about Nov. 1. The team is better and stronger than last year, and some good games may be expected. There is a possibility of a Norfolk county league being formed, to include teams from Quincy, West Quincy, Milton, Dorchester, Hyde Park and other places.

CLASS OF 1908.

All the Grammar School Buildings

Well Represented at the High School.

Few Could Guess the Leaders in Numbers.

If the number of new pupils in the entering class at the Quincy High school was divided by 11, the number of grammar schools in the city, the result would be 27. It is a singular fact that each of the buildings sent from 20 to 28 pupils, the largest number from the Massachusetts Fields and the John Hancock, and the smallest number from the Gridley Bryant and Cranch.

At the same time, 12 from out-of-town schools became members of the entering class, and five went into higher classes.

The summary shows the number to graduate from each building and the number to enter the High school:

	Grammar Graduates.	Now at High.
Adams,	40	23
Coddington,	32	16
Cranch,	37	21
Gridley Bryant,	28	20
John Hancock,	42	28
Lincoln,	36	23
Mass. Fields,	37	28
Quincy,	35	23
Washington,	34	23
Willard,	45	27
Wollaston,	31	24

Many of the grammar graduates also entered the Woodward Institute and other schools.

The list below show from what buildings the new class came, and at a glance one can see how the number of boys and girls compare, as a paragraph is devoted to each:

FIRE ALARM.

For Missing Bride-to-be at Braintree.

Fruitless Search for an Hour.

Said to Have Left Town a Few Minutes Before Alarm.

The wedding of Bernard L. Simonds and Miss Minnie A. Whitney which was planned for last evening failed on account of the disappearance of Miss Whitney. They were to be married at the home of Rev. A. E. Legg, and while Mr. Simonds was waiting for her at her home on Fountain street she suddenly disappeared.

After trying to find her in vain Mr. Simond rung in box 45 of the fire alarm for assistance. The recall was not sounded for nearly an hour.

Some one at the South Braintree depot reported seeing Miss Whitney take the nine o'clock train for Boston. It is said that she received a special delivery letter yesterday.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Enjoyable Banquet of Social and Benevolent Society.

The annual meeting and banquet of the Social and Benevolent society was held at the Baptist church, Wollaston, Thursday evening.

At 7.30, Frost and Westover caterers, served a delightful supper to one hundred and seven people, and the dusky waters took good care that all were quickly and bountifully served.

The vestry was tastefully decorated with festoons and banks of gorgeous autumn foliage. On the tables appeared large pumpkins filled with fruits which in addition to the bright leaves made a brilliant setting.

The hand painted maple leaf program read as follows: Master of ceremonies, Mr. James L. Rand. Guests, Rev. Avery A. Shaw of Brookline, Prof. J. H. Marceau and Miss Florence Olney.

The Wollaston Orchestra discoursed excellent music and after the business meeting there were: Solos by Prof. J. H. Marceau; and an address by Rev. Avery A. Shaw.

The annual reports showed an efficient corps of united workers and splendid work accomplished. Officers for the ensuing year are.

President, Mrs. J. Arthur Jewell.
Vice President, Mrs. Frank Corey.
Secretary, Mrs. Oscar Blaisdell.
Treasurer, Miss Isabelle Albee.

Wooden Wedding.

Tuesday evening the Baker residence at Braintree was ablaze with light, the occasion being the celebration of the fifth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Burton L. Baker.

The interior of the house was beautifully decorated for the occasion with autumn foliage and the exterior with Japanese lanterns. Miss Grace Collins assisted by Master Lovell Edson welcomed the guests on their arrival and Misses Bessie Miller and Olive Crocker ushered them to remove their wraps. Messrs. Leon Collins, Fred Tarbox and Edward Lawson ushered them to the wedding party. Mr. and Mrs. Baker were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Baker, parents of the groom, and Mrs. C. E. Darrow, mother of the bride.

Misses Edith Crocker and Irene Baker presided in the dining room where punch and fancy crackers were served. Miss Ethel Baker had charge of the register, where all the guests left their autograph. Mrs. L. B. Collins was matron of the occasion.

During the evening, Baldwin's orchestra, consisting of Messrs. William Baldwin, violinist; Frank B. Joy, cornetist, and C. E. Holmes, harpist, rendered delightful selections.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker were the recipients of many beautiful tokens of remembrance.

King's Daughters' Service.

A very interesting service has been arranged for the annual public meeting of the Unity Circle of King's Daughters at Bethany church Sunday evening. Miss Alice S. Browne of Boston will speak, taking for her theme, "Why it is worth while." The Ladies Harmony Quartette will render the following selections:

"O Lord be Merciful," Browne
"Father take my hand," Scott
"Their sun shall no more go down," Tuckerman

The public is invited.

Social Realm.

Mrs. Olney and Miss Butler yesterday visited their old home, known for many years as the Peter Butler house, but more recently called the Dorothy Q. house, which is being restored and put in order by the Colonial Dames for a historical museum. During their residence here the Butlers were a prominent factor in our midst. They worked particularly for their church, the younger members doing a great deal for the music at Christ church, and when Mr. Sigourney Butler died a few years ago many will recall that at the memorial service by Rev. Mr. Breed he said his sermon was based not upon personal recollections but upon the tender and loving memory he left in his church. Mr. Peter Butler was a member of the board of trustees of the National Sailors' home, and on his death was succeeded by his son, who served until his death. Mrs. Butler died a few years after the family left Quincy. It is expected Mrs. Olney and Miss Butler will furnish a memorial room in their old home.

A social dance was held in the hall over the Quincy Point Young Men's club last evening. The affair was in charge of Mrs. A. C. Selleck and Mrs. Eugene Page. A large number of young people were present and the evening was most enjoyably passed.

Waters—Foster.

The residence of Mr. Joseph M. Foster at Braintree was the scene of a pretty home wedding last Monday evening when his eldest daughter, Charlotte Maud, was united in marriage to James W. Waters, oldest son of Capt. and Mrs. James Waters.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern, pastor of the South Congregational church, in the presence of immediate relatives. The wedding march from "Lohengrin" was played by Miss Fannie R. Foster, youngest sister of the bride.

The bride, who was gowned in white chiffon over white silk and carried a shower bouquet of brides roses, was attended by her sisters, Alice L. and Carolyn A. Foster, who were attired in green mousseline de soie, having bouquets of white pinks, thus carrying out the effect of the decorations which were green and white.

After the ceremony the happy couple received their friends under a beautiful arch banked on either side by potted plants and autumn leaves.

There were friends from Braintree, Belmont, Brockton, West Brookfield, Holbrook, Ware and Somerville who came to extend their congratulations to the bride and groom.

Later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. James W. Waters left on a short wedding tour through New Hampshire and will be at home to their friends at 102 North Franklin street, Holbrook, after October 15.

The Royal Month and the Royal Disease.

Sudden changes of weather are especially trying, and probably to none more so than to the scrofulous and consumptive. The progress of scrofula during normal October is commonly great. We never think of scrofula—its bunches, cutaneous eruptions, and wasting of the bodily substance—without thinking of the great good many sufferers from it have derived from Hood's Saparilla, whose radical and permanent cures of this one disease are enough to make it the most famous medicine in the world. There is probably not a city or town where Hood's Sarsaparilla has not proved its merit in more homes than than one, in arresting and completely eradicating scrofula, which is almost as serious and as much to be feared as its near relative,—consumption.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms.

And there the two sat, keeping up that gentle drone of industry which I have come to think of as a note of womanhood, like the hum of a bee or the purr of a cat or the call of a bird. They sat erect, the delicate napes of their necks showing above their muslin kerchiefs under their high twists of hair, for even Mary had her golden curls caught up that morning on account of the flax lint, and from their fair, attentive faces nobody would have gathered what stress of mind both were in. Of a surety there must be a quieting and calming power in some of the feminine industries which be a boon to the soul.

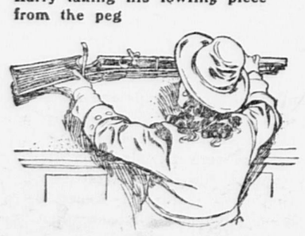

But as I passed through the hall up looked Mary, and her beautiful face flashed out of peace into a sunlight of love and enthusiasm.

"Oh," she cried out, "oh, was there ever any one like my sweetheart Catherine? To think what she hath done for me—to think, to think! And she, dear heart, loving the king! But better she loves her little sister and will stand by her in her disloyalty for the love of her. Was there ever any one like her, Master Wingfield?"

I know not what I said. Truly not much, for the mockery of it all was past my power of dealing with and keeping my respect of self.

I got my fowling piece from the peg on the wall and was forth and ranging the wooded shores, with my eyes intent on the whirring flight of the birds and my mind on that problem of the times which always hath and doth and always will encounter a man who lives with any understanding of what is about him, but not always as sorely as in my case, who faced, as it were, an army of difficulties, bound hand and foot. But after awhile the sport, in which I was fairly skilled, and that sense of power which cometh to one from the proving of his superiority over the life and death of some weaker creation, and the salt air in my nostrils, gave me, as it were, a glimpse of a farther horizon than the present one of Virginia in 1682 and mine own little place in it. Then verily I could seem to see and scent like some keen hound a smoothness which should later come from the tangled web of circumstances and a greatness which should encompass mine own smallness of perplexity.

When I was wending my way back to Drake Hill, with my gun over shoulder and some fine birds in hand, I met Sir Humphrey Hyde.

We were near Laurel Creek, and the great house stood still and white in the sunlight, and there was no life around it except for the distant crawl of toil over the green of the broad tobacco fields and the great hum of the bees in the flowering honey locusts. Sir Humphrey was coming from the direction of the house, riding slowly, stooping in the saddle as if with thought, and I guessed that he had been to see to the safety of contraband goods. When he saw me he halted and shouted in his hearty, boyish way, "Halloo, halloo, Harry, and what luck?" as if all there was of moment in the whole world, and Virginia in particular, was the shooting of birds on a May morning. "Harry, Harry," he said in a whisper, though there was no life nearer than the bees and they no bearers of secrets, except those of the flowers, "I pray thee, come back to the hall with me and let us consult together."

I followed him back to the house, and he sprang from his saddle, had a shutter unhasped in a twinkling, knowing evidently the secret of it, and we were inside, standing among the litter of casks and cases in the great silent desertion of the hall of Laurel Creek. Then he grasped me hard by both hands and cried out: "Harry, Harry Wingfield, come to thee I must, for, convict though thou be, thou art a man with a head packed with wit, and Ralph Drake is half the time in his cups, and Parson Downs riding his own will at such a hard gallop that 'twill surprise me not if he leave his head behind, and as for Dick and Nick Barry and Captain Dickson and—and Major Robert Beverly and all the others, what is it to them about this one matter which is more to me than the whole broth?"

"You mean?" I said and pointed to the litter on the hall floor.

"Yes," and then, with a great show of passion, "My God, Harry Wingfield, why—why did we gentlemen and cavaliers of Virginia allow a woman to be mixed in this matter? If—if these goods be traced to her"—

"And, faith, and I see no reason why they should not be, with a whole colony in the secret of it," I said coldly.

"Nay, none but me and Nick and Dick Barry, and the parson since yesterday, and Major Beverly and Captain Noel Jaynes and you and the captain and sailors on the Golden Horn, who value their own necks. As God is my witness, none beside, Harry."

I could scarcely help laughing at the length of the list and the innocence of the lad. "Her sister Catherine, Sir Humphrey," said I.

"Hath she told her, Harry?"

"And the captain of the Earl of Fairfax."

"The governor's ship? Well, then, let us go through Jamestown proclaiming it with a horn," he gasped out, and made more of the two last than his own long list.

"Nay, the two last are as safe as we," said I. "Mistress Catherine holds her sister dearer than herself, and as for the captain of the governor's ship, lock a man's tongue with the key of his own interest if you wish it not to wag. But these goods must be moved from here."

"That is what I well know, Harry," he said eagerly. "All night did I toss and study the matter. But where?"

Not in any place on Madam Cavendish's plantation," I said, and did not say, as I might have, for 'twas the truth, that I had also tossed and studied, but as yet to no result.

"No, nor on mine, though I swear to thee, were I the only one to consider, I would have them there in a twinkling, but I cannot put my mother and sister in jeopardy even for"—

"Barry Upper Branch?"

"Nick and Dick swear they will not run the risk; that they have but too lately escaped with their lives and are too close watched, and as for the parson, 'tis out of the question, and Ralph Drake hath no hiding place, and as for the others, they one and all refuse and say this is the safest place in the colony, it being a household of women, and Madam Cavendish well known for her loyalty."

He looked at me and I at him, and again the old consideration, as I saw his handsome, gallant young face, that perchance Mary Cavendish might love him and do worse than to wed him, came over me.

"I will find a place for the goods," said I.

"You, Harry?"

"Yes, I," I said.

"But where, Harry?"

"Wait till the need for them come, lad." Then I added, for often in my perplexity the wish that the whole lot were at the bottom of the river had seized me, "There is need of them, I suppose?"

But Sir Humphrey said yes, with a great emphasis to that.

"There is sure to be fighting," he said, "and never were powder and shot so scarce. 'Tis well the Indians are quiet. This poor colony of Virginia hath not enough powder to guard her borders nor, were it not for her rich soil, enough of food to feed her children since the navigation act. Oh, Harry, if but Nathaniel Bacon had lived!"

"Amen," I said, and felt as I said it that if indeed that hero were alive this plot for the destroying of the young tobacco plants might be the earthquake which threw off a new empire, but as it were, remembering the men concerned, who had none of the stuff of Bacon in them, I wondered if it would prove aught more than a wedge in the scheme of liberty.

"There are those who would be ready to say that we gentlemen of Virginia, like Bacon, are all ready to shelter ourselves behind women's aprons," said Sir Humphrey Hyde, with a shamed glance at the goods, referring to that stationing of the ladies of the Berkeley faction, all arrayed in white aprons, on the earthworks before the advance of the sons and husbands and brothers in the Bacon uprising.

"And if you hear any man say that, shoot him dead, Sir Humphrey Hyde," I said, for, through liking not that story about Bacon, I was fiercer in defense of it.

"Faith, and I will, Harry," cried Sir Humphrey, "and Bacon was a greater man than the king if I were to swing for it; but, Harry, you cannot by yourself move these. What will you do?"

But I begged him to say no more and started toward the window, the door being fast locked as Mistress Mary had left it, when suddenly the boy stopped me and caught me by the hand, and begged me to tell him if I thought there might be any hope for him with Mary Cavendish, being moved to do so by her sending him away so peremptorily the night before, which had put him in sore doubt. "Tell me, Harry," he pleaded, and the great lad seemed like a child, with his honest outlook of blue eyes, "tell me what you think, I pray thee, Harry; look at me, and tell me, if you were a maid, what would you think of me?"

Loving Mary Cavendish as I did, and striving to look at him with her eyes, a sort of tenderness crept into my heart for this simple lover, who was as brave as he was simple, and I clapped a hand on his fair curls, for though he was so tall I was taller, and laughed and said, "If I were a maid, though 'tis a fancy to rack the brain, but, if I were a maid, I would love thee well, lad."

"My mother thinketh none like me, and so tells me every day, and says that I am like my father, who was the handsomest man in England, but then mothers be all so, and I know not how much of it to trust, and my sister Cicely loves Mary so well herself that she is jealous, and often tells me"— then the lad stopped and stared at me, and I at him, perplexed, not dreaming what was in his mind.

"Tells you what, Sir Humphrey?" said I.

"That, that—oh, confound it, Harry, there is no harm in saying it, for you as well as I know the folly of it and that 'tis but the jealous fancy of a girl. Faith, but I think my sister Cicely is as much in love with Mary Cavendish as I. 'Tis but—my sister Cicely, when she will tease me, tells me 'tis not I but you that Mary Cavendish hath set her heart upon, Harry."

I felt myself growing pale at that, and I could not speak because of a curious stiffness of my lips, and I heard my heart beat like a clock in the deserted house. Sir Humphrey was looking at me with an anxiety which was sharpening into suspicion. "Harry," he said, "you do not think"—

"'Tis sheer folly, lad," I burst out then, "and let us have no more of it. 'Tis but the idle prating of a lovesick girl, who should have a lover, ere she try to steal a nest in the heart of one of her own sex. 'Tis folly, Sir Humphrey Hyde."

"So said I to Cicely," Sir Humphrey cried eagerly, too interested in his own cause to heed my slighting words for his sister. "'Tis the rankest folly, I told her. Here is Harry Wingfield, old enough to be Mary's father, and beside—beside— Oh, confound it, Harry," the generous lad burst out, "I would not like you for a rival, for you are a good half foot taller than I, and you have that about you which would make a woman run to you and think herself safe were all the Indians in Virginia up, and you are a dark man—I have heard say they like that—but, but— Oh, I say, Harry, 'tis a shame that you are here as you are, and not as a gentleman and a cavalier with the rest of us, for all the evidence to the contrary and all the government to the contrary, 'tis, 'tis the way you should be, and not a word of that charge do I believe. May the fiends take me if I do, Harry!"

So saying, the lad looked at me, and verily the tears were in his blue eyes, and out he thrust his honest hand for me to grasp, which I did with more of comfort than I had had for many a day, though it was the hand of a rival, and the next minute forth he burst again: "Say, Harry, if it be true that thou art out of the running, and I believe it must be so, for how could—say, Harry, think you there is any chance for me?"

"I know of no reason why there should not be, Sir Humphrey," I said.

"Only, only—that she is what she is, and I but myself. Oh, Harry, was there ever one like that girl? All the spirit of daring of a man she has, and yet is she full of all the sweet ways of a maid. Faith, she would draw sword one minute and tie a ribbon the next. She would have followed Bacon to the death and sat up all night to broider herself a kerchief. Comrade and sweetheart both she is, and was there ever one like her for beauty? Harry, Harry, saw you ever such a beauty as Mary Cavendish?"

"No, and never will," cried I, so fervently and so echoing to the full his youthful enthusiasm that again that keen look flashed into his eyes. "Harry," he stammered out, "you do not—say, for God's sake, Harry, you are a man if you are a—a—and every day have you seen that angel, and—and—Harry, may the devil take me if I would go against thee if she—you know I would not, Harry, for I remember well how you taught me to shoot, and—and—I love thee, Harry, not in such fool fashion as my sister loveth Mary, but I love thee, and never would I cross thee."

"Sir Humphrey," said I, "it is not what you would, nor what I would, nor what any other man would, but what be best for Mary Cavendish, and her true happiness of life, that is to consider, whether you love her, or I love her, or any other man love her."

"Faith, and a score do," he said gloomily. "There be my Lord Estes and her cousin Ralph, and I know not how many more. Faith, I would not have her less fair, but sometimes I would that a few were color blind. But 'tis different when it comes to thee, Harry. If she"—

"Sir Humphrey," said I, "were Mary Cavendish thy sister and I myself, and loving her and she me, and you having that affection which you say you have for me, would you yet give her to me in marriage and think it for her good?"

Then the poor lad colored and stammered, and could not look me in the face, but it was enough. "Let there be no more talk betwixt you and me as to that matter, Sir Humphrey," I said. "There is never now nor at any other time any question of marriage betwixt Mistress Mary Cavendish and her convict tutor, and if he perchance had been not color blind and had learned to appraise her at her rare worth, the more had he been set against such. And all that he can do for thee, lad, he will do."

Sir Humphrey was easily pacified, having been accustomed from his babyhood to masterly soothing of his mother into her own ways of thought. Again, in spite of his great stature, he looked up at me like a very child. "Harry," he whispered, "heard you her ever say anything pleasant concerning me?"

"Many a time," I answered quite seriously, though I was inwardly laughing and could not for the life of me remember any special favor which she had paid him in her speech. But I have ever held that a bold lover hath the best chance, and, knowing that boldness depends upon assurance of favor, I set about giving it to Sir Humphrey, even at some small expense of truth.

"When, when, Harry?"

"Oh, many a time, Sir Humphrey."

"But what? I pray thee, tell me what she said, Harry."

"I have not charged my mind, lad."

"But think of something. I pray thee, think of something, Harry." He looked at me with such exceeding wistfulness that I was forced to cudgel my brains for something which, having a slight savor of truth, might be seasoned to pungency at fancy. "Often have I heard her say that she liked a fair man," I replied, and indeed I had, and believed her to have said it because I was dark and seemingly inattentive to some new grace of hers as to the tying of her hair or fastening of her kerchief.

"Did she indeed say that, Harry, and do you think she had me in mind?" cried Sir Humphrey.

"Are you not a fair man?"

"Yes, yes, I am a fair man, am I not, Harry? What else? Sure you have heard her say more than that."

"I have heard her say she liked a hearty laugh and one who counted not costs when his mind were set on aught, but rode straight for it though all the bars were up."

"That sure is I, Harry, unless my mother stand in the way. A man cannot bring his mother's head low, Harry, but sure if she forbid nor know not, as in this case of this tobacco plot, I stop for naught. Sure she meant me then, Harry."

"And I have heard her say that she liked a young man, a man no older than she."

"Sure, sure she meant me by that, Harry, for I am the youngest of them

Sir Humphrey blushing like a girl

all—not yet twenty. Oh, dear Harry, she had me in mind by that. Do you not think so?"

"I know of no one else whom she could have had in mind," I answered.

The lad was blushing with delight and confusion like a girl. He cast down his eyes before me; he stammered when he spoke. "Harry, if she but love me, I swear I could do as brave deeds as Bacon," he said. "I would die would she but carry about a lock of my hair on her bosom as she does his. I would, Harry. And you think I have some chance?"

My heart smote me lest I had misled him, for I knew with no certainty the maid's mind. "As much chance as any, and more than many, lad," I said, "and I will do what I can for thee."

"But at all odds," said he, "whether it be me or you or any other man, see to it that these goods be moved and she not be drawn into this which is hatching, for it may be as big a blaze as Bacon started before we be done with it. But shall I not help thee, Harry, and when will you move them and where?"

"I want no help, lad," I said, and was indeed firmly set in my mind that he should know nothing about the disposal of the goods lest Mistress Mary come to grief through her love for him, and reasoning that ignorance was his best safeguard and hers.

We went forth from Laurel Creek, I having promised that I would do all that I could to further his suit with Mary Cavendish, and when we reached the bend of the road, he having walked beside me, hitherto leading his horse, he was in his saddle and away, having first acquainted me anxiously with the fact that he was to wear that night to the governor's ball a suit of blue velvet with silver buttons and asking me if I considered that it would become him in Mistress Mary's eyes.

TWO VALUES OF NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

What It Costs

AND

What It Pays

Are two values of newspaper advertising that the merchant has to consider. But the most important thing is WHAT IT PAYS. The merchant can get space in papers of small circulation and little influence for a little less money than the same size space would cost in

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Does it pay to throw away the certainty of the profitable returns which are sure to PATRIOT advertisers, because it costs less to advertise in a cheaper paper?

IS FRANCE DECADENT?

Impressions of Celebrated Men on the Question.

HOPEFUL SIGNS TO THE CONTRARY

Zangwill Regards France as Too Great to Be Despaired of and Too Necessary For Civilization — No Country So Full of Intellectual Youth and Hope, Says Edmund Gosse.

Theodore Stanton sends the Open Court a number of letters on "The Decadence of France" written by celebrities. We give several letters:

Colonel Sir Howard Vincent, M. P.:

"To this question there is only one response: 'No; a thousand times no!' I find myself in the happy condition to make this statement. I have just completed a journey through France. Everywhere is order, everywhere prosperity, everywhere a quiet and happy people, well fed, well nurtured, gay, content, hospitable, generous. The poor are not to be seen. Luxury is extensive. Such are the impressions received by my colleagues and myself, and this is the reason why I answer, 'No, no, no.'"

Edmund Gosse, librarian of the house of lords:

"My reply is peremptorily, categorically, no.

"What is 'decadence?' Is it not a phrase by which the timid often attempt to mask their fear of what is new, active and rebellious?

"The only decadent nations are those which do not dare to change, which live on in a constant terror of encouraging audacity of thought or perversity of conduct. The living nations are forever making new experiments at which conventional people shudder and scream.

"We may scour the horizon of the world at this hour and see no nation which seems so little to deserve the rebuke of 'decay' as the French. To my apprehension no country at the present hour is so full of intellectual youth and hope, offers to the observer so great a variety of points of vitality or draws the attention of the thoughtful to it with so vivacious a sympathy as France.

"If by 'decadence' you mean evolution, the painful metamorphosis of life—yes! If by 'decadence' you mean dullness, apathy, a sinking of the moral and mental temperature, a thousand times—no!"

Lucas Malet:

"The question which you propose, I, as a lover of France, venture to answer with an emphatic negative. France is not in a state of decadence, but she is, in my humble opinion, in a state of convalescence—and the symptoms of the latter condition may easily, by superficial observers, be mistaken for those of the former. From the middle of the eighteenth century she has passed through a series of convulsions, both moral and material, of experiments, of splendors and disasters, culminating in the cruel tragedy of 1870-71, which must always remain to the student one of the amazing chapters of human history. That she should have retained her solidarity, her genius and revived as a nation, shows a vitality so enormous, and an intelligence so adaptable and fertile that it is impossible to entertain misgivings as to her future. But the effects of her past sufferings are still upon her in a certain nervousness and sensitiveness, which result in episodes painful to her admirers. She is taken with unreasoning fears, and these lead to violence both of feeling and of action which strikes the observer as unworthy and exaggerated. Two very dissimilar episodes, having their rise in these nervous terrors, appear especially unfortunate—I refer to the 'Affaire Dreyfus' and the expulsion of the religious orders. In the first case there was a fear of abstract justice, in the second a fear of religious liberty. As a Catholic and a Liberal alike, it is inconceivable to me that the highest interests of any nation can ever be served by the repudiation of such fundamental principles of social existence and of progress. Such repudiation, like all other recourse to artificial and arbitrary remedies, suggests a lack of faith in herself, and in her splendid destiny, which might be alarming, did one not remember that she still bears the scars of the tremendous adventures of the later years of the eighteenth and nearly the whole of the nineteenth century. Her convalescence must of necessity be long, but there are surely already signs that her restoration to health will be complete and lasting. There are perhaps nations in Europe whom we 'could do without,' but France very certainly is not among these! Indeed, it is not too much to say that never have the influence and traditions of the Latin races been of more vital importance to the evolution of a true and noble civilization than at the present moment."

Gilbert Murray, formerly professor of Greek at Glasgow university:

"I hesitate to pronounce any opinion upon a subject so vast and so intricate, but there are two remarks that I venture to make.

"First.—If France is decaying, then the whole European civilization as at present understood is decaying. The same bad symptoms which appear in France appear also in England, Germany, Italy, and, from what one hears, in the nations of Europe. Nor can I see that the United States are much better.

"Second.—France throughout her history has generally taken all her diseases severely and recovered from them vigorously. The present bad symptoms may be more severe in France than elsewhere, the recognition of them is certainly more outspoken, and the effort toward regeneration more resolute and far reaching."

Israel Zangwill:

"A country may be in decadence materially or spiritually. Materially, I cannot believe that a fertile land with such hard working and intelligent population as France, and the most capable women in the world, can be on the down grade. For foreigners, however, the greatness of France has always lain in the spiritual realm. She has fed the world with ideas and ideals. It has been a bitter blow to the hopes of the human race that precisely the country of 'liberty, equality and fraternity' should have produced a Dreyfus case. Here in Avignon, when I read on the walls 'Death to the Jews,' it is not only as a Jew that I feel that France has plunged back into the dark ages. I was in America when the Dreyfus trial was taking place at Rennes—if Frenchmen could only understand the horror that shook all America at the verdict they would be able to gauge how much they have lost in the opinion of mankind—they who, however distanced in material progress, might still aspire to the spiritual hegemony of the peoples. The license of the French stage and of French literature is another argument for decadence. None but a French playwright would be permitted to place on the stage the caricature of a living personage, though Dr. Nordau may console himself by the remembrance that Aristophanes lampooned Socrates. Moreover, the exploitation of the sex theme is pushed in France to the limits of silliness. Will Frenchmen never get tired of reading the same joke and seeing the same pictures? There is a total absence of perspective and a total lack of humor in their feverish interest in this subject. One would say a nation of schoolboys gloating over their first discovery of sex. The serious study of life by a Flaubert or a Zola is quite another affair.

"Still France is too great to be despaired of and too necessary for civilization, and if she produced a Dreyfus case, she produced also a Dreyfusard party and men like Colonel Piccard, able to sacrifice all for honor. It is such elements that will ever preserve France from decadence."

DAVIS' ROBUST APPETITE.

What the Democratic Candidate Is Said to Have Eaten For Breakfast.

At the Riggs House in Washington the other day, where a group of Democratic and Republican representatives were exchanging political opinions flavored with an occasional "good story" some reference was made to the advanced age of "Cousin Henry" Gassaway Davis and his remarkable self control in his everyday life, says the New York Telegram. The regular habits of the Democratic nominee for the vice presidency were reviewed, and his sunny nature and well conserved constitution were attributed in a large degree to an almost perfect digestion.

One of the members of the party who recently returned from New York playfully remarked that if "Cousin Henry" is at all anxious about the outcome of the coming campaign it has not affected his unusually robust appetite. To sustain this assertion the speaker related an incident in a hotel where "Cousin Henry" was a patron a few days ago.

It was about 8 o'clock when Mr. Davis and his friend entered the dining room and proceeded to order their breakfast. "Cousin Henry" started off with two halves of a good sized melon. Next he disposed of two helpings of oatmeal, followed by an order of bluefish. In the meantime his friend had been mincing with half of a small melon. With a smile of supreme satisfaction upon his face Mr. Davis leaned back in his chair after pushing aside the fish plate and said to the waiter:

"Now you may bring on the breakfast."

His breakfast consisted of a small beefsteak, fried eggs, with bacon, domestic fried potatoes, rolls and two cups of coffee, topped off with a heaping plate of griddle cakes.

RIFLE SHOOTING FEAT.

Indiana Farmer Made 2,024 Hits, Missing None.

Charles L. Baker, a young farmer living near Richmond, Ind., has become wonderfully expert with a rifle, says a special dispatch from Indianapolis. In a recent contest at targets he made the unequalled record of 2,024 shots without a miss. Charles H. Clawson, Richard Estelle and three other Richmond men who witnessed the exhibition jointly made affidavit to the conditions of the tests and the results.

Baker used a rifle of 22 caliber and the cartridges were charged with smokeless powder. The targets were disks of wood three and one-quarter inches in diameter and three-quarters of an inch in thickness. Standing twenty-five feet from the point at which the disks were thrown into the air Baker punctured 2,000. There were no more wooden disks, and green walnuts gathered near the range were substituted. He missed only after twenty-four walnuts had been hit.

Sabbatarianism In Madrid.

In the past Sunday has been pretty much like any other day in Madrid. Now a royal decree has been published changing the old order of things, says the Westminster Gazette. Every factory and workshop must close all day, and ordinary shops will not be allowed to remain open after 11 o'clock in the forenoon, while the national bullfight is to be permitted only on very special occasions. Thousands of protests have been forwarded to the government, which, however, is deaf to all remonstrances. The experiment will be an interesting one to watch.

After Seven Years

By Belle Maniates

Copyright, 1904, by Belle Maniates

In the palm room of the Waldorf at a table partially obscured by a pot of palms sat John Browning. He was a man well past his first youth, of form erect and face bronzed by the sun that burned upon tropical battlefields. From his rather remote corner he scanned with interest every one who entered.

"After seven years," he thought, "I shouldn't expect to meet any acquaintances, but—ah, what luck!"

A party of four were seating themselves at a table near—a man and woman of middle age, a beautiful young woman with eyes that matched the violets she carried and a lemon faced youth, receding of chin and swinish of eye.

Browning was about to start forward when a voice at the nearest table spoke in subdued, but carrying tones:

"Lyle Vaughn's fiance! The engagement is conceded, though not announced."

John Browning resumed his seat.

"It would have been far better," he thought, "if I had not called a halt on her affection for the trapper. Anything but this specimen! He is a link below the missing one!"

One of the voices at the next table again had a hearing:

"I admit he is not a howling success as to looks, but he has millions and antecedents."

John Browning scowled and continued his cogitations.

"Seven years since Lyle had her first little ripple of romance which I ended. I'll again be a disturber of dreams—or nightmares. I have a spur to her memory in my pocket now. Odd it should have reached me today."

He drew from his pocket a newspaper clipping which he gave to a waiter with instructions as to delivery.

The violet eyed woman looked up in amazement at the waiter and then her gaze again fell on the paper. It was a four line local giving the number of licenses issued to date to deer hunters in northern Michigan.

When she had read it she looked around. Then she rose, and he hurried to her with outstretched hand.

"Lyle! Little Lyle Vaughn!" he said in a soft, caressing voice that his command would have failed to recognize.

"John Browning! Now do I believe in the resurrection!"

Her father and mother claimed his attention, and after his presentation to Herbert Stuyvesant he seated himself beside Lyle.

The waiter again approached and handed Stuyvesant a telegram.

"My mother has another of her attacks," explained Stuyvesant to Mrs. Vaughn, and, with a lingering glance at Lyle's impassive features, he took a reluctant departure.

Mrs. Vaughn at once gave Browning an elaborate and profuse description of Stuyvesant's fortune and prospects.

"The lady doth protest too much," thought John Browning, noting with amusement and satisfaction the infinite boredom in Lyle's face, an expression dimly reflected in her father's quiet, even features.

"You must go home with us, John," insisted Mr. Vaughn as they were leaving. "I don't care how late it is. I want to hear about those seven years and the wars."

"So do I," chimed in Lyle.

When they reached the house Mrs. Vaughn pleaded a headache. The others sat by the open fire in the library. Soon the soft, blue veil of good cigars invoked a wondrous tale of adventure from John Browning. Back in the shadows Lyle listened and followed over battlefields and African farms.

"I feel like Desdemona tonight," laughed Lyle, following him into the hall. "You've been very good to papa tonight, but I want a visit with you. Come down tomorrow morning at 11. Mamma will be shopping then."

"And Mr. Herbert Stuyvesant won't be here?" he asked.

"No. Why should he?"

She was a little discomfited by his steady gaze.

"I overheard some people in the palm room say he was your fiance."

"He isn't," she denied; "not—yet! I believe he'd like to be, and mamma lies awake nights fearing he won't be. Papa is trying to be reconciled."

"And you?"

"And I was fast falling in papa's state—until—tonight when"—

"When"—

"I read that clipping."

She was not looking at him as she spoke and so did not see the dark flush that came to his bronzed face.

"Tomorrow at 11," he said tersely.

"Who sent you the clipping?"

"Plympton. He still hunts in Michigan every November."

"How it carried me back!" she sighed. "Those lovely days in the open!"

It was very late when John Browning reached his hotel, but he did not go to bed until he had lighted a cigar and lived over again the deer hunting season of seven years ago which a party of eastern people, including Vaughn, Lyle and himself, had spent in northern Michigan.

Those were halcyon days when he and Lyle had tramped over fields lightly brushed with snow, through thickets and in the brown forest in pursuit of deer. At night they would return tired, happy and hungry to the big cabin, ready to start out again in the morning. Lyle had ever been a gay little comrade with him, but up there in the great northland of ice and snow he began to hope that he might not be too old, after all, to ask her to be still more than her "father's friend."

At the end of two weeks, however, he acknowledged to himself his mistake. The party had secured a new guide, a handsome young Canadian Frenchman with soft voice and lustrous eyes. He knew every inch of ground and every trick of deer hunting.

Lyle, romantic, willful and head strong, took snapshots of him in every conceivable pose. She demanded his services on all occasions and chatted with him in French, a language not understood by John Browning who was deeply concerned at the young girl's fancy.

He reasoned with her father one night that the weather was getting altogether too severe for Lyle up there and it would be prudent for her to return with the Crosbys the next day. Vaughn acquiesced. He usually did acquiesce in any suggestion from Browning.

When her father announced to Lyle the next morning that she was to go home that day, to Browning's surprise, she did not raise any objections. He thought, though, that she seemed very serious when he bade her adieu.

The life and light went out of the party for him after her departure, and he was glad when the season ended. En route for lower Michigan, he received a dispatch calling him farther west on business, which detained him until April. He arrived in New York to learn that Lyle was in college. In the latter part of the month war with Spain was declared, and as an officer in the national guard he was mustered into the United States service and went to Cuba. Peace declared, he again returned to New York. This time Lyle and her parents were abroad. He followed, just missing them at every place in their erratic tour.

Then had come the war in Africa, and the "siren song of the bullet" lured him to the cause of the Boers. Now he was again in New York and was to see in the morning his little friend of the long ago who had grown into a charming woman.

She teased him when he came into the library the next morning: "Still jealous of Plympton, John? You were such a stupid! Those cabin partitions were regular sounding boards. I heard your counsel to papa about my return. Of course the 'severe weather' was not the reason you ordered 'removal from station.' You really thought I was in love with that handsome half breed!"

"And weren't you?"

"John!"

"But you talked of him, to him and with him incessantly. You must have had 127 photographs of him."

"That was partly because it plagued you."

"Partly! What was the other reason?"

"Maybe I'll tell you some time."

"When?"

"After another lapse of seven years."

"Still," he persisted, "you looked sad when you left for home."

"That was for the same reason."

"As what?"

"As the one I am to give you seven years hence."

"I am not going to wait seven years to tell you what I have known since you were a little schoolgirl, and you, with your powers of divining, Lyle, you surely must know that too!"

"No," she half whispered, "I don't know."

"You don't know, Lyle, that I have always loved you! I should never have had the hope and courage to tell you," he said presently, "if I had not seen you with the inane Herbert last night."

She laughed a soft, happy little laugh.

"I believe I won't wait seven years to tell you."

"No; tell me now."

"I have loved you ever since you gave me my first doll."

Where They Missed It.

It was their first baby.

The mother was in a perfect rapture.

It was an ugly baby, but she did not know it.

Happy young mother!

All of them are like her.

But the father had dark misgivings.

His salary was only $12.50 a week, and babies are expensive luxuries.

Her father was rich, but he had frowned upon their union and had heterodox and heretical notions as to supporting a son-in-law besides.

Cruel old man!

One day when the baby was about a month old the father came home from his office in the city and found his wife radiant.

She was not happy when the baby was out of her sight.

"What is it, Jennie?" asked her husband, for he was yet uncertain as to the blessings conferred by the baby.

He was also sleepy.

"Oh, Charlie," she chirruped, "I heard from papa today!"

Charlie looked gloomier than ever.

"Don't say anything, dear," she pleaded, for she knew her husband's opinion of her father. "He has heard of our baby, and, though he has not yet determined to forgive us, he has sent us a check for $250 for dear baby's sake."

At first the young husband's face lit up with pleasure, then it shadowed again.

"Are you glad, Charlie?" she asked, with a quivering lip.

Then he smiled joyfully.

"Yes, darling," he whispered, "but what a pity it wasn't twins!"—Illustrated Bits.

It Sometimes Is.

"How's the earth divided?" asked a pompous examiner who had already worn out the patience of the class.

"By earthquakes," replied one boy. After which the examiner found that he had had enough of that class.

Quail and Partridges.

All Massachusetts sportsmen are earnestly requested to join in an effort to save the small remnant of quail and partridges which survived the extreme cold and deep snows of last winter. Strenuous efforts were made last spring by the State Association, its members, and by other organizations affiliated with it, to restock the covers—some 200 dozen quail (all that could be obtained) having been distributed throughout the state. But this number was wholly inadequate to supply the demand. At least 1000 dozen could have been liberated to advantage had it been possible to procure them.

They ask all, therefore, to do everything in their power to save the birds this fall, so that our covers may not be entirely depleted at the end of the present shooting season. Let us spare the birds this year and work unitedly in an effort to restock the woods and fields with game birds, remembering that the saving of a few this fall means as many broods next year.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

TREMONT THEATRE.

No event in recent years has excited more interest among the music-lovers of New England than the forthcoming performances of "Parsifal" in English, which Henry W. Savage's company will give at the Tremont theatre in Boston, the weeks of October 17th and 24th. Any one who would have said a few years ago that Americans would soon be able to hear the last and greatest of Wagner's music-dramas, performed in English, which is the only artistic form possible, would have been adjudged insane. Yet Mr. Savage's enterprise and persistence has made a reality of what has been the dream of nearly all operatic managers since "Parsifal" had its first performance in Bayreuth, in July, 1882. The task of preparation has been an enormous one. It is almost a year since Mr. Savage began the work, and rehearsals have been going on constantly since last July. Mr. Savage has organized a company composed of specially selected singers from America and Europe which will be fully adequate to the exacting task of interpreting this great work. His scenery and costumes have been made from Bayreuth models. His orchestra is the result of scouring the country for good instrumentalists. Owing to the fact that "Parsifal" is to be given absolutely without cuts, hours have been set for the beginning and ending of the acts which will be rigidly adhered to. The matinee performances will begin at 11 o'clock precisely. The first act will end at 12.45 when there will be an intermission of an hour and a quarter for luncheon. The second act beginning at 2 o'clock will end at 3, and the third act beginning at 3.15 will end at 4.15. The scale of prices will be such as to put "Parsifal" within the reach of all classes. The entire lower floor will be $3.00; the entire first balcony $2.00; and the entire second balcony $1.00. The sale of seats will begin at the Tremont theatre box-office on Tuesday morning, October 11th.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

Annie Irish, the well known actress, will be the featured attraction at Keith's the week of Oct. 10 appearing in a little sketch called 'An Actress' Christmas.". The novelty songsheet with Martha Pulley as soloist, will be retained another six days, with a complete change of ballads and the introduction of some new specialties. It is the best novelty that has ever been offered at Keith's for some time. Among the other entertainers scheduled to appear are Edgar Horten, the artistic actor, who played the chappie parts in the "Prince of Pilsen," and the "The Toreador;" Clement DeLion, a skilfull European manipulator of coin and billiard balls this being his first appearance; Crane Brothers, the inexpressibly funny "Mudtown Minstrels;" H. B. Fitzgerald, a quick character change artist, who presents his work a la Fregoli; the Milani trio, Italian street singers and musicians, and the Marvelous Merrills, trick and comedy bicyclists. Mon. Germinal, said to be the greatest baritone vocalist who has ever been heard in the varieties, is underlined for the week of Oct. 17.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The announcement of the romantic drama "Soldiers of Fortune" as the attraction at the Castle Square Theatre next week, coming so soon after the original presentation of the play, indicates a determination on the part of the management of this playhouse to keep its patrons familiar with all the plays of the day worthy of consideration. The skilful work done by Augustus Thomas in making a play from the story told by Richard Harding Davis was freely admitted when the play was first produced and its popularity has been largely gained by the value of the scenes, situations and dialogue originating with the author of the stage version. "Soldiers of Fortune" is announced for only one week and the usual distribution of souvenir boxes of bonbons will be made at the Monday matinee.

W. C. T. U. WORK.

The Wollaston Branch Resumes Its Meetings.

On Tuesday evening October the fourth, the Wollaston branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union opened the season's work in a most auspicious manner. Supper was served in the vestry of the Methodist church at six-thirty, to which all were bidden. The tables were made the more attractive by cut flowers tastefully arranged. The supper was served daintily and abundantly and consisted of chicken and salmon salads, jelly, relishes, rolls, biscuits, cake in great variety, ice cream, fruit and coffee.

During the hour following grace said by the Rev. Mr. Heath, pastor of the Methodist church, the one hundred and thirty-eight chatted socially together and when appetite was satisfied, Mrs. Barker, president of the Wollaston W. C. T. U., after words of welcome to those assembled, introduced Mrs. Ida S. Brown, County President of the W. C. T. U. as toast mistress of the evening.

Her remarks were few and well chosen. She introduced as first speaker Mrs. Clara S. Morrill, County Superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion, who explained the need of the work among the young and the special lines of labor to which the Legion is devoted. She made a touching appeal to parents, especially to mothers to interest themselves in this work and to give their support and co-operation to the earnest workers, endeavoring to so educate the young as to reform drunkards.

Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, State President of the W. C. T. U., was the principal speaker of the evening. She gave outlines of the work from the early days, when the union was organized to reform the rumseller and the drunkard, as it grew to embrace many lines of work closely allied to this and without which the first might be accomplished only in part. She interested her hearers in experiences gained by earnest effort with individuals and communities along their lines and showed the need of concentrated and united effort.

At the close of her address Mrs. Mary Hastings Slade delighted the audience with a vocal selection and Mrs. Brown invited the company to remain and enjoy a social hour becoming acquainted with the speakers and with each other, and to become members of the union. The meeting was a success adding to the membership and to the funds in the treasury and is designed to be the first of a succession of meetings, keeping alive the interest in temperance throughout the years and assuring the continuance of Quincy's proud rank in the community as a no-license city.

The government intends to send a large punitive expedition to the district.

ON EXHIBITION.

Picture of Our Library Attracts Attention.

In Former Home of Thomas Crane.

Regarded As a Model and Beautiful Library.

Displayed in one of the large show-windows of the store of Lyman Hoyt's Sons & Co., at Stamford, Conn., says the Daily Advocate of that city, is a picture which at once attracts attention because of its fine execution and its handsome framing, but which has a still greater interest because of what it represents and its association with a former resident of Stamford. It is a picture of the Thomas Crane Public Library at Quincy, Mass., a memorial of a man who for many years lived in Stamford, and whose son is now a resident of Strawberry Hill. The suggestion that the picture be exhibited in Stamford came not only from friends of Mr. Crane, but from persons who conceived that the exhibition here of the picture of an ideal library building might help to keep alive the hope that Stamford will some time have a public library building worthy of the town.

The beautiful Thomas Crane Memorial Library in Quincy was erected in 1882, as a memorial of Thomas Crane by his widow, the late Mrs. Clarissa L. Crane, and his two surviving sons, Benjamin F. and Albert. In 1895, Mrs. Crane, by her will, gave large sums in bequests to various persons and institutions, and among them a foundation fund for this library. Since then, her son, Albert, has given two large pieces of land adjoining the original site, so that the library grounds now comprise nearly two acres.

The site of the library is one of the most beautiful spots in Quincy, and the structure is pointed to every visitor with a feeling of pride. The architect of the building was the late H. H. Richardson, who designed a number of fine libraries.

Thomas Crane, who is remembered by most of Stamford's older inhabitants, came to this city about 1859. He purchased a farm of forty-five acres on the crest of Strawberry Hill, and erected there a beautiful and spacious residence. He named his villa "Rock-Acre," the substantial wall erected around the premises and the handsome granite gateway being in keeping with the title. Here he spent the closing years of a life that had been full of useful activity, and here he died at the age of 72 years.

His son, Albert Crane, is still a resident of the charming villa on the hill whose beauty as a place of residence was discovered by his father. Since the latter established his home there, many other fine houses have been erected in what has become the most select district in Stamford, though its development was practically begun when Mr. Crane came here.

The present owner of Rock-Acre is a lawyer by profession, a graduate of Tufts College in 1863, and of Columbia in 1866, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He is a great lover of books, a man of broad culture and taste, devoted to music and art, a deep student, and has traveled extensively.

The elder Mr. Crane was born in Quincy, where his memorial is erected, in 1803. When he was 26 he went to New York, where his industry and business capacity were soon rewarded. He became widely known as a contractor, dealing with extensive work, and always trusted, regarded as a man in whom absolute confidence might be placed. He was a director in several banks insurance and street railroad companies, a trustee of Tufts College, and one of the stanchest supporters of the Universalist Church. While a resident of Stamford, he was a regular attendant at and a faithful friend of the local Universalist Church.

These are some of the things called to mind, the last two or three days, by those who knew Mr. Crane as a fellow-townsman in Stamford. To others, as has been suggested, the picture of the Thomas Crane Memorial Library at Quincy encourages the hope that a structure equally beautiful and useful might be erected in Stamford.

Golf Championship.

Andrew Carnegie, 2d, of the Essex County club won the state golf championship on Saturday defeating Thomas G. Stevenson in a 36 hole match 8 up and 7 to play.

NO LIBEL.

Jury Found for Defendant in Case of Faircloth vs. Prescott.

In the Superior civil court at Dedham this morning, in the action of libel brought by George F. Faircloth vs. George W. Prescott, the publisher of the Quincy Daily Ledger, the jury found for the defendant.

The case was brought because of the publication in the Daily Ledger of April 9, 1902, without comment, of charges preferred by Chief Engineer Peter J. Williams against said Faircloth, who had been suspended as a member of the Quincy Fire Department.

In this case the defendant pleaded the truth of the charges as published, and went to trial before the jury on that issue, with the result as above.

City Solicitor Paul R. Blackmur appeared for the defendant, while the plaintiff was represented by E. J. Parker.

Faircloth also brought a suit against Peter J. Williams because of the charges, and this case is in order for trial at this term of court. It might have been tried with the other case, but Chief Engineer Williams has been confined to the house by illness and was unable to attend court.

Takes His Honors Modestly.

Sumner Foster of Brookline will come pretty near being the youngest county commissioner in the state. On the whole, it is a healthy sign to see a young man get into an office of this sort. Perhaps by the time he grows old—and he has a good many years before him—he will be able to really understand county politics. Some of the ablest men in the state throw up both hands when it comes to solving the mysteries connected with this branch of our government, and it is not a mystery which is conducive to best government either.

Mr. Foster is bearing himself very modestly for a young man who put a veteran of ten years standing out of the way. He attributes his success to the system of organization under which his campaign was conducted. The month's leeway which he got while Blanchard was scoffing at him just gave him the election and cost Blanchard his place.—Practical Politics.

King's Daughters Service.

Like everything which the King's Daughters undertake the service at Bethany church Sunday evening was of interest, and there was a large attendance. Music was a feature and Mrs. Hunt the organist, rendered special numbers, while the Ladies' Harmony Quartette sang four selections. The quartette includes Mrs. Worster, Mrs. Moore, Miss Whitcomb and Mrs. Worster. The special speaker was Miss Alice Brown of Boston whose subject in connection with missions was, "Is it worth while?"

Boulevard Case Setiled.

The case of William T. Meek against the Commonwealth, which was opened in the Superior court at Dedham last week, was settled on Saturday. It was a petition for the assessment of damages for land taken of the plaintiff at Atlantic for the Quincy Bay Shore Metropolitan boulevard. The sum of $1,500 had been awarded by the Park Commission, but the settlement was made at $5,000. Paul R. Blackmur and Russell & Russell appeared for the plaintiff and the Commonwealth was represented by R. T. Dodge.

Harvest Time.

All who attended the Sunday morning service at the Quincy Point church were priviliged to hear a grand sermon by their pastor, Rev. Leon H. Austin. Mr. Austin's theme was: "Harvest Time." The sermon was especially helpful to the old—to those who are nearing the harvest time of life. The special music by the choir added much to the service. A selection was rendered by a trio composed of Mrs. G. K. Carter Miss N. B. Gage and Mr. C. A. Tanner. The tenor solo by Mr. Tanner was especially good. After the prayer Mrs. Carter and Miss Gage, sang as a response, the duet: "Come, Holy Spirit."

A Randolph item in the Globe says foxes are getting to be numerous in the reservation lands adjoining Chicatawbut hill and nearly every day they can be seen sporting in the open by the patrons of the electric cars. Last week one was killed by a train of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., near Mayflower park station.

DOROTHY Q. HOUSE.

The Colonial Dames Have a House Warming—Many Present.

The society of Colonial Dames held its first gathering in the Dorothy Q house Saturday afternoon. There was a very large attendance of ladies, upwards of two hundred being present, largely from out of town. The ladies began to arrive at 1 o'clock and were met at the Quincy depot by barges, which conveyed them to the house. The gathering was of an informal nature, the greater part of the afternoon being passed in inspecting the different rooms of the house and planning for their furnishing.

The repairs which were commenced some weeks ago are not as yet completed. The ladies spent a delightful afternoon. Lunch was served.

In a few weeks the old historic house will be opened for visitors.

NOT OUT OF RACE

Representative Fallon a Candidate for Mayor.

Representative Fallon wishes the Ledger to state that he has not withdrawn as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Mayor, in favor of John W. McAnarney or anybody else, as reported. He further says that he proposes to stick, and is sanguine of success both at the caucuses and on election day, believing that the time has come when a change is demanded at City Hall. My friends irrespective of party, who have twice elected me to Legislature, urged me some months ago to become a candidate, and promised hearty support.

Republican Club Dinner.

At the annual dinner of the Republican Club tomorrow night, at Symphony hall, Boston, the speakers are to be Senators Foraker of Ohio and Lodge, ex-Senator John M. Thurston of Nebraska and Gov. Bates. Each holder of a dinner ticket will be presented with a badge, consisting of a button bearing the likeness of President Roosevelt, and a pendant with the capitol at Washington on it in relief.

There has been a very large sale of tickets, but there are still many seats unsold, which can be obtained by applying at the Club, room 21, 19 Milk street. The dinner will begin at 6 o'clock sharp, and the speaking at 7. The galleries will be open to the public at 6 o'clock, and will be reserved exclusively for ticket holders until 6.55, when the general public will be admitted until all the space is filled.

Mausoleum to Hanna.

In the attractive Lake View cemetery at Cleveland, Ohio, where the $225,000 memorial to President Garfield is located, there will soon be erected a $100,000 mausoleum to the late Senator Marcus A. Hanna, whose remains are now in the Wade chapel. The mausoleum will be of granite 49 by 25 and 24 feet high, and inside will be two mammoth sarcophagi of marble, and eighteen catacombs. The Garfield memorial is visited annually by about 50,000 people. In the cemetery is a shaft monument to Rockefeller, and other costly memorials.

Was Onto Him.

The conductors on the electric cars running between East Weymouth and this city are always prepared to meet those who try to ride free. It is a practice of some people, who wish to go only a short distance, to board the car, and before paying their fare, to ask if the car is going to a point which lies in an opposite direction. By the time the car is stopped, and they have their answer, the sly passengers have almost reached their destination. The other evening one conductor evidently recognized a would-be passenger, for, before the man boarded the car the conductor said, you'll have to try that trick on the next car coming along.

SEVEN IN FIELD.

For Representative Honors This Year.

Three Republicans Will Divide Vote.

Vote Last Year for Representatives and Governor.

The candidacy of Arthur E. Baxter for the Legislature promises to put some new life into what promised to be a quiet election next month. More than one has ventured the prediction since Saturday that it may mean the defeat of one of the regular Republican candidates. Which one they do not say. These same men do not expect Mr. Baxter will be successful, but say his candidacy will divide the Republican vote, and thereby give the Democratic candidates a show.

The vote last year was as follows:

Fallon, D.	1,550
Freeman, R.	1,504
Sandberg, R.	1,443
Turner, S.	1,184
Blanks,	2,066

The vote for the head of the ticket last year was: Bates, 1,877; Gaston, 1,387; Chase, 403. It will be seen that Mr. Fallon ran 163 ahead of his ticket, while Mr. Freeman ran 373 behind and Mr. Sandberg 434 behind. Mr. Turner led the Socialist candidate for governor by 781 votes.

Both Mr. Fallon and Mr. Turner undoubtedly gained from the fact that only one Democrat and one Socialist were nominated.

This year there are in the field two Republicans, two Democrats, two Socialists, besides Mr. Baxter, and it is not easy at this date to foretell the result.

PETTY BREAKS.

Several Places at East Weymouth Visited.

East Weymouth people were considerably stirred up this morning over the report that a gang of burglars had visited the village during the night, and had broken into several places.

Investigation showed the report to be true. The character of the work, however, would indicate that it was a gang of hoodlums and not professional burglars,

They visited the railroad station where a penny slot machine was carried off and smashed open. Evidently the gang then took a route that would avoid Jackson square, where there is always someone about. A call was made at Websters drug store, where a show window was smashed and candy and fancy articles taken from the window.

Humphrey Bros., store was visited and things in the show window were taken.

At the Savings Bank a window was smashed, but there was no evidence that the parties got inside. Even if they had there was nothing that they could have taken, as all valuables were locked up in the vault.

The store of William Tobin was also entered and railroad books, cigars and money to the value of $35 taken.

Open Tourney.

There will be two distinct competitions in the open tournament to be held by the Wollaston Golf Club on Friday and Saturday. The first day will be devoted to club team matches of four members each, medal score. A prize will be awarded to each member of the team making the best aggregate gross score. Entries close at 6 P. M., Thursday. Saturday's play will be an open handicap stroke competition, handicaps limited to 18 strokes. Prizes will be awarded for best net and gross scores.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

The Boston Americans were equal to the occasion on Saturday, and the two victories over their rivals put them at the top. The league season closes today and it is hardly probable that New York will win both games which are necessary to secure them the championship.

With any other candidate as an opponent but Gov. Bates, the appeal of Candidate Douglas for the labor vote might meet with success. Mr. Bates may not be an avowed labor candidate, but he is distinctively a man of the people, and not a rich manufacturer. A gentleman who has won success in politics on his merits. On more than one occasion he has been the popular choice of the people, even against the machine, and has won signal victories. He has made one of the ablest governors the commonwealth has ever had, and after two years in office the voters will not turn him down, but give him the customary three years by a good majority.

Drift of Opinion.

☞There is a general agreement that whatever is the size of the crops this year, their money value will be greater than ever. And if the farmer is actually getting the greater money for his crops, the rest of the country can afford to pay it, for the money is increasing the consumption and demand for the goods that the rest of the country produces. When the producer gets the benefit of high prices there is nothing to be afraid of.—Haverhill Gazette.

☞In the proposed petition to the legislature for the establishment of trade schools along other lines than the textile industry is demonstrated one of the tendencies of the times. Skilled labor is the demand. The old-time system of apprenticeship is at an end. The industries have developed out of all crudity, and the progress to a still greater point of nicety requires trained workers. Economic conditions will not permit of training to the last degree through practice and experimentation in the actual field of operations. In those branches of the various trades requiring expert workmanship the worker who comes ready supplied with the knowledge required finds himself at a great advantage. He is profited; his employer is profited. Both sides recognize the advantage of training. So training is encouraged and sought. The industrial school furnishes the desired opportunity, and the value of the industrial schools is coming more and more to be appreciated.—New Bedford Standard.

☞London tradesmen have decided not to permit any Americans to shop in their places and inspect their goods except under promise to buy. At least, that is what an authority on the situation announces. The American traveler of the feminine gender is likely to balk and get fractious over any rule of this kind. She has been in the habit of looking, and to her heart's content, in America. To a certain extent, at least, why shouldn't she? Who wants to buy a pig in a poke? Who wants to go into a store which practically bears the sign that all who enter must abandon hope of getting out without spending some of their money? Why, any store in America establishing such a rule would be boycotted by the women customers in a week after the order was made! The shopper who shops and never buys is a tough proposition on the clerks and owners of stores, but just how she can be gotten rid of is a mighty question. She is within her rights all the time; and if she is flouted or ordered away and banished she and her sisters, who must necessarily buy sometimes, will be likely to form a sort of association of their own, and make trouble and cause loss in the store that does the flouting and the banishing.—Brockton Enterprise.

EVILS OF DIVORCE

Episcopalians Say It Is Time They Should Be Checked

WOULD CHANGE A CANON

Duty of Officers of Christian Church as Well as Society to Preserve Sanctity of the Home and Keep It Pure

Boston, Oct. 10.—Great crowds went to Trinity church Sunday to hear the Archbishop of Canterbury preach, and to the Church of the Advent, where a mass meeting in the interest of upholding the sanctity of the marriage bond was addressed by several leaders in the Episcopal church.

At the Church of the Advent Bishop Doane of Albany delivered an address and introduced the speakers. Bishop Doane is chairman of the interdenominational committee of churches which is endeavoring to secure conformity regarding the remarriage of persons who have been divorced.

In his address Dr. Doane said he thought the time had arrived when his own church should deal with the question concerning remarriage. Although the Church of England does not permit the remarriage of persons who have been divorced, the Episcopal church of this country allows the marriage of the innocent person in a case of infidelity. Many of the clergymen decline to marry any person divorced for any cause, and an attempt is being made at the present convention to have their views embodied in a canon which shall displace the present one. Bishop Doane quoted from the marriage ritual of the prayerbook to show that nothing but death could sever those who have been united in holy matrimony. He thought it was time the canons of the church agreed with the prayerbook.

Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, the next speaker, said it was not only the duty of society, but of the officers of the Christian church to preserve the sanctity of the home and keep it pure and inviolate. Marriage was not an institution to be broken by the pleasure of men. God Himself created it an everlasting mystery and it was similar to that union of Jesus Christ and His church. Dr. Greer also advocated bringing the canon on marriage into harmony with the prayerbook.

Rev. Dr. W. W. Webb told of the widespread evils of divorce. There had been 60,000 divorces in the United States in the past year. Dr. Webb said that signs were not wanting that people were realizing that the divorce evil must be checked.

The last speaker, Chief Justice Stiness of Rhode Island, thought that if a man abuses his wife there is no reason why she should not have a separation. Many of the states had separation laws. But it was not this phase of the question that was bringing disgrace upon the country, he said. Not one case in fifty was an application for a separate maintenance, but nearly all cases of domestic difficulty were for absolute divorce, many of them brought so that the applicants could marry again. Justice Stiness laid emphasis on the grave dangers which were confronting the coming generation as a result of the present day system of divorce.

Many of the bishops discussed topics which are now before the general convention for action. Touching on the agitation for a change of name, which has been in existence since the convention three years ago, Bishop Grafton said the proper title of the denomination was "The American Catholic Church."

Died on Date of Birth

Garysburg, N. C., Oct. 10.—Mathew W. Ransom, United States senator from North Carolina for 23 years, and later minister to Mexico, died suddenly of heart failure. He was 78 years old, his death occurring on the date of his birth. General Ransom served during the Civil war as brigadier general. He was the largest individual landowner and cotton planter in the state.

First Train Fatality In Subway

New York, Oct. 10.—Michael Kupac was run down and almost instantly killed by a subway train on which were 50 persons who had been enjoying the trip through the subway at the invitation of the officials. This is the first subway fatality caused by operation of a train. Motorman Griffin was arrested.

The Burial of Payne

Milwaukee, Oct. 10.—Henry C. Payne was buried in Forest Home cemetery after 25,000 persons had viewed the body lying in state at the city hall. The full Episcopalian services for the dead were read at All Saints Episcopal church. The services at the grave were private.

Miss Peck Climbs 21,000 Feet

Lima, Peru, Oct. 10.—Miss Annie S. Peck, the American mountain climber, has ascended Huascan mountain to a height of 21,000 feet. She was prevented from reaching the summit because of immense crevices and snow. Huascan is 22,050 feet high.

Mexico City, Oct. 10.—As the wheat crop this year indicates an increase of 5 percent over that of last year, the importation of this cereal probably will not be necessary.

WON'T OPEN THIS WEEK

Fall River Mills, However, May Resume Before Month Ends

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 10.—Rumors have been current for two or three days that the print cloth mills would be reopened at an early date, but President Borden of the Manufacturers' association says that so far as he knows no mill has any intention of trying to start a week from today. Mr. Borden thinks that if concerted action was desired it would be agreed upon at a meeting of the agents. No such meeting has been called, and he knows of no intention to call one.

The labor secretaries say that the overseers and second hands are being held in readiness for a resumption of work by some of the mill owners, and that the machinery has recently been overhauled. The prevailing opinion, however, is that no mill will open its gates during this week.

Today marks the beginning of the 12th week of the strike. The general feeling throughout the city has improved somewhat, due probably to the conference between the mill agents and union officials last week, and business men incline to the belief that this month will be the last one of idleness.

Wound Up With Suicide

Springfield, Mass., Oct. 10.—Judson Strong, the wealthy real estate man, who was shot by Dr. E. J. Belt Saturday night when Belt was in a crazy fit, is in a very critical condition. There is immediate danger of secondary hemorrhage from the wounds in his face and mouth, and grave danger of blood poisoning. Belt committed suicide by taking carbolic acid after the shooting. He had previously tried to kill Miss Amelia Dumas, to whom he was soon to be wedded.

Attack by Gang of Robbers

Newtown, Conn., Oct. 10.—What was doubtless a well planned expedition to assault and rob Night Operator North at the railroad station here was frustrated by the approach of an early freight train from New Haven. Several men, the exact number North cannot state, attacked him savagely as he left his post to look at a switch less than 100 feet away. They were about to gag him when the freight train appeared around a nearby curve. The men fled.

Young Hunter Accidentally Shot

Nashua, N. H., Oct. 10.—The first accident of the hunting season in this vicinity occured when Joseph King, Jr., 14 years old, received a heavy charge of buckshot in the right hip. He is in a serious condition. Young King, accompanied by Francis Leazotte, went into the woods to shoot squirrels. The gun which Leazotte was carrying was accidentally discharged and King, who was less than 10 feet away, received the full charge in the hip.

Arrests For Ticket Thieving

Providence, Oct. 10.—James Horgan was arrested here on suspicion of receiving stolen tickets, alleged to have been stolen from the Somerville, Mass., station of the Boston and Maine railroad. Horgan's brother, Thomas, was arrested in Boston Thursday for the larceny of $434.71 worth of tickets, and a part of these, it is claimed, were received by James Horgan here yesterday. He was taken to Boston last evening.

Elevator Took Man's Head Off

Boston, Oct. 10.—An unknown man entered the basement of a warehouse on Constitution wharf and fell asleep upon the floor of the elevator. Michael Ferry, a night watchman, who was on an upper floor of the warehouse, started the elevator machinery, and was horrified when the car came in sight to see on it a man's body with the head missing. The unknown victim of the accident was well dressed.

An Unwelcome Caller

Southbridge, Mass., Oct. 10.—While Ronan Clemmence was holding a party in his house here last night an acquaintance called at the front door and when Clemmence responded to the ring the caller fired two revolver shots at him, but neither of the bullets took effect. WATSON ACCEPTS

Denounces Both Parties With His Customary Vigor

CLASS AND TRUST-RULED

Says Grover Cleveland Ought to Have Been Impeached--Capital and Labor Have Reached a Dangerous Antagonism

Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 10.—Thomas E. Watson, candidate for the presidency on the national Populistic ticket, announces his acceptance in a letter in which he declares the Democratic party to be as bad as the Republican, being class, trust ruled and as being a band of office seekers looking for graft. Epitomized, his sentiments were:

Political education never reaches the masses.

Crimes are committed under forms of law.

Soulless autocracy kills the spirit of the people by atrocious laws.

The old political parties unite to despoil the common people.

Public utilities are held by robbers.

Half a dozen corporation kings can meet in the office of J. P. Morgan and tax the life out of any city or town in the United States.

Standard Oil and its plunderers eventually will own the United States.

A third party is necessary to hold the balance for reform.

Roosevelt defiantly defends existing conditions; Parker's belief is the same, but he is indefinite, foxy, unfit and secured the nomination by crookedness.

Arthur P. Gorman, who reeks with the foulest trust legislation of the last 20 years, is Parker's manager.

Grover Cleveland ought to have been impeached for the midnight bond issue engineered by August Belmont, the millionaire, financier of Parker's campaign.

Capital and labor have reached a dangerous antagonism. If president, I would establish a national bureau of arbitration, with full jurisdiction over labor troubles.

The Democratic platform contains no Democratic principles.

Belmont, Pat McCarren, Arthur Gorman and the rest have no harmony of any sort, nor agreement upon any earthly subject beyond capturing offices for sale or for occupancy.

The Democratic and Republican platform in the concrete are identical.

We must prepare for 1908.

Chicago, Oct. 10.—James Thomas, whose hair Charles Alexander, a barber, was cutting, complained that the clippers pulled his hair, instead of cutting it. Alexander died almost instantly, his jugular vein having been severed.

Drug Swindle Broken Up

New York, Oct. 10.—The New York police are convinced that they have broken up a gigantic drug swindle by the arrest of several men in this city. The arrests were made on information that well known proprietary medicines were being counterfeited and sold as genuine. It is asserted by detectives that slips were found in the places raided giving the names of 3000 druggists throughout the country to whom dangerous mixtures, made in New York, were sold. It is said that preparations made by the best known chemical firms in Europe were counterfeited.

"GREEN SICKNESS"

The unhealthy complexion of green sickness is changed to the rosy blush of good health by Scott's Emulsion.

Green sickness is one of the forms of blood disease found in young women. The change from girlhood to womanhood often upsets the nervous system, weakens digestion and throws the blood-making organs out of gear.

Scott's Emulsion puts new heart into pale girls. It tones up the nervous and digestive system, and feeds the blood. It is a natural tonic.

Remember that 30 per cent. of these cases go on into consumption unless prevented. Scott's Emulsion prevents consumption.

NEW PHASE OF WAR

Kuropatkin Announces Time For Forward Movement

HOW CRITICS VIEW PLAN

British Opinion That He Is Acting on Imperial Order--Opinion That Oyama Will Welcome Prospect of Decisive Battle

London, Oct. 10.—Simultaneously with General Kuropatkin's announcement to his army that the time has come for a forward movement, there comes news that the Russians have captured Bentsiaputze, one of the strategical points held by the Japanese. The event did not precipitate a severe engagement, although the Japanese are reported to have suffered a considerable loss, the turning of their position having exposed them to a severe fire.

In his address to his army Kuropatkin asserts that the Russians have a force numerically superior to that of the Japanese and he predicts a telling victory for his soldiers.

The fleet blockading Port Arthur is reported to be more than usually alert, watching for British ships that are supposed to be planning to take supplies into the harbor.

The new phase of the war involved in Kuropatkin's address to his army is keenly discussed by English military critics. In the light of the probable motives underlying Kuropatkin's decision to take the offensive, it is not forgotten how, recently, the Russian plan of campaign was represented to be to draw the Japanese northward in order to attenuate their communications, and hence there is greater surprise at what is considered as a remarkable order.

Various reasons are advanced by the critics as having possibly actuated Kuropatkin; first, that Japanese inactivity led him to suppose that he was stronger numerically; second, that intrigues connected with the appointment of a new commander-in-chief may have determined Kuropatkin to precipitate matters, and, according to the English critics, by far the most acceptable explanation, that he again has been overruled from St. Petersburg and is acting on imperial order. "He seems to be thrusting his head into the lion's jaw," says The Daily Telegraph, "under instructions from St. Petersburg to give the czar victory at any cost."

Spencer Wilkinson, in The Morning Post, takes similar views. He says that Kuropatkin's mention of the relief of Port Arthur and the fact that immediately following the decision to send out a second army he apparently is about to risk everything in an attack by the first army, suggests government pressure. If so, Wilkinson says, his advance is a sign of desperation; but if he is acting on his own judgment it is a bold move and he is a formidable antagonist.

While all the morning newspapers comment in a similar vein, the consensus of opinion is that Field Marshal Oyama has nothing to fear from a Russian advance, and that he probably will welcome the prospect of a decisive battle, since it is considered after such an order further retreat is impossible for the Russians without demoralization, and, as Wilkinson remarks, should Kuropatkin be beaten now, nobody will expect the second Russian army to succeed any better than the first.

The retirement of the Japanese on their position at Liaoyang is construed as evidencing the desire of Field Marshal Oyama to draw the Russians into an attack upon a strong defensive position. The dry weather is favorable to military operations.

AN OLD OFFENDER

Aged Horse Thief Likely to Spend More Time In Prison

Southbridge, Mass., Oct. 10.—Inspectors from the Worcester police department have identified John Lyons, who was arrested under sensational circumstances, on the charge of horse stealing, as John Thaber, alias James Thaber, who has spent the greater part of his life in state prisons. Lyons was arrested in Charlton City by a constable, but succeeded in escaping, although handcuffed, after he had severely bitten the officer. Later, however, the man was arrested by Southbridge police, being found in the woods trying to file off his handcuffs on a stone wall.

According to the Worcester inspectors, Lyons only recently was released from the Connecticut state prison, after serving a term for horse stealing. The officers say, also, that Lyons has served two terms in Sing Sing, one of 10 and the other of six years; three years in the Massachusetts state prison, and four years in the New Hampshire state prison. In each instance he was convicted for horse stealing. Lyons is over 70 years old.

Where to Get Religious Training

Chicago, Oct. 10.—"Not a single religious problem of any importance has been solved by the theological seminaries of the United States in 50 years. The churches are too much occupied with denominational questions to direct their attention to them. The solution of these problems must come from our great universities which are realizing that they must furnish the religious training in the future." President Harper of the University of Chicago set forth in these words his opinion of the status of religious institutions.

FIRST PASTOR

Helps Atlantic Church Celebrate Anniversary.

Historical Sketch by John Ramsdell.

Special Programs at All the Services Sunday.

The Atlantic M. E. Church observed its tenth anniversary on Sunday. All of the services were largely attended and many former parishioners were present.

The services opened with a love feast at 9.30 A. M., led by the pastor Rev. Manfred C. Wright. The regular morning service was held at 10.30, when the sermon was by Rev. Herbert H. Deetz, who was pastor of the church when it was dedicated. Rev. Mr. Deetz preached from the words of John 19:5—"Behold the man."

At the close of the sermon Rev. Mr. Wright extended the right hand of fellowship to Mr. and Mrs. Westly Carlisle of Grand Rapids, Mich., who were admitted by letter.

At Sunday School session there was an address by Rev. H. C. Colton of Boston on the Sunday school lesson, which was "The Widow's oil increased." There were also remarks by the pastor and Rev. Mr. Deetz, and singing and recitations by the school.

At 3.30 there was a meeting of the Junior Epworth League conducted by Edith Greenard.

At six o'clock there was a meeting of the Epworth League conducted by Mrs. Westly Carlisle.

The evening service was held at 7 o'clock. It opened with a song service led by the pastor, prayer by Rev. Mr. Deetz, scripture lesson by the pastor, historical sketch by John Ramsdell, and sermon by Rev. Willard T. Perrin presiding elder.

Miss Mabel F. Burr also sang a solo, "The Beautiful City."

Mr. Ramsdell in his historical sketch said the movement which culminated in the organization of the church started in May, 1891. The result was the formation of a mission May 24 with Rev. David Ela, superintendent of City Missions, in charge.

It was organized as a church Jan. 10, 1892, with 22 charter members and 14 probationers.

Steps were taken looking toward the building of a church with the result that a lot was purchased the next year. The following spring a building was started. The corner-stone was laid April 10, by Bishop J. Fitzgerald, assisted by other clergymen. The church was dedicated by Bishop J. W. Hamilton Oct. 11, 1894. The sermon being by Rev. W. N. Brodbeck.

The church cost furnished, $6,000. Of this amount the Ladies Aid collected over $3,000.

The first pastor was Rev. H. H. Deetz, although Rev. C. A. Shatto ministered during the time it was a mission. Other pastors were Rev. George B. Shannon, Rev. Ira B. Pice, Rev. H. C. Wright, Rev. Guy M. McCreery, Rev. Benjamin D. Beck and Rev. Manfred C. Wright.

TAKEN FOR TAXES.

Three Lots Sold at Atlantic---Had Paid No Taxes for Many Years.

Three lots of land on Appleton street were sold at auction Saturday by Auctioneer Johnson, having been taken by the city for unpaid taxes. William T. Meek bought two of the lots and Frederick W. Kilpatrick, the third. The price paid was about $275 for each lot, the amount of taxes, interest and costs. No tax has been paid on these lots for about 27 years.

Base Ball Bulletins.

Watch the Daily Ledger show windows today for bulletins of the Boston-New York ball games at New York.

☞ We have from two distinguished sources rear and forward views of man, and it is to be regretted that from neither standpoint is there much reason why the highest of creation as he exists today should vault his pride. The past robs him of part of his glory, and the future holds the awful possibilities of his reduction to second place in the animal kingdom. — Saturday Evening Post.

—On the docks in London in one year 76,800 rats have been destroyed, but the medical officer of health for the port is doubtful whether that was as much as the natural increase of births over deaths, and more vigorous measures are to be taken.

APPEAL TO YOUNG MEN.

President Garfield Said, "Pitch Your Tent Among the Living and Not Among the Dead."

[Extract from the speech of Hon. James A. Garfield delivered at Cleveland, O., Oct. 11, 1879.]

Now, fellow citizens, a word before I leave you, on the very eve of the holy day of God—a fit moment to consecrate ourselves finally to the great work of next Tuesday morning. I see in this great audience tonight a great many young men, young men who are about to cast their first vote. I want to give you a word of suggestion and advice. The other day a boy up in one of the northwestern counties said to me: "General, I have a great mind to vote the Democratic ticket. My father is a Republican, and my brothers are Republicans, and I am a Republican all over, but I want to be an independent man, and I don't want anybody to say, 'That fellow votes the Republican ticket just because his dad does,' and I have half a mind to vote the Democratic ticket just to prove my independence." I did not like the thing the boy suggested, but I did admire the spirit of the boy that wanted to have some independence of his own.

Now I tell you, young men, don't vote the Republican ticket just because your father votes it. Don't vote the Democratic ticket even if he does vote it. But let me give you this one word of advice as you are about to pitch your tent in one of the great political camps. Your life is full and buoyant with hope now, and, I beg you, when you pitch your tent, pitch it among the living and not among the dead. If you are at all inclined to pitch it among the Democratic people and with that party, let me go with you for a moment while we survey the ground where I hope you will not shortly lie. It is a sad place, young man, for you to put your young life into. It is to me far more like a graveyard than like a camp for the living.

Oh, young man, come out of that! That is no place in which to put your young life. Come out, and come over into this camp of liberty, of law, of order, of justice, of freedom, of all that is glorious under these night stars.

Is there any death here in our camp? Yes! Yes! Three hundred and fifty thousand soldiers, the noblest band that ever trod the earth, died to make this camp a camp of glory and of liberty forever.

But there are no dead issues here. There are no dead ideas here. Hang out our banner from under the blue sky this night until it shall sweep the green turf from under your feet! It hangs over our camp. Read away up under the stars the inscription we have written on it, lo, these twenty-five years.

Come down the glorious steps of our banner. Every great record we have made we have vindicated with our blood and with our truth. It sweeps the ground and it touches the stars. Come there, young man, and put in your life where all is living, and where nothing is dead but the heroes that defended it.

DEMAND FOR MANUFACTURES

Exports In This Line Exceed Agricultural Products For the First Time.

For the first time in the history of the United States manufactures are exceeding agricultural products in the exportation of domestic products. Figures issued by the department of commerce and labor through its bureau of statistics show that in the month of July manufactures exported amounted to $40,000,000 against $31,000,000 of agricultural products, and in the month of June manufactures amounted to nearly $42,000,000 against $37,250,000 of agricultural products. In former years agricultural products have greatly exceeded manufactures in the exports of the country.

Even in the seven months ending with July, 1904, agricultural products exceeded manufactures by nearly $100,000,000, but in the month of May, 1904, manufactures for the first time in the history of the country exceeded agricultural products in the statement of domestic exports, and this was again the case in June and in July. In the month of May, 1904, exports of manufactures exceeded agricultural products by about $1,000,000. In June the excess of manufactures over agricultural products was over $4,000,000, and in July the excess of manufactures over agricultural products was nearly $9,000,000. In the three months of May, June and July, 1904, the total value of agricultural products exported was $106,503,133, while the total value of manufactures exported in the same period was $120,789,769.

It is quite apparent, however, that the proportion which manufactures form of the total exports is steadily increasing. That this change in the character of the exports of the country—a movement from agricultural products toward manufactures—is due rather to an increase in the home production of manufactures than to any actual decrease in the home production of agricultural products is apparent upon a study of the statistical tables of the census bureau and bureau of statistics, which show the home production in these two great classes.

The census tables show a rapid movement of population from the agricultural sections toward the manufacturing centers, and as a result a smaller proportion of the total population is engaged in the production of food, while a larger proportion is producing manufactures instead of food supplies, thus diminishing the surplus available for exportation. Figures of the bureau of statistics show that the wheat consumption of the United States in the fiscal year 1904 was the largest in the history of the country, the total bushels consumed being 517,143,143 against 466,975,913 bushels in 1903.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms.

CHAPTER XI.

I HAVE seen many beautiful things in my life, as happens to every one living in a world which hath little fault as to its appearance, if one can outlook the shadow which his own selfishness of sorrow and disappointment may cast before him, but it seemed that evening, when I saw Mary Cavendish dressed for the governor's ball, that she was the crown of all.

I verily believe that never since the world was made, not even that beautiful first woman who comprehended in herself all those witcheries of her sex which have been ever since to our rapture and undoing, not even Eve when Adam first saw her in paradise, nor Helen, nor Cleopatra, nor any of those women whose faces have made powers of them and given them niches in history, were as beautiful as Mary Cavendish that night. And I doubt if it were because she was beheld by the eyes of a lover.

I verily believe that I saw aright and gave her beauty no glamour because of my fondness for her, for not one whit more did I love her in that splendor than in her plainest gown. But, oh, when she stood before her grandmother and me and a concourse of slaves all in a ferment of awe and admiration, with flashings of white teeth and upheavals of eyes and flingings aloft of hands in half savage gesticulation, and courtesied and turned herself about in innocent delight at her own loveliness, and yet with the sweetest modesty and apology that she was knowing to it! That stuff which had been sent to my Lady Culpeper and which had been intercepted ere it reached her was of a most rich and wonderful kind.

The blue of it was like the sky, and through it ran the gleam of silver in a flower pattern, and a great string of pearls gleamed on her bosom, and never was anything like that mixture of triumph in and abashedness before her own exceeding beauty and her perception of it in our eyes in her dear and lovely face. She looked at us and actually shrank a little, as if our admiration were something of an affront to her maiden modesty, and blushed, and then she laughed to cover it and swept a courtesy in her circling shimmer of blue and tossed her head and flirted a little fan, which looked like the wing of a butterfly, before her face.

"Well, how do you like me, madam?" said she to her grandmother. "And am I fine enough for the governor's ball?"

Madam Cavendish gazed at her with that rapture of admiration in a beloved object which can almost glorify age to youth. She called Mary to her and stroked the rich folds of her gown; she straightened a flutter of ribbon. "'Tis a fine stuff of the gown," she said, "and blue was always my color. I was married in it. 'Tis fine enough for the governor's wife, or the queen, for that matter."

She pulled out a fold so that a long trail of silver flowers caught the light and gleamed like frost. No misgivings and no suspicions she had, and none by that time had Mary, believing as she did that her sister had bought all that bravery for her and that it was hers by right, and only troubled by the necessity of secrecy with her grandmother lest she discover for what purpose her own money had been spent. But Catherine eyed her with such exceedingly worshipful love, admiration and yet distress that even I pitied her.

Mary flirting a fan

Catherine herself that night did no discredit to her beauty, her dress being, though it was an old one, as rich as Mary's, of her favorite green with a rose pattern broidered on the front of it, and a twist of green gauze in her fair hair, and that same necklace of green stones which she had shown me in the morning around her long throat, and her long, milky white arms hanging at her sides in the green folds of her gown, and that pale radiance of perfection in her every feature that made many call her the pearl of Virginia, though, as I have said before, she had no lovers. She and Mary were going to the ball, and a company of black servants with them. As for me, balls were out of the question for a convict tutor, and I knew it, and so did they. But suddenly, to my great amazement, Madam Cavendish turned to me: "And wherefore are you not dressed for the ball, Master Wingfield?" she said.

I stared at her, as did also Catherine and Mary, almost as if they suspected she had gone demented. "Madam," I stammered, scarce thinking I had understood her rightly.

"Why are you not dressed for the ball?" she repeated.

"Madam," I said, "pardon me, but you are well acquainted with the fact that I am not a welcome guest at the governor's ball."

"And wherefore?" cried she imperiously.

"Wherefore, madam?"

Mary and Catherine both looked palely at their grandmother, not knowing what had come to her.

"Madam," I said, "do you forget?"

"I forget not that you are the oldest son and heir of one of the best families in England and as good a gentleman as the best of them," she cried out. "That I do not forget, and I would have you go to the ball with my granddaughters. Put on thy plum colored velvet suit, Harry, and order thy horse saddled."

For the first time I seemed to understand that Madam Judith Cavendish had, in spite of her wonderful powers of body and mind, somewhat of the childishness of age, for as she looked at me the tears were in her stern eyes, and a flush was on the ivory white of her face, and her tone had that querulousness in it which we associate with childhood which cannot have its own will.

"Madam," I said gently, "you know that it is not possible for me to do as you wish, and also that my days of gayeties are past, though not to my regret, and that I am looking forward to an evening with my books, which, when a man gets beyond his youth, yield him often more pleasure than the society of his kind."

"But, Harry," she said piteously and still like a child, "you are young, and I would not have"— Then imperiously again, "Get into thy plum colored velvet suit, Master Wingfield, and accompany my granddaughters."

What It Costs
... AND ...
What It Pays

are two values of newspaper advertising that the merchant has to consider. But the most important thing is

WHAT IT PAYS.

The merchant can get space in papers of small circulation and little influence for a little less money than he same size space would cost in the DAILY LEDGER and the QUINCY PATRIOT.

DOES IT PAY

to throw away the certainty of the profitable returns which are sure to LEDGER and PATRIOT advertisers, because it costs less to advertise in a cheaper paper?

The Glenwood Oak Stove for either Coal or Wood

The Glenwood Oak Stove with triangular revolving grate is acknowledged the most perfect working coal stove ever made. This grate keeps the fire absolutely free from clinkers so that the fire need not be let out the entire winter.

The Mica Covered Openings in the lower feed door show the fire and give a most cheerful and pleasing effect.

The Swing Top may be turned to one side, allowing the large flat top beneath to be used for heating water, or other purposes when desired.

The Wood Grate may be used alone, or resting on the coal grate, which is a great convenience for people using both fuels.

It burns with economy either coal or wood.

ADVERTISE IN THE QUINCY LEDGER.

COLLISION

On the Blue Hill Street Railway.

Motorman Killed and Passengers Hurt.

Canton, Mass., Oct. 11.—A heavy vestibuled trolley car dashing down Ponkapoag hill beyond control of the motorman, Frank Smith, jumped the track at a siding and crashed into a car bound from Boston late last night. Motorman Smith, who stuck to his post, was instantly killed and Edward Sheehan, a motorman, was seriously injured, as was Motorman Dugan of the outbound car.

The accident was caused by a heavy coating of leaves which covered the car tracks. The line is single tracked and near the bottom of the hill is a siding upon which a car from Boston was waiting to proceed to Canton. When Motorman Smith, on the Boston-bound car, reached the crest of Ponkopoag hill he shut off his power and started to coast down the hill. The heavy coating of leaves made the use of brakes absolutely useless and the motorman was powerless to stop the car. Gaining momentum at every yard, the heavy car rushed down the incline at a terrific rate. When it struck the switch leading onto the siding it jumped the track and crashed head-on into the waiting car. The vestibules of both cars were crushed as though they were paper. The runaway car carried no passengers, but the one on the siding was occupied by seven passengers. All escaped serious injury.

Sad Case of Shooting

Brookfield, Mass., Oct. 11.—Frances K. Newcombe, 13 years old, was accidentally shot by Irving Mundell, 14 years old, and died later. After the accident the Mundell boy rushed to the girl's father and begged to be shot also. Then he ran for home and fell in a swoon. He has been constantly raving and the news of the girl's death has been kept from him on account of his critical condition.

Man of 93 Weds Woman of 62

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 11.—After a courtship of a week, Wold Berenson, aged 93, and Mrs. Annie M. Goldman, aged 62, were married last night at the home of the bride by Rabbi Silver. Berenson has living seven children, 63 grandchildren, 17 great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild. The bride has living five children and 28 grandchildren. The family circle complete numbers 124 people.

Held For Enticing Child

Taunton, Mass., Oct. 11.—Harry L. Witherell was held in $500 for the grand jury for enticing Eliza A. Pratt from her home. Witherell is a married man of mature years, while the girl is childish looking and but 15 years old. On June 22, it is alleged Witherell took her to Boston, thence to Buffalo, where his wife found him and took him home. The girl was deserted, friendless and penniless.

AN ARREST MADE.

For the Burglaries at Weymouth Sunday Night.

Weymouth officers acted promptly in the matter of the burglaries committed in East Weymouth Sunday night. As a result of their investigation they visited Pleasant street Monday night and placed Andrew W. Corthell, aged 33 years, under arrest. When searched the officers found some confectionery, pipes and railroad books, which it is alleged were taken from the stores entered.

Corthell, who it is alleged has a bad record, was taken to Hingham and locked up for the night. This morning he was brought to Quincy and arraigned in court. But two complaints were issued against him, namely: breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny at the East Weymouth Savings bank and at the store of William Tobin.

Corthell waived examination in the lower court and was held in $2,000 for the grand jury.

Young Men in the Church.

The regular monthly meeting of Bethany Church Brotherhood will be held Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock; lecture at 8.

Rev. W. Sherman Thompson of Somerville, formerly pastor of the Washington Street Congregational church, Quincy Point, will address the meeting; subject, "The young man in the church." Mr. Thompson, as many Quincy people know, is a very interesting speaker. All men of the city, as well as Bethany church, are cordially invited to attend these meetings. Light refreshments will be served. Come and avail yourself of the privilege of hearing an interesting address and spending a pleasant and profitable evening.

Mexican Navy.

Recently two modern gunboats were added to the fleet which for the present serves Mexico as a navy. These gunboats were built in the United States, at Elizabethtown, N. J., and two similar gunboats are now in process of construction at Genoa, Italy. Mexico has not so far acquired men-of-war, though she has in recent years devoted some attention to fortifying her coasts.

TODAY'S COURT.

John Beacon was arraigned for assault on Andrew J. Shaw and for drunkenness at Weymouth. He was fined $8 for assault and $3 for drunkenness.

Andrew W. Corthell was arraigned for breaking and entering the East Weymouth Savings bank and the store of William Tobin. Corthell waived examination in the lower court and was held in $2000 for the grand jury.

REASONS WANTED

For Votes of Representative Freeman

And Some Unrecorded Votes.

Those Relative to Labor Measures in Particular.

The following letter is self explanatory and opens up a few labor issues to enliven the campaign:

Hon. Richard R. Freeman, Ward 5, representative to the General Court from the 5th Norfolk District.

Dear Sir: As you are the only candidate for reelection in this district, I am instructed by vote of the organization which I represent to address this communication to you.

We regard you in your official capacity as an agent or substitute chosen by the citizens to perform certain official duties, as their proxy in the General Court.

As our organization is composed almost exclusively of citizens of the working class we are, naturally, anxious to be informed correctly concerning some of your official acts.

We also realize that it is our right and prerogation to demand of you, as agent of the citizenship, information concerning the legally binding official acts which you have performed, especially in regard to such legislation as concerns us directly as members of the working class.

It is not our desire to anticipate your reply, but we beg to assure you that it will not be necessary for you to refer us to the Journal of the House, as our club is already provided with a copy of this evasive record, behind which many traitors to the working class find shelter and protection.

From the very meagre information we are able to gather from the Journal of the House, which this year especially is remiss in detail, we note that on April 8, 1904, you are recorded as having voted against the passage of a constitutional amendment, whose enactment would make the referendum possible.

On May 11th you voted against the Old Age Pension bill.

Also on June 2 you voted against the bill to restrict the hours of labor of women and minors in Textile Industries.

We urgently request that you explain to the working class of Quincy the reasons or motives which prompted you to perform such official acts by which you inflicted upon our class a crushing blow, knowing, as you certainly do, that it was the votes of the working men that made your election possible.

We ask you to inform us which way your unrecorded vote was cast on April 14, on the bill "to provide Employment—for the Unemployed."

We further request that you inform us how your unrecorded vote was cast on May 4, on the bill "to allow peaceful communications with applicants for positions during strikes, lockouts and labor disputes, which was passed to be engrossed by a vote of 43 to 40, and subsequently rejected in the Senate.

And also how you voted on April 14, on the bill to authorize cities and towns to establish emergency funds for the protection of unemployed citizens and their families.

We hope you will make a prompt and explicit reply to each inquiry herein made. Your failure to do this would justify us in the assumption that your motives and your votes were in the nature of expressed hostility to the working class.

When mailing this letter to you we also hand a copy to the press, hoping that you will give to your reply the same publicity, to the end that the largest possible number of your constitutents may be informed concerning these important matters.

Yours respectfully,
Daniel W. Gorman, Secretary
Quincy Socialist Club.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

Stanford, Conn., is not the only place where a picture of our Thomas Crane Public Library, of which all Quincy is proud, is exhibited. It also appears in a large portfolio of Massachusetts public libraries in the school exhibit of the State at the World's Fair, and a smaller view is shown on a map of Massachusetts also exhibited at the fair, showing that nearly every city and town in the state has a public library building. In the portfolio three views of our library are given. Unfortunately the library is about the only exhibit from Quincy at the World's Fair.

Quincy should do everything it can to encourage historical pilgrimages to this city. Patriotic societies have done much recently by preserving historical sites and making them accessible, and now that there are so many places of interest which may be visited, out-of-town people will find that they can spend a whole day here with considerable pleasure. Not even Concord and Lexington, or Plymouth, have so many historical attractions as Quincy. The list includes:

Birthplace of President John Adams.

Birthplace of President John Quincy Adams.

Burial places of both the Presidents, and the old church in which one of them worshipped.

Site of birthplace of John Hancock, the first signer of the Declaration of Independence.

The Dorothy Q. house, the paternal home of Mrs. John Hancock.

These are some of the more important, but there are many others. Pilgrimages to Quincy will foster local pride, they will help the railroad and street railway, the hotels and the carriage drivers, the dealers in souvenirs and the newspapers, and incidentally a great many people.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ It would be so hard to discover where the presidential campaign is interfering with the business of the country.—Topeka State Journal.

☞ A man knows nothing about women until he learns that, in a group of fifty-seven girls, there are fifty-seven varieties of girls.—Exchange.

☞ Somebody will reach the north pole by accident. We believe that long before this some New Bedford whaler might have sailed up to that long-sought goal of discovery had the captain been willing to sacrifice the commercial objects of his voyage to scientific interests.—Christian Register.

Record Day at Fish Wharves

Boston, Oct. 11.—Although the continued spell of bad weather has almost been the undoing of the fishers, and there appeared to be no prospect in sight of gathering good fares for the market, there arrived yesterday a fleet of 43 vessels, with 1,469,400 pounds, the largest quantity of fresh fish ever to be unloaded at the pier on any single day of the year.

Boston Americans Win Pennant For Second Time

NEW YORKS' HARD FIGHT

Sensational Struggle For Final Honors Ends With Defeat of Highlanders on Their Grounds --Details of Decisive Game

New York, Oct. 11.—Boston vanquished New York on the baseball field here, winning the American league championship pennant for the second time. It was a sensational finish to a thrilling struggle which has been going on for several months and, while Boston won, the New York representatives were not disgraced. In fact they almost shared the honor with the victors.

During the last two months these teams have been see-sawing in the lead for championship fame, and the fact that the issue narrowed down to the outcome of yesterday's double-header demonstrates how close the battle was. In order to win the pennant the New Yorkers required two victories yesterday, while Boston needed only one.

At the end of the fifth inning in the first game the local men seemed to have the first game well in hand, as they had scored two runs, one of which was earned on singles by Kleinow, Chesbro and Dougherty, and the other was forced in by Dineen who, after giving Keeler a base on balls, did a similar favor for Elberfeld and allowed Chesbro to walk over the plate. With the bases filled again Williams was an easy out from Dineen to Lachance.

In the seventh inning a bad throw by Williams to the plate allowed Lachance and Ferris to cross the plate and tie the score for Boston. Each side being equal, things went smoothly until the first half of the ninth inning, when Criger reached first safely on an infield hit. Dineen advanced him to second by a sacrifice and Chesbro, losing control at this critical stage, made a wild pitch, the ball hitting the press stand while Criger was running in with the winning tally. New York failed to offset the advantage which Boston gained and the game and the pennant went to the New England team by a score of 3 to 2.

Over 28,000 persons were within the enclosure when the victory was won and the scene which ensued will not be forgotten easily by any one of those who were present. The Boston contingent which, headed by a brass band, had accompanied the champions from their home city to the park, was noisily enthusiastic and was helped along by thousands of local enthusiasts, who quickly forgot the sting of defeat in their excitement. Cheers and counter-cheers were given for both victors and losers and the din was only partially subdued by the promptness of the rival captains, Collins and Griffiths, in getting their teams hard at work in the second game within 10 minutes from the time the first contest was finished.

Puttman and Winter were the opposing pitchers in the final game, which went the full nine innings without a run being scored. It was a battle between these two and, were it not for a wild throw by Lachance which gave Conroy the looked-for opportunity to tally in the 10th inning, the game might have gone on until darkness set in.

Both teams were the guests of a theatre last night and the champions with their host of rooters left for Boston at midnight.

Successful Financial Season

Chicago, Oct. 11.—When President Johnson of the American Baseball league learned that Boston had won the pennant for the second time in succession he wired the members of the team, congratulating them on their victory. A telegram was also sent to the members of the New York team. Johnson declared that this season, from a financial standpoint, had been the best in the history of the league.

Charged With Assaulting Women

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 11.—The police arrested Marshall Bean, charged with assaults on women. Laura Therein was thrown over a railing on the approach to a bridge, and Regina Rondout was knocked down and jumped upon. The latter fully identified Bean. He was arrested in 1902 for assault, and has a bad reputation. He is about 30 years of age.

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 11.—W. E. Baker, 62 years old, a wholesale spice dealer, committed suicide by shooting in one of the public parks. Despondency over business reverses is given as the cause of his act.

Next Convention at Richmond

Boston, Oct. 11.—The only important business transacted by the Episcopal convention yesterday was the adoption of a resolution naming Richmond as the place for the next triennial convention in 1907.

WYNNE SUCCEEDS PAYNE

His Appointment as Postmaster General Is but Temporary

Washington, Oct. 11.—Robert J. Wynne took the oath of office as postmaster general at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It was administered by John J. Howley, chief clerk to the first assistant postmaster general.

The appointment of Wynne as a member of the president's cabinet was not unexpected by those in close touch with the situation. It was known that in the event of Payne's death the president would designate Wynne as acting postmaster general with the affairs of the department.

How long Wynne may continue as postmaster general has not been determined. Beyond the statement that the appointment is temporary in character nothing is known.

At present it is not believed that a successor to Wynne as first assistant will be appointed. He will continue to direct the business of that bureau with the assistance of the officials now in the department. When Cortelyou assumes the duties of postmaster general Wynne will again undertake the business of the office of first assistant postmaster general.

Labor Leaders In Convention

Lynn, Mass., Oct. 11.—With delegates from scores of affiliated subordinate unions, the state branch, American Federation of Labor, has begun its annual deliberations. The Fall River situation was the most conspicuous theme of discussion. The total receipts received by the state branch for the year amounted to $4390.65, while the expenditures were $2969.89. The money on hand at the present time is $1420.76. President Crozier's address reports progress and points perils and remedies for organized labor.

Minister Tempted to Swear

Providence, Oct. 11.—Rev. Henry S. Nash of the Cambridge Episcopal school roundly denounced the aristocracy of the eastern part of the country at a dinner of the Congregationalist club here last night. He declared that it was "the rottenest, most worthless and useless the world has ever seen," and was about to continue his denunciation when he stopped quickly and said he would not say what he wanted to for fear he would swear. He was loudly applauded.

New York Clubman a Suicide

New York, Oct. 11.—Frank De Peyster Hall, aged 50, a member of several prominent clubs, shot and killed himself. A suit brought by him against two other clubmen, alleging slander and demanding $100,000 damages, was to have come up in the court yesterday. The statements admitted to have been made by the defendants reflected gravely on Hall's moral character.

Beautiful Inn Destroyed by Fire

Vassalboro, Me., Oct. 11.—All that remains of the beautiful Canabas inn is a mass of ruins, fire having destroyed the structure last night. The house was erected at a cost of $15,000. It was large and roomy and was luxuriantly furnished. No one lived in the house at the time of the fire, the owners, Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Pulsifer, having closed the place.

Complaint of Guam Conditions

San Francisco, Oct. 11.—Captain Kidston of the Western Commercial company has arrived here enroute to Washington, where he goes to make complaint of the manner in which the laws are administered in the island of Guam. Kidston states that trade has been greatly hampered by the arbitrary laws enacted by the naval government.

Delaware Republicans Get Together

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 11.—The regular Republicans and the Union, or Addicks Republicans, last evening agreed upon Preston Lea of this city as their candidate for governor in place of the men nominated by their respective conventions. The two factions will attempt to agree on the remainder of the state ticket on Wednesday.

Riotous Moravian Workmen

Vienna, Oct. 11.—Socialist disturbances occurred last evening at Brunn, capital of Moravia. The disorder arose at a meeting of workmen. Tragedy Follows a Failure

Vienna, Oct. 11.—Victor Taussig, senior partner in the firm of S. Taussig & Co. of Vienna, committed suicide here by shooting. His brother, Otto, also a member of the firm, has absconded. The firm is insolvent with liabilities of $600,000. The losses of the firm are attributed to speculations on the bourse.

Police Stopped the Bout

Philadelphia, Oct. 11.—Terry McGovern was giving Eddie Hanlon such severe punishment in a bout here last night that the police stopped the fight in the fourth round. Hanlon was hanging on the ropes in a helpless condition when the police interfered.

Faces Old Charge of Grafting

St. Paul, Oct. 11.—A. A. Ames, formerly mayor of Minneapolis, has been placed on trial for the fourth time on the charge of receiving "graft" money from Bessie Lee, a woman of the town. The work of securing a jury will probably occupy all of this week.

The Tenth District.

Practical Politics has these comments or the situation in this Congressional district: "While the fight against William S. McNary in the 10th district was at its height, one of the leaders in the contest attempted to borrow money from the Puritan Trust company and was turned down. That was at about the time two checks turned up in Quincy for the purpose of carrying on the work against McNary and were sent back from Boston with the announcement that there were no funds in the bank to cover the check. somebody contributed liberally, at the last moment, and the expenditures were larger than the salary of a congressman for one year.

"There was some rash talk, after the primaries, of an independent candidacy, but this will not be. McNary will win by a large majority, and he will receive hundreds of votes from republicans in the 10th district who "view with alarm" the fact that Jay B. Crawford was allowed to get a nomination unopposed which might have been worth something to a politician who was well known, not only as a politician, but as a republican. In Ward 16, where Crawford lives, the leaders did not know him when his candidacy was announced, and this, of course, did not add to the possibility of a live canvass in his behalf.

"Mr. Crawford reports that he has expended no money which requires reporting under the corrupt practices act. That being true, of course, he must have greater power than most people believe. If he was able to enduce certain people in Dorchester to shout his praises from the housetops without paying money for their voices, he has accomplished something that no other candidate of either party has been able to do for years."

Perhaps Candidate Crawford may surprise them again.

Royal Arcanum Meeting.

A union meeting of Webster council of Randolph, Manet of Quincy, Weymouth of Weymouth and John Adams of Wollaston, will be held Wednesday evening, Oct. 12, with Monatiquot council in I. O. O. There will be an entertainment, a collation and a few short addresses by the Grand Regent of Massachusetts and others.

GREAT FIGHT NEAR

Russians Will Endeavor to Strike a Decisive Blow

ADVANCE ON JAPS BEGUN

Speculation as to Considerations Which Led Kuropatkin to Suddenly Assume the Defensive--A Possible Japanese Bluff

St. Petersburg, Oct. 11.—A battle upon which the fate of this year's campaign in Manchuria depends seems only a few days ahead. Advices from the front are meagre. All that is positively known officially is that General Kuropatkin has cast the die at last, about faced his army and is marching resolutely against the enemy as if resolved to do or die.

According to unofficial reports Field Marshal Oyama, at the first sign of Kuropatkin taking the offensive, began drawing in his line and concentrating upon fortified positions north of Liaoyang. According to the latest reports from Mukden, dated last night, the Japanese outposts are being driven in all along the line.

The strategy of the forward movement will be concealed, as were the preparations for the advance, so that all surmises as to where Kuropatkin intends to strike are mere guesswork. It is not clear whether Kuropatkin contemplates a blow on the left, centre or right of the Japanese army, but the fact that stress is laid upon the capture of Bentsiaputzu, which opens the road and fords to Benzihu, 20 miles east of Liaoyang, where General Kuroki crossed, and that Cossacks are already reported in the neighborhood of the stream, might foreshadow an exact reversal of the battle of Liaoyang, this time the Russian commander flanking and turning Liaoyang with his left as Field Marshal Oyama did with his right.

Little light has been thrown upon the considerations which led Kuropatkin suddenly to assume the offensive. Officers of the general staff, while not under-estimating the heavy task and severe sacrifices that are involved in assuming the offensive, nevertheless express absolute confidence that Kuropatkin has found a weak point in the Japanese armor.

Different explanations abound as to the reason for making a forward movement at this time. The advance is attributed to a realization by Kuropatkin of the difficulty the Japanese have encountered in making good their losses at Liaoyang and replenishing their supplies and ammunition, or possibly to the drawing off of a portion of the Japanese troops to reinforce General Nogi in a desperate effort to end the siege of Port Arthur.

Whatever the explanation, it is apparent from the hasty manner in which the Japanese withdrew before the first show of Russian strength that their recent ostentatious preparations for an advance were largely bluff. The best opinion here is that the impending battle is likely to develop with startling rapidity.

It is reported that the Japanese have abandoned Sianchan, Siamatsze and Meichoulin, positions east of Liaoyang.

In political circles considerable stress is laid upon the moral effect upon the Chinese that may be expected from Kuropatkin's advancing without being compelled to abandon the sacred city of Mukden, it being remembered that the Japanese failed to reach the city of imperial tombs during the Chino-Japanese war.

A RUSSO-GERMAN DEAL

How Czar and Kaiser May Try to Dovetail Their Interests

St. Petersburg, Oct. 11.—The rumor of the existence of a secret understanding between Russia and Germany covering the war in the far east has again been revived. According to the latest version Germany gives certain guaranties to Emperor Nichoas regarding the German frontier, which will enable Russia to withdraw troops from the big garrison maintained in Russian Poland and dispatch them to the far east, besides agreeing to support Russia in the peace negotiations at the end of the war. Germany's compensation, in addition to the concessions made in the commercial treaties already negotiated, is to be the support of Russia in the attempt to incorporate The Netherlands in the German confederation in the event of the death of Queen Wilhelmina without a direct heir.

Lamsdorff Feels Offended

St. Petersburg, Oct. 11.—The strained relations between the foreign office and the admiralty over the question of contraband has reached an acute stage. Foreign Minister Lamsdorff considers that he has suffered a personal affront under which he cannot rest and purposes to tender his resignation. Confidence is expressed that should the matter go thus far the emperor will decline to accept Lamsdorff's resignation.

Stoessel Cannot Hold Out Long

London, Oct. 11.—The Morning Post's Shanghai correspondent says it is stated that Lieutenant General Stoessel has reported that unless he is relieved before December he must surrender.

TWENTY-EIGHT DEATHS

Three Score People Injured In Train Collision in Missouri

Warrensburg, Mo., Oct. 11.—Twenty-eight persons were killed and 60 injured by a head-on collision of Missouri Pacific trains three miles east of Warrensburg. The trains were the second section of a passenger train from Wichita for St. Louis and an extra freight train.

The passenger train, consisting of two day coaches, a Pulman and a caboose, was loaded with World's Fair excursionists from Kansas and Missouri. The passenger train had been cut in two at Pleasant Hill on account of a heavy load and a locomotive attached to the front car without a baggage car as a buffer. The extra freight had been side-tracked at Montzerrat for the first section of the Wishita train, which carried signals that a second section was following. A local passenger train passed and the freight crew took the local for the second section of the Wichita train and pulled out of the side track. Three miles west the freight met the second section.

The impact telescoped the tender of the passenger locomotive and the front car, which was full of passengers, and it was here that the sacrifice of life took place.

The conductor of the freight train says he was dozing while his train was at Montzerrat and when the local train passed, Engineer Horton believed it was the second section of the Wichita train and, thinking the track clear, pulled out on the main line.

Eryan the Democratic Aaron

Chillicothe, Mo., Oct. 11.—William J. Bryan, having been introduced to a large crowd here as "the man who would some day be President of the United States," said that he used to think he would be president and that he was the Moses of the Democratic party. "But I don't think so now," he said. "Moses, you know, was slow of speech, and the Lord selected Aaron as his speech-maker. I believe that I am the Aaron rather than the Moses of Democracy. I am willing to be the Aaron of the party, if our Moses, who has been so slow of speech, will but lead the people out of the wilderness."

Enamored of Sister-In-Law

Shawnee, O., Oct. 11.—John Namet and his half-brother's wife, Mrs. James Tish, were found dead in a wood here. Mrs. Tish had been shot twice through the left breast and Namet had two bullet in the head. A revolver was lying at his side. It is believed that Namet, a bachelor, was enamored of his sister-in-law, and despairing of ever winning her, decided to kill her and himself. Both were about 22 years old.

Campaigning For Parker

Baltimore, Oct. 11.—Ex-Senators Henry G. Davis and David B. Hill, in speeches last night, made a severe attack on Roosevelt's campaign policy. Mr. Davis declared that 100,000 salaried office holders, including cabinet members, are working to elect Roosevelt. Mr. Hill said that making Cortelyou, after investigating the trusts, Roosevelt's campaign manager, is in the nature of blackmail.

Want Spain a Republic

San Juan, P. R., Oct. 11.—Spaniards of San Juan have organized an association to assist the republican movement in Spain. A junta will send out literature throughout the island and assist the movement with money. There is a strong royalist element here which is considering the inauguration of a counter-movement.

Carpenters May Force a Strike

Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 11.—A tie-up in the building trades is impending. The friction began with the employment of a non-union hand by one of the master builders. Three union men thereupon left their work on the same building. The Carpenters' union is expected to demand the reinstatement of the three union men.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

A Wide Field For Spreading the Christian Religion

THE DUTY OF AMERICANS

Conditions In Japan, China, Africa and the Philippines Discussed by Episcopal Bishops From Those Countries

Boston, Oct. 11.—The Archbishop of Canterbury made his last public appearance and utterance on his present visit last night at the greatest missionary meeting ever held in the history of the Episcopal church of this country. Tremont temple, the largest church building in the city, and St. Paul's church, a block away, were both crowded to overflowing and thousands were unable to gain admission to either church. No building in the city could have accommodated the people who wanted to hear and see the primate of all England and the bishops of Japan, China, the Philippines and of Cape Palmas, South Africa. The same speakers addressed both audiences.

Bishop McKim of Tokio spoke on "the eastern crisis and the church's opportunity." The bishop said Japan was occidental in her ideas, and that religious and civil liberty had been lately guaranteed under the constitution; that in her dealings with other peoples she had not deceived, wronged or oppressed them, but that while there had been advancement in intellectual and material things, there had been no advance in moral and religious things.

Of their religion, the bishop said Japan might be called a nation without a religion, and that as it was through American influence that the door was opened to western civilization, it was the duty of the American church to spread there the Christian religion, which, he contended, was the desire of the intelligent and cultured Japanese.

Bishop Ferguson of Cape Palmas, republic of Liberia, gave an interesting account of the work among the negroes.

Bishop Graves of Shanghai had for his subject "the yellow peril; our golden opportunity." The bishop declared that those living on the other side of the world knew of no such things as a "yellow peril," and after returning to this country, with its magnificent political, commercial and social organization, "the yellow peril" became a bugaboo and an absurdity. "The peril," he said, "is all the other way. The people of China are asking, 'What is Europe and the United States going to do with us? Are they going to divide us or what? Why can't the people of the United States and England protect us from those of the north?' These people are waiting for your word, whether they are to rise and become a people, or to be divided among the nations."

He said the world was about to witness the opening up of the whole continent of Asia, which he declared to be the meaning of the conflict and stir in the east. He urged the duty of the church to seize the opportunity and carry the beneficent gospel of Christ to them.

"What the American church can do in the Philippines" was the topic of an address by Bishop Brent of the Philippines. The problem, he said, was an extremely difficult and delicate one. Speaking of the work among the soldiers, he declared: "The army is an American institution and as such is to be honored by American citizens. The soldiers there are under peculiar temptations and are called upon to do the most difficult work in the task to which the nation has been called." He urged his auditors to give for the establishment of a hospital at Manila and to send teachers for the schools.

The Archbishop of Canterbury was introduced by Bishop Lawrence, who said this was the primate's last appearance at this visit. Dr. Davidson said that the question of missions was the biggest subject that can be to any people who think at all. Alluding to the Philippines and the war in the east, he said that roadways have been made in these last days and that people's hearts and minds were filled with the big issues, not of imperialism, so-called, but of the interlacing and interknowledge of the interests of the peoples of the earth. Without any thought of the religious life, said he, the Philippines came to you carrying with it an answerableness to God in religious things, and a call for making the gospel a reality.

The archbishop spoke feelingly of the great gathering, the impression of which would strengthen him for his work. Nothing in his life, he said, had given him greater pleasure than this visit to America.

The vast audience then stood and sang "Stand Up For Jesus," after which the benediction was pronounced by the primate.

Yellow Fever Was Feared

Boston, Oct. 11.—Steamer Straits of Dover, from Progresso, Mex., with sisal grass, was held at quarantine for several hours, owing to the suspicious illness of three members of the crew. It was later found that they were suffering from malaria. Two mendied on the vessel during the voyage and were buried at sea. As yellow fever is prevalent at Progresso it was at first suspected that death and illness on board the steamer were due to that disease.

REPORTED MARRIED.

George Hannon Claims Miss Whitney as His Wife.

George Hannon of Cambridge, the young man who has figured in the sensational disappearance of Minnie Whitney, from Braintree last Friday on the evening set for her marriage with Bernard Simonds, in an interview says:

"Minnie Whitney in the eyes of God is my lawful wife. I'm going to protect her from all who wish to do her harm or annoy her, even if I have to resort to violence."

He further stated that he did not desire to state now when he married her or where.

The interview took place at the home of Mrs. Fletcher at Somerville, who it is alleged, shielded the girl last week.

According to Hannon's story, he took Miss Whitney to the home of an aunt in the suburbs of Providence where she remained Sunday and Monday.

It has been learned that Hannon applied to the Cambridge City Clerk on Saturday for a marriage license, but was refused as he gave the girl's age as 17 years.

Monday afternoon Mrs. Rand received a letter from her daughter, Miss Whitney, and later accompanied by her husband and Bernard L. Simonds, the girl's affianced husband, she went to Somerville.

The letter stated that Minnie was safe and with friends. She denied some of the stories printed about her leaving Braintree, and urged her mother to give her consent to the girl's marriage to the man she loved.

Mrs. Rand denies trying to compel her daughter to marry Simons. The young woman's Braintree friends deny that she was addicted to opium as had been stated in a morning paper.

Before Mrs. Rand left for Somerville she said she would never consent to her daughter marrying George Hannon.

East Norfolk Union.

The East Norfolk Christian Endeavor Union met Monday evening at South Braintree Congregational church. The meeting was opened by the president, with a hearty praise service, followed by reading of the scriptura and prayer. The business of the evening was promptly transacted after which the president introduced Rev. Frank Lamb of Salem, who addressed the Union. Mr. Lamb also sang two solos. Each society in the Union was well represented and an unusually interesting meeting was held.

A Farmer's Idea of Roosevelt.

David Rankin has the credit of being the most extensive individual farmer in the United States. He owns fourteen farms in Missouri which contain about 22,000 acres of land in all. He personally supervises the operations on all, aided by a resident foreman. In summer he employs as many as 700 hands in the field and uses from 200 to 250 horses for the various divisions of farm work. He raises corn by thousand acre patches and in a single year has sold 8,000 hogs and 7,500 cattle of his own raising. Mr. Rankin stands six feet two without his boots on, weighs 180 pounds and began life as a poor boy. He resides at Tarkio, Mo., in the vicinity of his farm property. He writes to Leslie's Weekly:

I like Roosevelt because he is a Republican. I am a Republican farmer. We farmers are more interested in the tariff than anybody else. The manufacturers make our markets. Our only trouble under a Republican administration is to get men enough to do our work.

I like Roosevelt's "expansion" ideas. This Panama canal business is one of the biggest things this country ever undertook. It means larger opportunity for our young men. It will take some such man as Roosevelt to put it through. He has the "scat" to make it go. I like men that have "scat."

I like Roosevelt because he isn't afraid. Most men go wrong in politics because somebody has scared them. Wall street don't like Roosevelt because he doesn't scare. The labor unions, some of them, try to run things by scaring the men who ought to run them. They haven't scared Roosevelt, and they won't. I like men who don't "scare."

I like Roosevelt because he aims to do what's right. He's fair. He isn't trying to break trusts for political effect. So far as it is legal and right he will prevent their abuses. That's all anybody should ask him to do. D. RANKIN.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms.

CHAPTER XI—(Continued).

But then I affected not to hear her, under pretense of seeing that the sedan chairs were ready, and hallooed to the slaves with such zeal that Madam Cavendish's voice was drowned, though with no seeming rudeness, and Mary and Catherine came forth in their rustling spreads of blue and green, and the black bearers stood grinning whitely out of the darkness, for the moon was not up yet, and I aided them both into the chairs, and they were off. I stood a few moments watching the retreating flare of flambeaux, for runners carrying them were necessary on those rough roads when dark, and the breath of the dewy spring night fanned my face like a wing of peace, and I regretted nothing very much which had happened in this world, so that I could come between that beloved girl and the troubles starting up like poisonous weeds on her path.

But when I entered the hall Madam Cavendish, having sent away the slaves, even to the little wench who had been fanning her, with verily, I believe, no more of consciousness as to what was going on about her than a jimson weed by the highway, called me to her in a voice so tremulous that I scarce knew it for hers.

"Harry, Harry," she said, "I pray thee, come here." Then, when I approached, hesitating, for I had a shrinking before some outburst of feminine earnestness, which has always intimidated me by its fire of helplessness and futility playing against some resolve of mine which I could not, on account of my masculine understanding of the requirements of circumstances, allow to melt, she reached up one hand like a little nervous claw of ivory and caught me by the sleeve and pulled me down to a stool by her side.

Then she looked at me, and such love and even adoration were in her face as I never saw surpassed in it, even when she regarded her granddaughter Mary, yet withal a cruel distress and self upbraiding and wrath at herself and me. "Harry, Harry," she said, "I can bear no more of this." Then, to my consternation, up went her silken apron with a fling to her old face, and she was weeping under it as unrestrainedly as any child.

I did not know what to do or say. "Madam," I ventured firmly, "if you distress yourself in such wise for my sake, 'tis needless, I assure, 'tis needless, and with as much truth as were you my own mother."

"Oh, Harry, Harry," she sobbed out, "know you not that is why I cannot bear it longer, because you yourself bear it with no complaint?" Then she sobbed and even wailed with that piteousness of the grief of age exceeding that of infancy, inasmuch as the weight of all past griefs of a lifetime go to swell it and it is enchanced by memory as well as by the present and an unknown future. I knew not what to do, but laid a hand somewhat timidly on one of her thin silken arms and strove to draw it gently from her face. "Madam Cavendish," I said, "indeed you mistake if you weep for me. At this moment I would change places with no man in Virginia."

"But I would have—I would have you!" she cried out, with the ardor of a girl, and down went her apron, and her face, like an aged mask of tragedy, not discolored by her tears, as would have happened with the tender skin of a maid, confronted me. "I would have you the governor himself, Harry. I would have you—I would have"—Then she stopped and looked at me with a red showing through the yellow whiteness of her cheeks. "You know what I would have, and I know what you would have, and all the rest of my old life would I give could it be so, Harry," she said, and I saw that she knew of my love for her granddaughter Mary.

Then suddenly she cried out vehemently: "Not one word have I said to you about it since that dreadful time, Harry Wingfield, for shame and that pride as to my name, which is a fetter on the tongue, hath kept me still, but at last I will speak, for I can bear it no longer. Harry, Harry, I know that you are what you are, a convict and an exile, to shield Catherine, to shield a granddaughter of mine, who should be in your place. Harry Wingfield, I know that Catherine Cavendish is guilty of the crime for which you are in punishment, and, woe is me, such is my pride, such is my wicked pride, that I have let you suffer and said never one word."

I put her hand to my lips. "Madam," I said, "you mistake; I do not suffer. That which you think of as my suffering and my disgrace is my glory and happiness."

"Yes, and why, and why? Oh, Harry, 'tis that which is breaking my heart. 'Tis because you love Mary, 'tis because, I verily believe, you have loved her from the first minute you set eyes on her, though she was but a baby in arms. At first I thought it was Catherine, in spite of her fault, but now I know it was for the sake of Mary that you sacrificed yourself—for her sister, Harry, I know, I know, and I would that I could give you your heart's desire, for 'tis mine also!"

Then, so saying, this old woman, who had in her such a majesty of character and pride that it held folk aloof at a farther distance than loud swaggerings of importance of men high in office, drew down my head to her withered shoulder and touched my cheek with a hand of compassionate pity and blessing, as if I had been in truth her son, and caught her breath again and again with a sobbing sigh.

All that I could say to comfort her I said, assuring her, as was indeed the truth, that no woman could justly estimate the view which a man might take of such a condition as mine, and how the power of service to love might be enough to content one, and he stand in no need of pity, but she was not much consoled.

"Harry," she said, "Harry, thou art like a knight of olden times about whom a song was written which I heard sung in my girlhood and which used to bring the tears, though I was never too ready with them. Woe be to me that I, knowing what I know, have yet not the courage to sacrifice my pride and my unworthy granddaughter and see you free. Oh, Harry, that thou shouldst sit at home when thou art fitted by birth and breeding to go with the best of them! Harry, I pray thee, put on thy plum colored suit and go to the ball."

"Dear Madam Cavendish," I said, half laughing, for she seemed more and more like a child, "you know that it cannot be, and that I have no desire for balls."

"But I would have thee go, Harry."

"But I am not asked," I said.

"What matters that? 'Tis almost with open doors, since it is a farewell of my Lord Culpeper before sailing for England. Harry, go, and—a—and—I swear if any exception be taken to it, I—I will tell the truth."

"Dear madam, it cannot be," I said, "and the truth is to be concealed not only for your sake, but for that of others."

Then she broke out in another paroxysm of childish wailing that never was such a wretched state of affairs, such a wretched old woman handicapped from serving one by her love for another. "Harry, I cannot clear thee unless I convict my own granddaughter Catherine," she said piteously, "and if I spared her not, neither her nor my pride, what of Mary? Catherine hath been like a mother to the child, and she loves her better than she loves me. 'Twould kill her, Harry. And, Harry, how can I give Mary to thee, and thou under this ban? Mary Cavendish cannot wed a convict."

"That she cannot and shall not," I said. "She shall wed a much worthier man and be happy, and sure 'tis her happiness that is the question."

But Madam Cavendish stared at me with unreasoning anger, not understanding, since she was a woman, and unreasoning as a woman will be in such matters. "If you love not my granddaughter, Harry Wingfield," she cried out, "'tis not her grandmother will fling her at your head. I will let you know, sir, that she could have her pick in the colony if she so chose, and it may be that she might not choose you. Master Harry Wingfield."

NATIONAL ISSUES

Three Senators Talk to Massachusetts Republican Club

DEMOCRATS CRITICISED

Foraker Says We Need Manila Harbor and Will Never Be Without It--Thurston Declares That Roosevelt Saves Us From Foreign Interference

Boston, Oct. 12.--United States Senators Foraker of Ohio, Thurston of Nebraska and Lodge of Massachusetts, and Governor Bates were the speakers last night at the annual dinner of the Republican club of Massachusetts, held in this city. The national prominence of the guests and speakers, and the interest in the issues to be presented attracted a big audience. President Draper of the club presided.

Governor Bates devoted his attention to state issues, his speech being a retort to the address of ex-Mayor Mathews of Boston at the recent state Democratic convention, in which the governor refuted the allegations that Massachusetts, under Republican policy, was not prosperous, and gave liberally of statistics from various state bureaus tending to show an unusual increase in manufactures, wages and savings bank accounts.

Referring to the two presidential candidates, Roosevelt and Parker, Mr. Foraker said he would hazard nothing in making a prediction as to the winner. He assumed that both were equally good, morally and personally. He said that before the people make a man president they want to know his views on public questions and to that end they examine their record as to their qualifications. He said it was'nt a difficult matter to review Judge Parker's letter, as it was very short, consisting of one telegram and two acceptances. He thought Parker's declaration in regard to the gold standard a great compliment to the Republican party, but in all other respects he was in line with his own party.

In contrast he said that Roosevelt had written and spoken upon every public quesion in which the people are interested since the landing of the Mayflower. He admitted that President Roosevelt was a dangerous man—to the Democrats. Referring to the tariff, he said he had not found it necessary to make arguments in the west on the benefits of the protective tariff since the administration of Cleveland.

Senator Foraker devoted the remainder of his speech to a discussion of the Philippine question, claiming that it was not a transaction standing by itself, but that it was a part and parcel of the wise, patriotic American policy conceived and entered upon by the administration of McKinley and carried on by Roosevelt. Referring in this connection to Dewey's capture of Manila bay, he declared that the harbor "was something we needed there, which we never had before, and will never again be without." He said that the United States could not come away from the Philippines within the next generation without acting the art of the paltroon.

Senator Thurston said that the Democrats stand today as the most sincere approvers of what the Republican party stands for. "They say," said he, "that Terrible Teddy is too strenuous. So he is—strenuous for anything that makes for the welfare of the American people." He spoke at some length in praise of the president's action in recognizing the republic of Panama, which gave the United States commercial supremacy of the world; of his care of the interests of American citizens abroad, and of his course in the coal strike.

"Today," said Mr. Thurston, "the nation is safer from foreign interference with Teddy Roosevelt as president than with any man the Democrats might choose from among them." He ridiculed Parker's campaign advisers and expressed the thought that if the judge were elected his cabinet would be made up of the same class. He severely criticized Parker for pledging a future generation as to its action in regard to the Philippine islands.

Senator Lodge discussed national issues, following quite closely the former speeches.

Davis Shows Great Vigor

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 12.—Henry G. Davis has made a flying start on his whirlwind campaign through Maryland and West Virginia. Leaving Baltimore yesterday morning on a special train, he made an even dozen speeches, arranged the details of every meeting, introduced his corps of campaigners to the audience in all the West Virginia towns visited, struck out vigorously on state issues, did the greater part of the talking and last night was the freshest from fatigue of any of the party. With Mr. Davis are Senator Daniel, David B. Hill, and ex-Governor Whyte of Maryland, besides a retinue of local candidates, representatives of the national and state committees, who join and leave the train as it moves through their territory.

QUITE A CHANGE.

Only 302 School Children in 1793.

And Now Upwards of 6,000.

Interesting Figures from an Old School Census.

Editors of the Ledger:

In a late issue you published the enumeration of children just completed by Mr. Johnson, and make comparison with other years; going back to 1897. I will offer for comparison an enumeration of a somewhat earlier date.

I have before me a census of children in what was then known as the "Penns Hill District," made in 1793, one year after the incorporation of the town, by my grandfather, Mr. Wilson Marsh. It is headed "Number of children betwixt Penns Hill & Mr. Wm. Vezeys, from said Vezeys to Mr. Trasks, from Mr. Trasks to Mr. Baxters shop." Mr. Vezey occupied the large house still standing at the head of Granite street, now owned by Mr. Faxon. The Trask house still stands at the junction of School and Granite streets, though much enlarged; it is known as the Nightingale place. Mr. Baxter's shop was near the junction of Franklin and School streets.

The following list will show the name and location of families in which there were school children at that time, though unfortunately there is no indication of the age at which they were taken.

Commencing at Penns Hill and following the old Plymouth road we find:

Mr. Henry Hardwick,	1
Mr. Joseph Field,	3
Mr. John Brizler,	2
Mr. James Faxon,	5
Mr. John Turner,	3
Mr. Nath'l Hayden,	4
Mr. Daniel Hollis,	4
Mr. Fred'k Hardwick, Jr.,	1
Richard Cranch, Esq.,	1
Mr. Henry Gay,	1
Lt. John Newcomb,	2
Dea. Jona. Webb,	5
Mr. Jona. Marsh,	6
From Wm. Veazies to Mr. Trasks:
Mr. Joseph Bass, 2nd,	2
Dea. Benj. Bass,	1
Lt. Elijah Vezey,	7
Widow Hayward,	1
Mr. Chas. Newcomb,	2
Mr. Enock Hayden,	1
Mr. Caleb Hayden,	5
Mr. Trask,	1
From Mr. Trasks to Mr. Baxters shop:
Mr. Nath'l Hayden, 2nd,	2
Wilson Marsh, Jr.,	3
Mr. Wm. Saunders,	2
Capt. Jos. Brackett,	1
Lt. Thos. Pratt,	5
Total,	71

To this is added:

Mr. Nightingale, Woods District,	33
Lt. Baxter, Old Fields District,	56
Lt. Spear, Houghs Neck & Germantown District,	37
Mr. Carey, Farms & Squantum District,	58
Esq. Adams, North District,	47
Grand total,	302

The Woods District included all inhabited territory west of Mr. Trasks.

The Old Fields District was Quincy Point.

The Farms & Squantum District was the north part of the town; and the North District, that portion toward East Milton.

The names affixed to each district are the names of gentlemen appointed by the town to take the census therein.

FROM INDIA.

Address of Delegate to Peace Conferenee

Before the Wollaston Unitarian Club.

Col. Anderson and Others Alsc Speak.

The first dinner opening the fifth year of the Wollaston Unitarian club was held at the church Tuesday evening. There was a good attendance but the absence of the pastor, Rev. F. W. Pratt, who is seriously ill, was greatly regretted.

A roast beef dinner was served at 6.30, and an hour later the President Eugene H. Sprague extended a welcome.

He said that he was glad to see so many present at this the first meeting of the fifth year, and that it was the wish of their pastor that this meeting should consider the question of peace. He introduced as the first speaker Baba Premanand Bharati of Brindaban, India, one of the delegates to the International Peace convention in Boston.

The visitor proved an interesting speaker and held the closest attention of his hearers for an hour and three quarters. He spoke very fluently and had a good command of the English language. That he was thoroughly in earnest and sincere no one could deny, although his talk was more on religion from an eastern standpoint. In his opening remark, he said he had come to talk of peace as peace was in the air.

Peace he said was the reflection of the Lord's spirit. He would seek a source of inspiration as they do in India. We never write a letter, without subscribing on top the words "God is good." Peace is the word with which every chapter of the Bible begins and every chapter ends with peace, peace, peace.

He had the good fortune to be a member of the International Peace Congress. He was proud of it, because they had come from the different parts of the world to bring about peace in the world. We in India find that Christ Jesus in the first person of divinity. These truths are eternal truths. The expression of the inner laws of nature.

The peace congress came to settle disputes of nations and bring about harmony. He would have been only too glad if there was some element of religion in it. Aside from a few hymns sung there was no demonstrations that made people think of God. We have a habit of looking at these things from a practical standpoint. We only want to establish peace by working the spiritual plain out of the mental plain.

In my native country when they want to bring about peace they take some songs to God. All the quarrelling parties are drawn to it. If you ask the Hindo how peace can be established among all nations he will say, God alone can bring it about. Talk of God with all your soul. The Hindo is nothing if not practical in the matter of religion. The speaker then presented the conception of the Hindo of God and dwelt at length upon the object in life which all were seeking.

This he said was pleasure and happiness but we were never satisfied. The fact that we are not satisfied with things is proof that we do not need them.

The speaker closed his talk with a hymn chanted in his native language.

Philip Phillips, a friend who had accompanied the last speaker, spoke briefly. He said God had manifested himself in various ways but his word had always been the same. True religion was nothing but the love of God and love to all men.

Col. Edward Anderson was the last speaker. He said it was almost impossible to take up the subject after what we have heard. For nearly ten years he was in the saddle and in conflicts of blood. He had asked himself why God allowed it. Why does he let it be so unless he cares very little for these bodies as the spirit never dies?

Every advance in civilization seems to come from war. The uniting of these United States would never have come but for war. It has been the binding together of the whole country. Peace has had victories greater than war.

At the close of the speaking the club by vote extended its sympathy to their pastor and his wife and their thanks to the speakers.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

It is pleasing to see a small business increase year by year as has the D. E. Wadsworth & Co. Over a dozen years ago this firm began business in our city in a small store in the Adams building which they soon outgrew moving into the Greenleaf block. Here they have done an ever increasing business; the last few years being much cramped for room. Now they have annexed the store recently vacated by the drug store and on Saturday have a grand opening. May they continue to prosper.

The address of the chairman at the recent Democratic State convention furnished Gov. Bates with an excellent text at the Republican Club banquet last evening and he showed conclusively that all claims of decadence of Massachusetts have no foundation in fact. On the contrary there were gains all along the line in whatever direction one turns.

The State Board of Arbitration report but 800 men outside of Fall River, who are out of employment because of strikes and lockouts, while 400,000 are at work in Massachusetts at good wages. The number employed in 1897 was 314,000. The state of affairs in Fall River was deplored, but the good offices of the State had been declined.

Figures of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor report an increase in average yearly earnings, 1903 over 1897, of $45 per man.

While seven industries have moved away, six have moved into the state, and 92 new industries have been organized, a net gain of 91. Those to move away did not go South as some would have us believe, but to other New England states, where it is claimed there is adversity.

When 1903 is compared with 1897, more capital is now invested, the output of manufactured goods increased, the deposits in the savings bank larger, more passengers are carried on steam railroads and street railways, and we have prosperity and comforts.

Senators Foraker of Ohio, Thurston of Nebraska and Lodge of Massachusetts were equally confident of progress in the United States, and their discussion of the Philippine question, the tariff, the building of the isthmus canal and the candidates for President, were masterly and convincing.

The great enthusiasm shown for the speakers and at the mention of the names of Gov. Bates, Senator Lodge, ex-Secretary Long, Secretary Moody and President Roosevelt, showed that all have a warm place in the hearts of the people of Massachusetts, and that the Republicans are aroused over the issues and the election.

Drift of Opinion.

☞Theoretically, civilized nations ought not to go to war, but the only apparent force of any potency for its prevention seems to be through readiness for it. Unless the United States is to retire within itself it will have an enormous foreign trade and it must be prepared to defend it. This trade will be especially important with the countries bordering the Pacific. Whether Jap or Slav wins in the present conflict, the day of mighty events is dawning in the Orient, from which our country cannot stand aloof and for which it must be ready with an army and a militia prepared even to the smallest detail, and every part should learn its functions from the comparatively inexpensive and bloodless maneuver, rather than in the awful carnage of a mismanaged first campaign.—Major Cassius E. Gillette in Sunset Magazine for October.

—Ireland is making a bold bid for a leading position in the British fruit markets. Orchard cultivation is being encouraged by the authorities and arrangments are being actively prosecuted for the drying and packing of fruit, in American fashion, for exportation. Fall River Operatives Will Not Accept a Wage Reduction

SETTLEMENT IS FAR OFF

Seaconnet and Bourne Mills, Which Had Intended to Start, Change Their Attitude to Preserve Good Will of All

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 12.—As if to make as emphatic as possible their determination to hold out against the cotton mill owners, the Textile council at the close of their meeting yesterday announced that the hostilities would cease when the mill owners receded from their proposed intention of cutting the wages of the operatives. Then, and not until then, it was decided at the meeting, would the 26,000 strikers return to work.

Because of the frequent rumors which have been current during the past few days of a possible end of the strike, yesterday afternoon's meeting of the Textile council was looked upon as one of great importance. These rumors, together with what was believed to be an authoritative announcement that an effort would be made to open several of the mills this week, was regarded as the forerunner of the end of the strike.

The development of the day proved otherwise, however, for, with the decision of the Textile council to adhere to its previous stand, came the positive announcement that the officials of the Seaconnet mills would not attempt to resume operations and the probability that a similar course would be followed by the Bourne mill officials. Therefore the possibility of an end of the strike seems to be as far off as it was weeks ago.

In this connection, a statement by Secretary Taylor of the Textile council would appear to be very significant. Mr. Taylor was asked for his opinion as to whether or not a speedy settlement would be brought about and he replied that in his opinion the strike would be a long one and could be settled only by the removal of the reduction notice by the manufacturers.

The reasons assigned by the directors of the Seaconnet mills for their action are that the starting of a single mill might bring upon that corporation the ill-will of the signers to the wage agreement as well as the anger of thousands of operatives who are idle and who would in all probability congregate in riotous crowds near the mill doors. The directors think that, until all the mills decide, it is not necessary for the Seaconnet mills to start, and they so notified the agent at the meeting. The latter still believes he could run without trouble, but for the present the mills will lie idle.

It is commonly reported that the changed attitude of the Seaconnet and Bourne mills will delay the probable starting of the mills for a couple of weeks, and now the date of starting is being set forward another week, to Oct. 24. Some treasurers still insist that there will be no start until November. But the executive committee says there will be no start until the operatives are ready to return, and up to this time they have been able to carry out their wishes, as yesterday's action indicates.

Bulgarians Slaying Greeks

Athens, Oct. 12.—Hardly a day passes without assassinations of Greeks by Bulgarians being reported from Macedonia. An orthodox priest was murdered at Brot while he was celebrating mass and his wife was burnt alive in her house. A Greek notable was assassinated in the church. The object of these crimes is to terrorize Greeks into declaring themselves to be members of the Bulgarian committees, thereby seeking to make the Bulgarian element appear predominant.

Disturbers Commit Murder

Bristol, Va., Oct. 12.—W. S. Burton was shot to death near his home last night and Henry Cole, who was with Burton, escaped with his life after being shot at five times. The shooting was done by one of four members of a family of Watsons, to whose home Burton and Cole had gone to protest against disorderly conduct on the part of the Watsons. The Watsons have disappeared.

Ghastly Crime of "Sorcerer"

Kingstown, St. Vincent, Oct. 12.—The finding of the heart and hands of a white child in the possession of a negro corcerer in the Island of St. Lucia led to the discovery that the child had been murdered and the body mutilated in order that superstitious natives might, through possession of portions of the body, be able to work spells.

Boston Woman Beat Britisher

Philadelphia, Oct. 12.—Miss Charlotte Dod, the English premier golfing expert, met with defeat at the hands of Miss Pauline Mackay, of the Oakley Country club of Boston, on the first day's play of the women's national golf championship. By the defeat Miss Dod is out of the championship.

Trains In Collision

Philadelphia, Oct. 12.—An express train ran into a freight train in the Bordentown railroad yards last night and 15 persons were injured, three of them seriously. The freight train was crossing the main line tracks when the passenger train dashed into it.

DIN SCARED HORSES

Runaway Accident In Which Many Persons Are Injured

Providence, Oct. 12.—Walter W. Rich and John McKenna received very serious injuries, the former perhaps fatal, and five other persons were so badly hurt as to require medical attention as the result of a runaway accident here last night. Two horses started on their mad rush down Westminster street, frightened by the explosion of bombs during a political celebration. The carriage had as occupants the speakers of the rally. The doors of the carriage and landau swung open, and during the passage through the crowd knocked those nearby down like so many ninepins. The carriage was brought to a stop an eighth of a mile down the street, having narrowly escaped collision with an electric car. The brainy driving of the driver, Edward F. Magee, who rescued the reins which had dropped from his grasp, probably prevented a worse accident. Those in the carriage were George S. Littlefield and Dr. J. B. Budlong, Republican party leaders.

Rich's injuries were about the side and back and his condition is critical. McKenna was hurt about the head. Many persons were also knocked down and suffered contusions, cuts and bruises.

End of "Conspiracy" Case

New Haven, Oct. 12.—Their last plea exhausted, eight of the nine union teamsters who were convicted in the superior court last spring on the charge of conspiracy in bringing about a teamsters' strike here, presented themselves before Judge Shumway and received a sentence of three months each in the county jail. Orrin J. Stockford, the ninth man, was defaulted. The state attorney consented to allow the men work throughout the summer so that they could provide for their families, and by agreement the cases were called yesterday.

Perhaps an Important Capture

Boston, Oct. 12.—On suspicion of complicity with the numerous daring safe blowings in this city and the surrounding towns, and believed by the police to be connected with the gang of yeggmen who have been perpetrating the burglaries, a big six-footer was arrested at 1 o'clock this morning by Detectives Burr, Kelly and Wise of headquarters after two weeks of detective work. Owing to the delicate nature of the case the man's name was not given out and the man was only locked up on the technical charge of being a suspicious person.

As to Marriage of Divorcees

Boston, Oct. 12.—A proposed change in the canons of the Episcopal church, whereby clergymen are forbidden to remarry any person who has been divorced, was discussed for two hours by the Episcopal house of deputies. Consideration of the subject, regarded as one of the most important to come before the present convention, will be taken up from time to time until the matter is finally disposed of. The present canon on marriage permits the remarriage of the innocent persons in a divorce suit wherein infidelity is alleged.

Ferryboat Punctured by Tug

Boston, Oct. 12.—The East Boston ferryboat D. D. Kelly and the harbor tug Nellie were in collision last evening, the latter proughing her nose through the ferryboat's port side, making a hole 10 feet long by five feet in height. The Nellie was practically uninjured. No one was injured. There were about 25 passengers on the Kelly at the time of the collision, and while there was considerable excitement for a time, there was no panic.

Great Logging Season

Bangor, Me., Oct. 12.—There has been rafted at Bangor boom 61,000,000 feet of logs, which is the largest quantity ever known at this date. Contractor Connors says that all previous records will be broken this year, as there are 20,000,000 feet more to come from the up-river booms and be rafted out at Bangor, making a total for the year of 81,000,000 feet, or 9,000,000 in excess of the best previous record.

Mrs Ostrout Is Acquitted

Newport, Vt., Oct. 12.—The jury in the case of Mrs. Rose Ostrout, charged with the murder of Amelia Hoyt, rendered a verdict of not guilty. Mrs. Hoyt was a pauper, and by arrangement with the authorities of the town of Westfield lived with Mrs. Ostrout in that town. Mrs. Ostrout was accused of having caused her death by depriving her of food, exposing her to inclement weather and striking her.

Launching of the Georgia

Bath, Me., Oct. 12.—The largest vessel ever built in Maine, the twin-screw, first-class battleship Georgia, was launched from the plant of the Bath Iron works at 1:53 p.m. yesterday. As she started down the ways she was christened with champagne by Miss Stella Tate, a descendant of the famous Byrd family of Georgia. The launching was attended by excursionists from all sections of Maine.

New Magazines.

The leading article in the Sunset Magazine for October deals with "California's Army Camp" at Atascadero, but this western magazine of rapid growth is, as usual, full of other good features. Notable among them are a story, "The Hour of His Release," by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins, and articles relating to western subjects. This number of Sunset is profusely and handsomely illustrated, and the department features are good.

GARBLED QUOTATIONS.

How Parker Misused McKinley's Last Speech.

From Parker's letter of acceptance: "He pointed out in his last address to the people that we must make sensible trade arrangements if 'we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus.'"

What McKinley said: "By sensible trade arrangements which shall not interrupt our home production we shall extent the outlets for our increasing surplus."

Judge Parker quotes McKinley further as follows: "A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued healthful growth of our export trade." But he stops there without including the following last sentence of the paragraph: "We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor."

Who says the "most noble judge" could purposely misrepresent?

"POLITICAL OLIGARCHY."

Some Facts About Voters' Rights In Virginia.

Something like a hundred years ago Thomas Jefferson protested against the new constitution of Virginia because it gave more power to 19,000 voters in the plantation region of the east than to 30,000 in the nonslave-holding western part of the state. Hence, he claimed, the state would be really ruled by an oligarchy. Let us see whether this is true now. In the Third district, one of the old slave-holding districts, are included the cities of Richmond and Manchester, and one in twenty-eight of the population votes. In the Fourth district, another of those with a large ex-slave population, a total vote of 6,341 was cast in a population of 166,321—one in twenty-six—the winning candidate receiving 5,717 votes, or about five-sixths of the whole. In the Ninth district, including some of the western counties, about whose rights Jefferson was solicitous, a total vote of 27,170 was cast in a population of 227,381—about one vote in seven. The Republican candidate received 13,694 votes, and his opponent 13,476, more than twice as many votes as were required to elect a Democrat in the Fourth district, while the total vote is four times as great as that in the Fourth distrct and the population only about 60,000 greater. Sixty thousand more people and four times as many votes required to elect a representative! And Jefferson called it political oligarchy when 19,000 voters had more power than 30,000. And Judge Parker does not desire that justice shall "wait on political oligarchy!"

What It Costs
... AND ...
What It Pays

are two values of newspaper advertising that the merchant has to consider. But the most important thing is

WHAT IT PAYS.

The merchant can get space in papers of small circulation and little influence for a little less money than the same size space would cost in the DAILY LEDGER and the QUINCY PATRIOT.

DOES IT PAY

to throw away the certainty of the profitable returns which are sure to LEDGER and PATRIOT advertisers, because it costs less to advertise in a cheaper paper?

BLOODY FIGHTING

Opposing Forces In Manchuria Are Again In Collision

RUSSIANS BEGUN ATTACK

Repulsed by Japanese, but Resumed Advance--Terrific Artillery Engagement In Progress Along Entire Front

Mukden, Oct. 12.—A bloody battle is now raging about six miles north of Yentai railroad station. The Japanese on Sunday fell back along the whole front and the Russian advance guards crossed the Schili river, about half way between Mukden and Liaoyang, and came within three miles of Yentai, but on Monday the Japanese received strong reinforcements of infantry and artillery and not only held their positions, but even assumed the offensive.

The fighting lasted the entire day and night. The Japanese directed their artillery fire with great skill and searched the Russian positions so fiercely that the Russians fell back north of the Schili river, which crosses the railroad seven miles from Yentai.

The Russians yesterday resumed their advance, once more crossed the Schili river and engaged the Japanese two miles south of it.

A terrible artillery engagement is proceeding along the entire front. The result of the battle is still undecided.

London, Oct. 12.—The British government is closely watching to discern the cause and effect of General Kuropatkin's forward movement. Baron Hayashi, the Japanese minister here, conveyed such information as he possessed to Foreign Minister Lansdowne. Baron Hayashi says that Oyama, adopting the most cautious method, has been fortifying, step by step, and never advancing unless he was able to ensure the absolute safety of his constantly lengthening lines of communication. He must have had enormous difficulty in bringing up sufficient supplies and ammunition for his large army which were depleted greatly after the battle of Liaoyang.

"About a week from now," said the baron, "there should be a decisive engagement and it is likely to occur at Liaoyang or on the Taitse river. Skirmishes will take place meanwhile, but unless I am very much mistaken the Japanese will not make a determined stand until Kuropatkin reaches the scene of his recent defeat. Our lines of communication and our supplies and ammunition could scarcely have reached perfection to any point north of Liaoyang.

"It does not matter much whether Kuropatkin has assumed the offensive upon orders from St. Petersburg or by his own desire; he has taken a tremendous risk and it is not for me to say whether he was justified or not. It is all very well for critics to say that the Russian commander leaves his communications open to attack, but only a very large force can adequately disturb such lines as Kuropatkin possesses.

"I hear on good authority 'that he has got men standing almost shoulder to shoulder along the railway.' I would not be surprised if Kuropatkin, instead of continuing a frontal advance, should launch the whole of his army against General Kuroki's flanking forces. It would be a bold stroke and precipitate a great struggle, but the Russians are not accustomed to mountain fighting, and would be handicapped even though superior in numbers.

"Whatever happens—whether Kuropatkin is allowed to march comparatively unopposed to the Taitse river, where Oyama has been fortifying, or whether he diverts his army in an endeavor to crush Kuroki—the result of the present phase of the Manchurian campaign means much, and perhaps is almost as vital to one side as to the other."

Hopes of mediation are dwindling. About six weeks ago diplomatic circles here were stirred by the report that the original anti-war party in Russia was in the ascendency. Since then active, though quite unofficial, exchanges of opinion as to the possibility of ending the war have been progressing between various embassies at the British capital. This ephemeral step towards peace has now come to a natural death as, rightly or wrongly, confidential advices from St. Petersburg to diplomatic sources here say that those who originally advocated war with Japan are again taking the leading part in the czar's councils.

War Foreseen by Li Hung Chang

London, Oct. 12.—The Times publishes the summary of a letter alleged to have been written by Li Hung Chang shortly before his death, predicting that little harm would come from allowing the Russians to hold Manchuria, because it would lead to war between Russia and Japan, and then China, by espousing the winning side, would be able to recover Manchuria.

Kuropatkin Acting Under Pressure

London, Oct. 12.—The English papers are still discussing what they regard as General Kuropatkin's inexplicable change of plan of campaign and with the increasing conviction, that now is shared by most of the European critics, that it is due to pressure from St. Petersburg.

NINETEEN LIVES LOST

Wreck of New Packet Steamer Off Prince Edward Island

Halifax, Oct. 12.—News reached here of the werck of the little steamer Call off New London, P. E. I., during a gale, with the loss, it is believed, of all on board, some 19 souls, of which 14 were passengers, all men. The Call was a new vessel and had been engaged during the last six months in plying between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island ports on a regular packet service.

The storm raged with great severity in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, blowing directly on the northern shore of Prince Edward Island. The harbor of New London is a difficult one to enter. It is believed that the steamer was caught in the gulf by the storm, and was either thrown on the ledges at the entrance of the harbor or foundered a short distance off the shore.

The Call was owned principally in Chatham, N. B., and was built within a year. She was about 300 tons burden.

Suggestion Seems Reasonable

St. Louis, Oct. 12.—The feature of the session of the international congress of military surgeons was an address by Major Ames of Wakefield, Mass., who advocated a national school for the instruction of surgeons for service in war times. He declared that the practicing physician taken suddenly from civil life and placed in the responsible position of surgeon with troops in the field lacks the knowledge of the special requirements of military service and the sanitary and kindred needs of the soldiers.

Driscoll was unanimously nominated for a sixth term as secretary and treasurer of the state branch, A. F. of L.

Will Lessen Railroad Accidents

The roads will be compelled to introduce the block system. Hand and light signals will be made uniform and no train hand shall work more than a specified number of hours each day, whether he wants to or not.

Sleepy Train Crew Caused Disaster

Warrensburg, Mo., Oct. 12.—The crew of the freight train which collided with a passenger train Monday, resulting in the death of 29 persons, is held responsible for the disaster by the coroner's jury, which returned a verdict last night. The verdict charges the crew with disobeying orders and with being asleep at their post of duty. No recommendation was made as to the prosecution of the train crew.

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 12.—Tom Axworthy, a prohibitive favorite, captured the $3000 McDowell stake for 4-year-old trotters in the first heat of the three-heat race and by distancing the other two horses, took first, second and third money. It was a feat never before accomplished in a stake race on the Lexington track.

Strike Cost City $16,000,000

Marseilles, Oct. 12.—The strikes of dock laborers have been officially closed by the decision of the Dockers' union to resume work, though a few coal heavers are still standing out. It is estimated that the 40 days of idleness consequent upon this strike cost the city $16,000,000.

BOTTLED SUNSHINE

Scott's Emulsion brings sunshine to the entire system of the consumptive.

All life is sunshine. The sun pouring its rays into the plant combines earth, water and air into new plant tissue. Sunshine stored up in the plant is its life.

The animal changes plant tissue into animal tissue, changes the stored up sunshine of plant life into animal life.

Fat contains more stored up sunshine than any other form of animal tissue. This is why Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil is literally bottled sunshine, full of rich nourishment and new life for the consumptive.

We'll send you a sample free upon request.

GUNBOAT STRUCK A MINE

But Four Survivors of Japanese Crew of Three Hundred

Tokio, Oct. 12.—The loss of the armored gunboat Hai Yen is announced and permission was granted by the authorities to publish the details of the disaster.

The Hei Yen struck a mine off Pigeon bay in the night of Sept. 18 and foundered. Nearly 300 persons, her entire complement, were drowned. Two petty officers and two sailors managed to reach Chiaopai island, from which they were rescued.

The Hei Yen, which was engaged on guard duty off Pigeon bay, was missed by the fleet and a search for the vessel was immediately begun. The petty officers and sailors found on Chiapopai island reported that at dusk on Sept. 18 a storm came up, accompanied by high seas. The Hei Yen endeavored to return to her base, when she suddenly struck a floating mine which exploded under her starboard side amidships. The vessel began to sink and an attempt was made to lower the boats. The boats were swamped and the crew jumped into the sea, where, owing to the heavy combers, they were quickly drowned. The Japanese fleet carefully searched the patrolled locality, but failed to find any other survivors.

Labor Men Slugged Detectives

Chicago, Oct. 12.—When released on bail, after having been arrested, charged with being implicated in a shooting affray which caused a panic in the corridors of the Merchants building, James J. Keppler, Joseph Alvin and James Papineau, union labor leaders, assaulted with clubs the detectives who arrested them, severely injuring one of them. After a hard fight the three union men were rearrested and again lodged in jail. A heated discussion over labor matters brought about the shooting.

Evidence Against Weinseimer

New York, Oct. 12.—At the trial of Philip Weinseimer, former president of the Building Trades alliance, charged with the extortion of $2700 from George Essig, a contractor, George F. Johnson, of the firm of Johnson, Kahn & Co., contractors, who erected the Chatsworth hotel, told of an alleged attempt by Weinseimer to obtain $2500 from him on the Chatsworth contracts, of his refusal to pay the amount, and the subsequent strike on the plumbing contract.

Explosion Didn't Come Off

Coshocton, O., Oct. 12.—The friendly warning of a prisoner last night frustrated a well planned attempt to blow up the county jail here. A note found in the floor of the jail was to the effect that dynamite fuses would be found in the bathroom and that the jail was to be blown up at 8 o'clock. An investigation by Sheriff Browning disclosed seven dynamite fuses ready for explosion hidden in the lavatory. The prisoners were put in irons.

Kaiser Flirting With Vatican

London, Oct. 12.—The Times Rome correspondent says: Emperor William is attempting to execute a master stroke of policy by bringing into the orbit of the dreibund the Vatican, hitherto its most persistent foe, thus bringing within measurable distance the realization of the emperor's lifelong dream of a revival of the holy Roman empire in fact, if not in name, under Hohenzollern leadership.

Coolies In Sorry Plight

Singapore, Oct. 12.—Marooned on a small island in the China sea, with provisions for only 10 days, are 2200 coolies and four Europeans. The steamship Swanley has arrived here badly damaged by grounding on Seraya island. She was obliged to land all her passengers, who were bound from Hong Kong to South Africa, on Saraya island. The vessel was just able to make Singapore.

Investigating Mysterious Deaths

New York, Oct. 12.—The federal government has taken a hand in the investigation of the alleged poisoned whiskey case to which many recent reaths have been attributed. Following the arrest of a saloon keeper by the local police and visits to all the saloons in the vicinity for the purpose of securing samples of the liquor sold there, several revenue officers have begun an investigation.

Payne's Estate Valued at $750,000

Milwaukee, Oct. 12.—The will of the late Postmaster General Payne has been filed for probate. The estate, estimated at $750,000, is left in trust to Frank G. Bigelow and George D. Miller as executors. In addition to household goods, horses, carriages, etc., an annuity of $7500 is provided for the widow of the testator during the settlement of the estate.

Victim of Serious Assault

Salt Lake City, Oct. 12.—Mary Burton, 16 years old, was assaulted by an unknown man who threw his arm around her neck from behind and cut a gash four inches long in her throat. The assault occurred in the busiest part of the business district. The police incline to the belief that the man was insane.

NOTES ABOUT TOWN.

George F. Faircloth has returned to New York.

The board of registrars of voters will meet tonight.

Quincy is certainly well represented in the Globe contest.

D. Vinton Pierce of West Ossipee, N. H., is in town on a visit.

The Merrymounts will not put a foot ball eleven in the field this year.

The past few days have been trying ones on account of the slippery rail.

Richard Raycroft's house on Chubbuck street looks fine in its new coat of paint.

Chief Engineer Williams has so far recovered from his illness that he is able to be out driving.

Prizes were awarded Miss Ida V. Chisholm of Quincy for embroidery at the Taunton and Brockton fairs.

The Republican City Committee will meet tomorrow evening to arrange for the caucuses for the City election.

Classes of dancing have been opened in Music Hall, Atlantic, under the direction of Miss Crane of Ashmont.

Persons who have no claim to the title of artist can appreciate the beauty of the maple trees at this season of the year.

Miss Helen Coombs of Boston has been in Atlantic this week visiting her grandparents, Captain and Mrs. Coombs of Billings street.

The annual lectures by Leon H. Vincent under the auspices of the Quincy Tennis Club will be given Oct. 22 and 29 and Nov. 5,

Prof. Charles Franklin, the hypnotist, will entertain at Hancock hall tonight and tomorrow night. Some wonderful exhibitions are expected.

Quincy ladies attended the annual conference of women's auxiliaries to the Y. M. C. A. at Cambridge on Tuesday, 300 delegates being present.

At the Republican Club banquet in Boston Tuesday evening were noticed Representative Freeman, H. Walter Gray, George W. Abele, and others.

Dennis O'Neil of Atlantic is once more seen about his duties. Mr. O'Neil has been ill for some time, and the care of the streets has been under the supervision of Mr. Barry, who has carried on the work excellently. With two such men to oversee the thoroughfares, Atlantic ought to rival the perfection of a park.

Cool Today.

The noon temperature today was 47 the lowest thus far this season, and the lowest noon temperature since April 28. Not until Oct. 25 last year did Quincy have a day as cool. The low water mark for October noon temperature since 1895 is 41.

LATER THIS YEAR.

Nov. 15 the Date for City Caucuses.

Papers Must Be Filed Nov. 3.

The New Joint Caucus Act in Operation.

The caucuses preceding the City election will not be held as early this year as in recent years, as the joint caucus act provides that they shall be held the THIRD TUESDAY preceding city elections. This will make the date in Quincy Nov. 15.

It will be remembered that last year the Republican caucuses were held the next day after the State election.

A more extended notice must also be given of the date when caucuses will be held. Section 3 requiring that notices shall be issued not less than 21 days prior or on Oct. 24 this year.

The time therefore is near at hand for the preparation of papers placing candidates in nomination.

Section 107 of the law requires that the City Clerk shall provide blank nomination papers, which may be obtained of the chairman or secretary of the city committees—both Republican, Democratic and Socialist.

Sections 108 to 114 of the Revised Laws apply to the nomination of candidates for the caucus, and the first three sections which are most important, are given in full below:

Sect. 108. Nominations of candidates for elective offices, for delegates to a convention, for caucus officers, and for a ward or town committee to be voted for at a caucus, shall be made by nomination papers, as hereinafter provided. Such nominations shall be made on the blank nomination papers prepared and delivered in accordance with the preceding section; and no nomination paper offered for filing shall be received or shall be valid to which is attached any card, paper, or other device containing the name of a candidate, his written acceptance, or the signature of any voter required by this section.

Such papers shall be signed in person by AT LEAST FIVE VOTERS of the ward or town in which the caucus is to be held, who shall be members of the political party holding the caucus, and who shall add to their signatures the street and number, if any, of their residences.

Such papers for a district composed of more than one ward or town shall be signed by a number of voters equal in the aggregate to not less than five voters FOR EACH WARD or town in said district.

Nomination papers shall not contain a larger number of names of candidates than there are persons to be elected.

No nomination paper shall be valid in respect to any candidate whose written acceptance is not thereon.

No vacancy caused by the death, withdrawal, or ineligibility of any of the above candidates shall be filled in the manner provided by law, unless the person entitled to fill such vacancy files the written acceptance of the candidate who is nominated to fill the vacancy.

Sect. 109. The nomination paper for an elective office shall give the name of the candidate, the street and number, if any, of his residence, and may in not more than eight words, state his occupation, the public offices he has held, his qualifications for the office to be filled, or his position on any public measure.

The nomination paper of a candidate for a caucus office or for a ward or town committee shall state the street and number, if any, of his residence.

There may be added to the name of a person proposed as a delegate to a convention, a statement of not more than eight words that he is favorable to or is pledged to support, or to oppose, any person for an office to be filled, or is favorable or opposed to, any public measure, or is uncommitted.

If, under the provisions of this section, any delegate or set of delegates is described on a nomination paper as favorable to, or pledged to support, any person for an office to be filled, such person may, within two week days of the announcement thereof, file with the secretary of the city or town committee a written request to have said statement stricken from the nomination paper, and the secretary shall do the same forthwith, and said nomination paper shall thereupon be void and of no effect.

Sect. 110. All nomination papers shall be sealed up and filed in the office of the secretary of the city or town committee NOT LESS THAN TEN WEEK DAYS previous to the day on which the caucus is to be held for which the nominations are made, and the secretary shall endorse upon them the time at which they are received by him.

They shall not be opened until the time for their filing has expired, when the secretary, at his office, shall publicly open them and publicly announce the nominations therein made.

VICTORY AT START.

Quincy High Shuts Out the Weymouth High Team.

The Quincy High foot ball team played its first game of the season Tuesday. Its opponents were the Weymouth High and the visitors were vanquished to the tune of 10 to 0. Touchdowns were made by Jordan and Connors.

Quincy played an almost entire different team the second half for the purpose of trying out its men. Quincy played well but showed a lack of practice. The feature of the game was the good playing of Campbell at the end, Duncan at full back, and Jefferson at half back.

After wishing the couple many happy returns of the day the guests took their departure.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms.

CHAPTER XI—(Continued).

I laughed. "Madam Cavendish," I said, rising and bowing, "were I a king instead of a convict, then would I lay my crown at Mary Cavendish's feet; as it is, I can but pave, if I may, her way to happiness with my heart."

"Then you love her as I thought, Harry?"

"Madam," I said, "I love her to my honor and glory and never to my discontent, and I pray you to believe with a love that makes no account of selfish end, and that I am happier at home with my books than many a cavalier who shall dance with her at the ball."

"But, Harry," she said piteously, "I pray thee to go."

I laughed and shook my head and went away to my own quarters and sat down to my books, but at something past midnight Madam Cavendish sent for me in all haste. I went up to her and, laying a gentle hand upon her head, laid it back upon the pillow and touched her poor forehead, wrinkled with the cares and troubles of so many years, and felt all the pity in me uppermost. "'Tis near midnight and you have not slept, madam," I said. "I pray you not to fret any longer about that which we can none of us mend and which is but to be borne as the will of the Lord."

"Nay, nay, Harry," she cried out, with a pitiful strength of anger. "I doubt if it be the will of the Lord. I doubt if it be not the devil—Catherine, Catherine! Tarry, my brain reels when I think that she should have done it—a paltry ring, and to let you"—

"It may be that she had not her wits," I said. "Such things have been, I have heard, and especially in the case of a woman with jewels. It may be that she knew not what she did, and in any case I pray you to think no more of it, dear madam." And all the time I spoke I was smoothing her old forehead under the flapping frills of her cap.

One black woman was there in the room sitting in the shadow of the bed curtains fast asleep and making a strange purring noise like a cat as she slept.

Suddenly Madam Cavendish clutched hard at my hand. "Harry," she said, "I sent for you because I have lain here fretting lest Mary and Catherine get not home in safety with only the black people to guard them. I fear lest the Indians may be lurking about."

"Dear Madam Cavendish," I said, "you know that we stand in no more danger from the Indians."

"Nay," she persisted, "we can never tell what plans may be brewing in such savage brains. I pray thee, Harry, ride to meet them, and see if they be safe."

I laughed, for the danger from Indians was long since past, but said readily enough that I would do as she wished, being in fact glad enough of a gallop in the moonlight, with the prospect of meeting Mary. So in a few minutes I was in the saddle and riding toward Jamestown. The night was very bright with the moon, and there was a great mist rising from the marshy lands, and such strangely pale and luminous developments in the distances of the meadows, marshaling and advancing and retreating like companies of specters and lingering as if for consultation on the borders of the woods, with floating draperies caught in the boughs thereof, that one might have considered danger from others than Indians.

And indeed I often caught the note of an owl, and once one flitted past my face, and my horse shied at the evil bird, which is thought by the ignorant to be but a feathered cat and of ill omen, and indeed is considered by many who are wise to have presaged ill oftentimes, as in the cases of the deaths of the Emperors Valentinian and Commodus.

Be that as it may, I, having a pistol with me, shot at the bird and, though I was as good a shot as any thereabout, missed, and away it flew, with a great hoot as of laughter, which I am ready to swear I heard multiplied in a trice as if the bird were joined by a whole company, and my horse shied again and would have bolted had I not held him tightly.

Now, this which I am about to relate I am ready to swear did truly happen, though it may well be doubted. I had come within a short distance of Jamestown when I reached two houses of a small size, not far apart, not much removed from the fashion of the negro cabins, but inhabited by English folk. In the one dwelt a man who had been transported for a grievous crime, whether justly or not I cannot say, but his visage was such as to condemn him, and he was often in his cups and had spent many days in the stocks and had made frequent acquaintance with the whipping post, and with him dwelt his wife, an old dame with a tongue which had once earned her the ducking stool in England.

As I passed this house I saw over the door a great bunch of dill and vervain and white thorn, which is held to keep away witches from the threshold if gathered upon a May day. And I knew well the reason, for not many rods distant was the hut where dwelt one Margery Key, an ancient woman, who had been verily tied crosswise and thrown in a pond for witchcraft and been weighed against the church Bible, and had her body searched for witch marks and the thatch of her house burned. I know not why she had not come to the stake withal, but instead she had fled to Virginia, where witches, being not so common, were treated with more leniency. It may have been that she had escaped the usual fate of those of her kind by being considered by some a white witch and one who worked good instead of ill if approached rightly, though many considered that they who approached a white witch for the purpose of profiting by her advice or warning were of equal guilt and that it all led in the end to mischief.

WHAT WILL BE WORN.

The New Housemaid Skirt—Trimmings of the Moment.

In many of the new autumn frocks the decorations begin at the knee and are applied in a series of puffings of the material used for the gown or of silk and even velvet of the soft chiffon variety. These trimmings are usually banded in effect, although a waved design is much in favor to simulate an overskirt.

On the winter gowns the collar has not the prominent place it occupied last year, and in most instances it is merely a continuation of the yoke.

The last cry of Mme. La Mode in coloring is gray. This exquisite shade is becoming alike to both fair and dark haired women and promises to be the first favorite for late autumn frocks.

A beautiful dress of elephant gray has been designed for Mrs. Brown-Potter to wear on the vaudeville stage. It is a frock of simple elegance of this greeny gray tint in cashmere. The skirt falls full all round, but defines the hips and has a deep machine stitched hem as the only decoration. This is the new housemaid skirt. The waist is quite early English, and the very long shoulders continue in a pelerine effect right down to the waist, where a black silk swathed belt confines the bodice tightly to the figure in most becoming lines. An old fashioned tucker of val lace is stitched into the neck and finished with a tiny jabot of black silk.

The sketch shows a charming blouse of white crepe de chine, with a wide Irish lace collar, the scalloped edge of which is finished with batiste embroidery. Beneath this is set a waved ruffle, ending in front in a jabot. A shawl collar of gold yellow silk run with brown cord trims the neck. The elbow sleeves end with ruffles of crape and lace. Wollaston Choir.

The boys' choir of St. Chrysostom's church accompained by their director, E. Landis Snyder, participated in the overflow meeting at St. Pauls church, Boston, Monday evening, which was addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and other prelates. Several ladies and gentlemen from Quincy were in the audience. So well pleased were the committee with the work of the Wollaston choir that they have been invited to the meeting at Symphony hall on Sunday.

Blanchard in Field.

The Democratic county convention will be held at Dedham this afternoon. It is said that Thomas Blanchard, who was turned down by the Republicans, will attempt to capture the nomination for county commissioner. The Quincy delegates have been approached but are not favorable to the scheme.

Flyer Has Remarkably Close Call In Vermont

THE RAILS HAD SPREAD

Train Which Usually Runs at Rate of Nearly a Mile a Minute Had Slowed Down--Freight Train Held Passenger Cars on Edge of Steep Embankment

Bennington, Vt., Oct. 13.—A fortunate combination of circumstances undoubtedly prevented a terrible accident on the Rutland railroad. The "Green Mountain Flyer," southbound, left the rails at Arlington, 14 miles from here, but a wrecked locomotive and a trainload of thoroughly shaken up passengers was the only result of the accident.

The flyer ordinarily goes through Arlington at a speed of nearly 60 miles an hour, but yesterday afternoon the engineer of the train was compelled to slow down for a freight train which was taking a side track, thereby giving him right of way.

This operation had been accomplished and the train was once more gathering headway rapidly, probably 35 miles an hour, when the rails suddenly spread and the train was dropped down on to the ties and ballast. The latter had a steep incline. Just beyond was another set of tracks upon which was standing a "dead" freight train.

The moment the engine dropped the engineer applied his emergency brakes and brought his train to a standstill within a comparatively short distance. The wheels of the passenger cars, relieved of their accustomed support, slipped off onto the ballasted incline, with the result that the cars were unable to retain their equilibrium and began to topple over. Fortunately the train had stopped before the line of freight cars had been passed and the coaches rested against the cars.

Had the flyer been travelling at the speed ordinarily attained on this section of the road the accident must surely have resulted seriously, and as it was, the line of freight cars was the only obstruction between the derailed train and a steep embankment.

The passengers left the train as soon as possible and were alarmed when they saw how narrow had been their escape from possible death. The flyer, comprising seven coaches, carried 380 passengers and left Montreal at 9:35 o'clock yesterday morning. It was due in New York at 9:20 last night.

The engineer and fireman jumped when they realized their danger and escaped serious injury. The engine was totally wrecked, it being completely turned around and hurled on its side, heading north. The tender was thrown sideways across the tracks and the baggage car crashed into two freight cars on the west side, throwing them down a 20-foot embankment.

The train, at the time of the accident, was in charge of a Boston and Maine crew. A local train from the south was made up to take the passengers, who were transferred around the wreck to Troy, N. Y., to make connections for New York city.

SUBMARINES.

In Railroad Wreck in North Dakota.

Work of Russian Spies Hinted.

Were Built by Fore River Company at Quincy.

A Washington dispatch of Wednesday to the Boston Advertiser says:

A report reached Washington that the 2 knocked-down torpedo boats which were being shipped in 23 car loads over the Great Northern to Seattle and were partially wrecked near Towner, North Dakota, were built at the yards of the Fore River Ship Building Co., Quincy, Mass., upon the order of agents of the Japanese government

They were to have been shipped from Seattle to Japan. It is understood the company will institute a thorough investigation regarding the wreck, which, it was suggested in despatches, was the work of Russian spies.

The above dispatch refers to submarines, four of which were built by the Fore River Shipbuilding Company and were shipped to New York from Quincy Sept. 28.

General Manager Smith when interviewed by telephone this noon said that he knew nothing about the reported wreck of the train having the knocked down boats on board, other than what he had seen in the press dispatches.

The submarines were delivered according to contract, and the Fore River Company has no further responsibility. Whether they were going to Japan or not the company could not state.

Brilliant Golf Player.

Miss Wells, without wishing to depreciate her game, was fortunate, says the Herald, to beat Miss Mollie Adams of Wollaston in the first round for the U. S. golf championship this week. Miss Adams, apart from Miss Margaret Curtis, is undoubtedly the most brilliant player in the tournament. Her long game and swing is worthy of the best of the British players, as well as that of Mrs. C. T. Stout, and many had regarded her as the most likely to take the Cox trophy to Boston. Her defeat among those present was regarded as a misfortune, but there is still the feeling that she will eventually be hailed champion.

An Improvement.

A gang of men has been at work durthe past few days cleaning out the undergrowth in Butler's brook, east of Hancock street. The brook at this point has a retaining wall on both sides. The water in the brook has been so little, however, that the wash from the street settled on one side.

Rank grass had grown on this so that where the brook passed the Dorothy Q. house there was but a narrow waterway and the whole was very unsightly. Now that the brook is being dug out to its full width the improvement is very marked. It is understood that the brook will also be dug out and cleaned for its entire length.

The Sewerage Question.

The Legislature of 1904 passed a resolve for the appointment of a special commission of three to investigate sewerage systems in the Metropolitan district, one to be a member of the Metropolitan Park commission, one a member of the Charles River Basin commission, and one a member of the Harbor and Land commission.

Gov. Bates on Wednesday appointed as such commission: Hon. George E. Smith of Everett, chairman, member of the Harbor and Land board; William B. de las Casas of Malden, who is chairman of the Metropolitan Park commission, and Hon. Joshua B. Holden of Boston, a member of the Charles River Basin commission.

Police Association.

Twenty-two of the 33 Massachusetts cities were represented at the convention of the Massachusetts Police Association at Fall River on Wednesday. Quincy was one of the absentees. A legislative committee and committees on insurance and per capita tax were appointed. A banquet was enjoyed.

☞Representatives to the Legislature vote for Levi H. Turner and Gustave B. Bates.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

It appears necessary to say again that communications sent to this paper for publication must be accompanied by the name of the author. Though this announcement has been made scores of times, correspondents persist in anonymity, and are therefore ignored. The publication of the correspondent's name is not exacted, other than in exceptional cases.

Was it not an unusual proceeding for a Socialist Club to ask the candidate of another party to explain his votes, as was done this week when the secretary of the Quincy Socialist club sent an open letter to Richard R. Freeman, the candidate of the Republicans. No one would think of the Democratic City Committee asking a Republican candidate such questions. The reason is obvious, because they have no intention of supporting Mr. Freeman whatever his answer. Neither have the Socialists. Had the question been asked by a labor club or by Republicans it would have been different, especially if the club was honestly seeking the truth. Those who have supported a candidate in the past, and are in darkness as to his record, have a right to seek lights through proper channels, and a candidate for any public office should be willing to state his position on important questions.

Drift of Opinion.

☞In a bedroom an open fire is almost a lifesaver. Of course, many can not sleep in so strong a light, but they can get used to it in a night or two. The fire is a wonderful ventilator. Much of the air in the room is drawn up by the flame and finds its way through the chimney to the open air. In its place fresh air must come, even if the windows are closed, for cracks will admit great volumes when it comes in under that pressure.—Cincinnati Tribune.

☞The death of Senator Hoar should give no cause for fear that his work for the right and the honorable and the manly will cease. On the contrary, it will go on with all the more strength because of him. A life like his is a stimulus to thousands. Every young man who contemplates the career of the statesman who has gone can have no other desire than to be like him. It is in the hearts of his countrymen that his best monument will be found. Living, he was an examplar of all that is best in public and private life. Dead he stands unfailingly for all that should encourage every one of us to be worthy and to fail not in well doing.—Fibre and Fabric.

☞The truth is not always so alarming to the patient, painful as it often is to the physician. In fact, it seems to me this is one part of our duties that does not become less trying with increasing experience. To the sick man, whose thoughts have been turned toward the end longer than others suspect, intimation of a fatal end often brings no shock, but rather relief from the ending of a painful uncertainty. According to the rules of the Roman Catholic church a timely announcement should always be given, and those who have witnessed the last days of members of this faith can confirm the statement that good often follows, speaking merely from the medical standpoint, and rarely harm, while the same thing is true of many of other faiths or of no faith. Even where we have to give a fatal diagnosis there are certain mollifying influences that can be introduced, aside from those that spring from a tender heart. A hope can be expressed based on the fallibility of human knowledge in general, and medical knowledge in particular.—From an address before the American Medical Association.

FIGHTING GOES ON

Will Outweigh Importance of the Liaoyang Battle

KUROPATKIN'S BIG TASK

His Defeat Would Prove Disaster of First Magnitude to Russian Army, While Success Means Winter Campaign and Greatly Enhanced Prestige

Mukden, Oct. 13.—Stubborn fighting is still in progress, this being the fourth day of the engagement. It is impossible at this time to say what has been accomplished.

Hospital trains are continually arriving from the south. The wounded are being sent further north. A dressing station has been established on the railway platform here, where nurses and surgeons give prompt attention to the most urgent cases before the trains proceed.

Along the battle line some of the Chinese have built bomb-proofs, from the protection of which they are gathering crops between the cannonading. Other Chinese are moving their effects here and there amid the ruthless waste of their grain and other property by the contending armies.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 13.—No official news of the result of yesterday's battle south of Mukden is yet available. General Kuropatkin doubtless has communicated his regular report to Emperor Nicholas at Tsarkoe Selo, but the dispatch was not sent back to the general staff. So the latest word from Russian sources is contained in the press dispatch from Mukden. As is natural, the absence of official news is pessimistically interpreted in many quarters, but the general staff, though reticent, counsels patience, pointing out that the offensive movement was planned upon a large scale and has not yet reached a stage where a decisive result could have been attained.

The frontal attack on the Yentai mines developed a desperate battle, in which probably 100,000 men are engaged, but though the dispatches so far deal almost exclusively with this feature of the battle, it is pointed out that there is a much wider field involved.

A fight on the Russian left flank has not yet developed, and possibly here General Kuropatkin intends to deliver his main blow. What force is pushing forward in this direction behind the screen containing the column at Shantintaidze is unknown, but the appearance of a Russian column at Tzyanchan, 30 miles southeast of Mukden, striking at Field Marshal Oyama's communications with the Yalu, and the knowledge that another column is already across the Taitse river, gives evidence of the wide nature of the turning movement. It is possible that the attack on the Yentai mines may simply be intended to hold the main Japanese force stationary and that the outcome of the Yentai fight may have little bearing on the result of the general engagement.

While it is now asserted that Kuropatkin enjoys a considerable numerical superiority, the main fear expressed is that this superiority is insufficient to enable him to carry out the big operations he has undertaken.

Apprehension is caused by a Tokio dispatch saying that Oyama reports that he is gaining ground and has cut off a Russian column below the Taitse river. It is only natural, after the repeated reverses already suffered, that Russians fully realize how much Kuropatkin has staked upon the assumption of the offensive.

The battle now in progress undoubtedly will outweigh in importance the hard fight at Liaoyang. For Kuropatkin, victory, partial or complete, is absolutely necessary. Defeat would certainly spell ruin for his military reputation and probably prove a disaster of the first magnitude to the Russian army. If the Japanese should roll up Kuropatkin's advance now, all hope of an aggressive Russian success in this campaign or of the relief of Port Arthur would be ended probably for this year. But Russian success now means a winter campaign and immensely enhanced prestige, not only for Kuropatkin personally, but for the Russian arms in Manchuria, in the eyes of the Chinese, which is an important factor in the present situation. The effect also of defeat upon the gallant garrison of Port Arthur, after hopes of relief had been held out, would be most disastrous.

For all these reasons Kuropatkin's friends are convinced that the offensive was taken with open eyes and with a full appreciation of its difficulties and a firm belief that victory would be achieved. On the other hand, some of his enemies are unkind enough to intimate that Kuropatkin has rashly risked his army, knowing that victory now will ensure his selection as commander-in-chief of both the Manchurian armies.

Japs Capture Blockade Runners

Shanghai, Oct. 13.—The British steamer Fu Ping, which was captured by the Japanese off Port Arthur yesterday, was purchased with seven other vessels by Russian agents here for the purpose of running the blockade with contraband of war for the fortress. Two of these vessels, the Sishan and the Fu Ping, have now been captured. Another steamship, the Canton, left here last week on this mission and has not since been heard of.

CANON ON DIVORCE

Episcopal House of Deputies on Proposed Change

Boston, Oct. 13.—A marked division of sentiment regarding the proposal to prevent the remarriage of the innocent person in a divorce case while the former partner lives developed in the house of deputies of the Episcopal general convention. The house, acting as a committee of the whole, discussed the issue all day and many vehement addresses were made by both sides. Several prominent delegates express the opinion that, in view of the great difference of opinion, the present convention will not act on the matter, but will, like its predecessor, refer the problem to the next triennial conference. Several of the northern leaders of the high church party spoke strongly in favor of the proposed legislation, while many southern deputies opposed a change in the canon on divorce.

One of the southern deputies, Mr. Buxton, in attributing much of the divorce evil to the liquor traffic, referred to a high official of the church who had "lent his influence to the dedication of saloons." As it was recognized that Buxton was referring to Bishop Potter he was called to order, as it is against the rules to criticise a member of the house of bishops.

The house of bishops presented the Archbishop of Canterbury with a silver loving cup. The English primate left the city for New York today and will sail for England on Friday.

Irishmen In a Hot Battle

Cork, Oct. 13.—At Fellsport, near this city, an attempt to evict a tenant named Edmund Murphy for unpaid rent of six years led to serious fighting. Fifty police, arriving early in the morning, found the place barricaded. A crowd assembled and assisted Murphy, assailing the police with red-hot irons, boiling water and stones. The conflict continued all day. With the arrival of reinforcements, the police charged the mob with fixed bayonets and many persons on both sides were injured. Late in the evening, through the mediation of a priest, Murphy surrendered.

Perhaps Work of Russian Spies

Washington, Oct. 13.—A report has reached Washington that the two knocked-down torpedo boats which were being shipped in 23 carloads to Seattle and were partially wrecked near Towner, N. D., were built at the yards of the Fore River Shipbuilding company, Quincy, Mass., upon the order of agents of the Japanese government. They were to have been shipped from Seattle to Japan. The wreck, it is suggested in dispatches, was the work of Russian spies.

Alleged Extortion by Car Trust

Chicago, Oct. 13.—Alleged extortionate charges and arbitrary practices of the Armour Car company were the subject of examination by the interstate commerce commission here, and the commission finally adjourned, pending a special call, with the investigation suspended. Charges of gross oppression were made by several commission men who have had to depend on the Armour car system for the transportation of their produce.

Beheaded Bodies In Wreckage

San Francisco, Oct. 13.—Schooner Gotoma, from Kurile island, reports that on Aug. 4, when 40 miles south-southwest of Cape Curat, she sighted a mass of floating wreckage from the Japanese troopship Kinshiu Maru, which was sunk by the Russians last April, when 200 perished. Entangled in the wreckage were a number of headless trunks. How those who perished were beheaded is a mystery.

Barge and Cargo Probably Lost

New York, Oct. 13.—Breaking loose from their moorings during a severe rain and wind storm, three heavily laden coal barges drifted out into the East river and were carried southward by the wind and tide. Two of them were picked up within a couple of hours, but the third, with no one on board, has not been heard from and is thought to have sunk.

Baseball Club at Sheriff's Sale

Philadelphia, Oct. 13.—To satisfy judgment notes aggregating $30,000, the Philadelphia National League Baseball club will be sold at sheriff's sale. President Potter of the club says that the action is founded upon loans made to the club. The past season being profitless the club could not repay its loans.

Mexicans Facing Starvation

Albuquerque, N. M., Oct. 13.—Seventy dwellings in San Marcial have been wrecked by floods. The plight of the Mexican people in the surrounding valley is terrible and hundreds must starve unless immediate help is furnished from the outside.

Lineman's Fatal Fall

Boston, Oct. 13.—While repairing an electric wire in front of engine house 12, Roxbury, George McIntire, 55, fell a distance of 30 feet, breaking both legs and fracturing his skull, from which he died while being removed to a hospital.

Porto Rican Registration

San Juan, P. R., Oct. 13.—Approximately 30,000 voters registered yesterday for the coming election and without disturbance, except at Lares, where a clash occurred. All parties believe in Governor Winthrop's promise of a fair election.

"He Ain't No Dude!"

[Julius Chambers in Brooklyn Eagle.]

New stories about President Roosevelt are reaching me by every mail. Edmund Seymour, a banker, told me one today that I believe to be new. It is wholly nonpolitical. Mr. Seymour is a Vermont man and lived out in Wyoming many years for his health. His ranch was less than a hundred miles from that of Mr. Roosevelt, and that fact led to the story.

"Did you ever meet the young ranchman?" I asked.

"Yes," replied Mr. Seymour. "I met him once, but I never saw him."

"Now, don't get funny about the matter," I suggested.

"Well, I slept with him one night, and yet I assure you I did not see him."

"How did that happen?"

"I rode in from my ranch to the railroad station," replied Seymour. "When I applied at the hotel, about 10 o'clock at night, the proprietor told me every bed was filled except one. I could have half of that or sleep on the floor. When I demurred to waking the man who had already gone to bed he said: 'That's all right. He understands that if another man comes he is to share his bed.' That altered the case, of course. I was shown up to the room. Hardly had I begun to undress when a voice asked, 'Who's that?' I explained the situation and was told that I was welcome. I turned in, and after my long two days' ride was so tired I went to sleep in a moment. When I awakened in the morning my bedfellow was gone.

"I went downstairs and was asked how I had passed the night. I said I had slept unusually well and was sorry I hadn't been awake when my roommate got up, as I would have wished to thank him for his courtesy.

"'He's no tenderfoot!' retorted the landlord.

"'Who is he?' I asked.

"'I don't know much about him, but his name is Theodore Roosevelt—and he ain't no dude!'"

Parker Colorless to Date.

[From the Kansas City Star.]

When Tilden was the party's nominee his achievements in fighting the thieves in New York constituted a direct appeal to the voters. Mr. Cleveland's record as a reform governor was what secured him the presidency, but Judge Parker has had no executive career to arouse enthusiasm. So far as the country can determine the judge is as colorless as his speech.

Gambetta's Table.

There is a curious story told of the table at which Gambetta wrote. A previous owner, General Lahitte, minister for foreign affairs in 1849, dismissed his confidential servant because he believed he had stolen a large sum of money in 1,000 franc bank notes. Years afterward, when the table had to be repaired, the joiner employed for the work found the missing bundle of bank notes between the mahogany board of the table and the drawers below. They had lain there unnoticed for fourteen years. Unfortunately the story does not go on to say that the poor servant and his mistaken master were alive at the time of the discovery and that the one's character was cleared and the other's confidence restored.

Rhode Island Republicans Put Ticket In the Field

IN COMPLETE HARMONY

Nominee Declares It to Be Duty of People of the State to Defend Policy of Protective Tariff--Greetings to President

Providence, Oct. 13.—George H. Utter of Westerly, lieutenant governor of Rhode Island, was unanimously nominated for governor at the Republican state convention held in this city, and the remainder of the state ticket also was chosen without contest.

Frederick H. Jackson of Providence was nominated for lieutenant governor, Charles F. Bennett of Providence for secretary of state, William B. Greenough of Providence for attorney general and Walter A. Read of Gloucester was renominated for general treasurer.

The convention adopted a platform endorsing the national administration and sent a telegram to President Roosevelt extending the greetings of the delegates and assuring him of "loyal and enthusiastic support" from Rhode Island. Daniel R. Ballou acted as permanent chairman. Senator Platt of Connecticut was a guest and briefly addressed the convention.

At the conclusion of the state gathering the congressional district conventions were held. Judge Stiness was nominated in the First district and Congressman Capron was named as his own successor in the Second district.

Lieutenant Governor Utter, in accepting the nomination, spoke in part as follows:

"Under our form of government the candidate of a party, if elected, becomes the servant of the whole people. Therefore it may be proper that through you I should say a few words to the people of the state. If I am elected to the high office for which you have nominated me I promise to support the policies of the platform; to give to the state the very best service of which I am capable; to know the welfare of the people only, and to protect and defend the fair name of our state from all traducers.

"The result of the campaign upon which we have entered is to be determined not by the standard bearers alone, but by the rank and file of the party. It is for the voters as individuals and as a body to determine the issues of the present contest.

Rhode Island has much at stake in the pending national campaign. Our material welfare is largely dependent upon the continuance of our present national policy. We are primarily a manufacturing state. Indeed, of all the states in the union we have the largest proportion of people who are dependent upon the nation's welfare. Therefore, it is our duty to ourselves, as well as our duty to the whole country, to defend the policy of protective tariff; and we can do that in no more effective manner than by securing a general assembly which will return to the United States senate their leader among protective statesmen, Nelson W. Aldrich.

"Go to your homes, therefore, with the will to roll up in every town such a majority for the Republican party that the state will give its four electoral votes to those champions of American industries, those defenders of American honor, those advocates of American progress, Theodore Roosevelt and Charles W. Fairbanks."

CRANE FOR SENATOR

Ex-Governor Accepts Appointment Tendered by Bates

Boston, Oct. 13.—Ex-Governor Winthrop M. Crane of Dalton has been appointed by Governor Bates United States senator, to succeed the late George F. Hoar of Worcester. Mr. Crane has accepted the appointment.

Quite a number have thought that Governor Bates would name ex-Governor Long. There is no question that Long is held in great esteem and affection by very many people. With Long in the senate Massachusetts would have two orators there. With Lodge and Crane there she would have one orator and one keen business man, who is closely in touch with great and controlling influences all over the country. Governor Bates also has a strong liking for Attorney General Moody, who is also an excellent speaker and a sharp debater. But, taking it all in all, and looking at the question from every point of view, Crane's appointment seemed to the governor the most appropriate to be made. Hence it was made and accepted.

Wisconsin Split Continues

Milwaukee, Oct. 13.—The national Republican (Stalwart) state ticket, headed by former Governor Scofield, will remain in the field. This was decided after a protracted meeting of leading stalwarts from every part of the state. Scofield expresses himself as being satisfied with the conclusions reached by the conference.

A Whirlwind Campaign

Fairmont, W. Va., Oct. 13.—The second day of the Davis campaign through Maryland and West Virginia added to the reputation of Mr. Davis as a "young" old man. He repeated his record of Tuesday with a dozen speeches and added one more for good measure. Despite the rain which followed the train during the first half of the day, there was no dampening of enthusiasm nor diminishing of the crowds which greeted the candidate. At Grafton and Clarksburg the day seemed to be set apart as a holiday.

Democrats May Carry Illinois

New York, Oct. 13.—Mayor Harrison of Chicago conferred with Judge Parker concerning political affairs in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana. He pledged the loyalty of all wings of the Democratic party in Illinois and said the Democrats had a chance to carry a state which, he said, is normally Republican. When he left the apartments of Parker he said: "I came to deliver the electoral votes of Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana." Afterward he said if that was not a big enough contract he might include the vote of Iowa.

Chandler Refuses to Withdraw

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 13.—The state committee of the regular Republicans and the Union, or Addicks Republicans, met here and completed the work of selecting a compromise congressional and state ticket headed by Preston Lea, a regular Republican, who had been agreed upon as the compromise candidate for governor. Joseph H. Chandler, who was nominated by the convention of the regular Republicans, and who refused to withdraw, declares he will run as an independent candidate.

Bryan Reiterates Sincerity

Indianapolis, Oct. 13.—All available space in Tomlinson hall was crowded last night during the meeting which marked the close of the first day of W. J. Bryan's tour of Indiana. Throughout his speech Bryan insisted that it was not for the sake of the appearance of "being in line," but through sincerity that he championed the cause of Parker and Davis and a united Democracy.

Fairbanks Ends Iowa Tour

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 13.—With a speech in this city last night, Senator Fairbanks concluded his tour of this state. The crowd at the meeting last night was large, but the meetings of the day were not, upon the whole, as well attended as those of Tuesday.

Bomb-Thrower In Buffalo

Buffalo, Oct. 13.—Henry Hogancamp, a driver of a pop-corn wagon, went to Richard Odell's saloon last evening and asked to see Margaret Marr, alleged to be his wife. The woman had left him three weeks ago to work as cook in the saloon. Hogancamp asked the woman to return to him and she refused. He dropped a parcel he was carrying and a 10-foot section of the side wall was blown out into the street. Hogancamp had both his eyes blown out and will die. The woman had the flesh torn off her arms to the bone. No one was in the room with the pair. The adjoining buildings were wrecked somewhat. The police do not know what sort of explosive was used.

Essig's Damaging Testimony

New York, Oct. 13.—George J. Essig, a plumber, was the principal witness yesterday against Philip Weinseimer, charged with extorting $2700 from Essig. Essig testified that Weinseimer demanded $3000 from him under a threat that he would not permit work to be done on the Chatsworth building and that Weinseimer finally accepted $1000 in cash and notes for $1700. Essig said that his men, who had been on strike, returned to work when he paid the $1000 to Weinseimer.

Fishermen Raise Their Prices

St. John, Oct. 13.—St. John fishermen have combined to get better prices for sardine herring from the Eastport, Me., canneries. The run of the little fish has been good and catches big and recently the fishermen have been receiving $2 a hogshead. They are now holding out for $5 a hogshead. The fishermen say they will take their catch to Musquash and sell for bait unless they get their price.

Failure of Old Establishment

New York, Oct. 13.—An involuntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Sweetser, Pembroke & Co., one of the oldest wholesale dry goods houses in this city, and which is now in process of voluntary dissolution. The petition contained no statement as to the estimated liabilities or assets of the corporation.

Verdict Not Made Public

Savannah, Ga., Oct. 13.—The court martial sitting in trial of Captain Hitch, charged with dereliction of duty in connection with the lynching and burning of Reed and Cato at Statesboro, has arrived at a verdict. The verdict is sealed and will not be made public until it has reached the state authorities.

Crooked City Officials Sentenced

St. Louis, Oct. 13.—Charles F. Kelly, former speaker of the lower house of the municipal assembly, and Charles A. Gutke, a former member of that body, were sentenced to the penitentiary for connection with the Suburban bribery deal. Kelly was given two years for perjury and Gutke five years for bribery.

Protection and Soup Houses.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

"How long will the American people," asks a Democratic paper, speaking of a protective tariff, "tolerate this prolific mother of the trusts?" They will tolerate protection until they want another soup house era of calamity. Meanwhile they will look for the parentage of trusts in a quarter where it will be found. It was claimed that the duty on coal was the cause of monopolistic prices until the duty was removed without in the least reducing the cost of fuel.

PROFESSIONAL ROBBER

Man Arrested at Boston Admits Blowing Open Many Safes

Boston, Oct. 13.—By the arrest of James A. Lee and his subsequent confession to the police the mystery surrounding more than a dozen burglaries committed during the past six months was cleared. Lee, who is 30 years old, had been shadowed by detectives for several days, was arrested as he was entering a lodging house in the South End district. A complete outfit of burglar's tools was found in his room.

In his confession Lee said that his accomplice in the burglaries was George Wilson. Wilson was arrested in Medford a few days ago and is now at the Cambridge jail awaiting trial. He has served one term in the Massachusetts reformatory and two terms in the state prison, all for safe breaking.

Lee told the police that he and an accomplice had blown open 13 safes within the past six months. Among the places entered were the Grand Opera house and the warehouse of the Cudahy Packing company at Clinton market.

Snow In Northern New England

Boston, Oct. 13.—The features of the northeast storm which swept the New England coast with considerable severity was the unusually high tide and the absence of any serious marine mishap. The wreck of the John C. Smith on Chatham beach broke up. The tide made deep breeches into Cape Cod. Beaches in Plymouth bay were also badly washed and several small shanties wrecked. In the northern portion of New England the rain turned to snow and sleet, winter conditions prevailing as far south as Nashua.

Made a Mistake In Date

New Haven, Oct. 13.—Orrin L. Stockford, the union teamster who, with eight others, was convicted of conspiracy in connection with the teamsters' strike in this city, who failed to appear when the others received a sentence of three months each in jail Tuesday, presented himself yesterday and was ordered taken to jail. By explaining to the court that he had made a mistake in the date he secured the release of his bond, which had been declared forfeited for his non-appearance.

Stole Money From Bank

Boston, Oct. 13.—John Hayes was sentenced to three years and Barbe Howes to two years in the house of correction for stealing $2800 from the bank where Hayes worked. Hayes was night watchman for the Puritan Trust company, and one evening he found a package of $6000 which accidentally was left in the bank. Howes happened to be at the bank that night. Hayes abstracted $2800 and gave Howes a portion of the money. Both men are negroes.

Not a Case For Probation

Barnstable, Mass., Oct. 13.—Found guilty of passing worthless checks, Walter Clifford of Falmouth was sentenced in the superior court to serve not less than seven years in the state prison. When pleading to the charge, Clifford told the court that this was his first offense, but the probation officer, after an investigation, informed the court that the prisoner was wanted in Taunton, Worcester and Boston for similar offenses.

Keeping Agreement Intact

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 13.—There is no change in the strike situation, the mills which had been expected to open having abandoned the plan. It is not generally known that certain mills are ready to open to test the sentiment of the operatives, but pressure has been brought to bear to keep the early agreement intact, with the view to opening all the mills together.

Heavy Suit Against Railway

Boston, Oct. 13.—Heavy damages are sought in a case commenced in the superior court. Amelia Bloomberg, about 45 years of age, claims $25,000 for injuries said to have been sustained by her Jan. 30, 1901, by being knocked down by a car of the Boston Elevated railway, and her husband seeks to recover $10,000 for loss of his wife's services.

Fatal Stabbing Affray

New Haven, Oct. 13.—Frank Fandello, 28 years old, and Antonio Lontobardi got in a quarrel on a street corner last night and came to blows, Fandello finally drawing a knife and plunging it into Lontobardi's breast. The latter died shortly afterward. The police found no trace of the murderer and fear that he managed to get out of town.

Suicide of a Doctor

Lynn, Mass., Oct. 13.—C. M. Willey of Cambridge, aged 35, committed suicide at a local hotel. Employes were attracted to his room by the odor of gas and upon bursting in the door they found Willey lying on his bed fully dressed with the end of a rubber tube connecting with a gas jet in his mouth.

Sewer Death Costs $3500

Boston, Oct. 13.—Michael Moran, administrator of Francis Woods of Chelsea, was awarded $3500 in the third session of the superior court in an action against the city of Chelsea. The deceased was engaged in a sewer when a cave-in occurred, injuring him so as to cause his death.

FOIBLES OF FASHION.

Hand Painted Belts Are Now Considered Very Smart.

A pretty fashion is that of wearing cockades of colored velvet or ribbon, one on the left side of the corsage, rather high up, and the other on the right side of the waist line. The cockades are large and generally of a contrasting color from that of the gown with which they are worn. Rosettes of burnt orange velvet make an exceedingly pretty accompaniment to a smart afternoon gown of brown sun plaited chiffon.

Hand painted belts in different colored leathers will represent a very important item among the dress schemes. A charming example is in deep cream, with a leather buckle to correspond painted in the palest greens, mauves and pinks in a design of Louis XV. bows, mingled with sprays of flowers. A brown leather belt, with a dull gold buckle, is stunning with embroidered sprays of mauve lilac, the leaves and stems being hand painted.

The dainty gown pictured is a Paris fancy evolved from dark tan broadcloth. The skirt is finely plaited and trimmed at the hem with a flat embroidery in different shades of tan. The tight fitting jacket is finished with the same embroidery and opens in front to display a wide black satin corselet and neckband. Dull gold buttons are dotted about the neck. The hat is of tan, and the necessary note of color is furnished by the white linen collar and black satin stock and girdle.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

Kaiser's Snub of the Bismarcks.

The marriage of Count Herbert Bismarck and the Countess Hoyos took place at Vienna, and it was on this occasion that the kaiser took a step which was one of the falsest steps of his life, a step equivalent to the malevolent boycotting of the Bismarcks. By order of his majesty Count Caprivi, the new chancellor, wrote to Prince Reuss, German ambassador at Vienna: "Should the prince (ex-chancellor) or his family make any approach to you pray confine yourself to conventional forms of courtesy. This order is also to be observed by the staff of the embassy. I may add that his majesty will take no notice of the wedding."—London Chronicle.

FOR UNIVERSAL PEACE

President Roosevelt to Act First. Will Call Conference of Nations at The Hague.

Interparliamentary Union Meets the "Strong Man of Peace" In Washington.

Gentlemen of the Interparliamentary Union—I greet you with profound pleasure as representatives in a special sense of the great international movement for peace and good will among the nations of the earth. It is a matter of gratification to all Americans that we have had the honor of receiving you here as the nation's guests. You are men skilled in the practical work of government in your several countries, and this fact adds weight to your championship of the cause of international justice. I thank you for your kind allusions to what the government of the United States has accomplished for the policies you have at heart, and I assure you that this government's attitude will continue unchanged in reference thereto. We are even now taking steps to secure arbitration treaties with all other governments which are willing to enter into them with us.

In response to your resolutions I shall at an early date ask the other nations to join in a second congress at The Hague. [Applause.] I feel, as I am sure you do, that our efforts should take the shape of pushing forward the work already begun at The Hague and that whatever is now done should appear not as something divergent therefrom, but as a continuance thereof.

Time to Advance the Work.

At the first conference at The Hague several questions were left unsettled, and it was expressly provided that there should be a second conference. A reasonable time has elapsed, and I feel that your body has shown sound judgment in concluding that a second conference should now be called to carry some steps further toward completion the work of the first. It would be visionary to expect too immediate success for the great cause you are championing, but very substantial progress can be made if we strive with resolution and good sense toward the goal of securing among the nations of the earth, as among the individuals of each nation, a just sense of responsibility in each toward others and a just recognition in each of the rights of others. The right and the responsibility must go hand in hand. Our efforts must be unceasing both to secure in each nation full acknowledgment of the rights of others and to bring about in each nation an ever growing sense of its own responsibilities.

At an early date I shall issue the call for the conference you request. [Applause.] I again greet you and bid you welcome in the name of the American people and wish you godspeed in your efforts for the common good of mankind.

Today we have another record breaker for low noon temperature, being 44, or four degrees colder than Wednesday. This was the low mark for noon temperature in October 1903.

Although Wednesday evening was stormy there was a good attendance at the Bethany Brotherhood meeting. Sickness prevented Rev. W. Sherman Thompson from being present, but his address on "The young man in the church" will be given next Tuesday evening. All men of the city are invited.

Owing to the storm only a few ventured out to the whist party given in G. A. R. hall, Wednesday evening, by the Ladies' Aid society. Seven tables were in play. W. M. Bird had a score of 53 and was awarded a table; Mrs. Peter Gomez, six china plates; J. P. Hedman, a picture, and W. Hogan, six tumblers.

OPEN TO ALL MEN.

Educational Classes of Y. M. C. A. to Open About Nov. I.

The educational department of the Y. M. C. A. has issued the prospectus for its evening schools which will open the first week of November in the Adams building and move later to the new Association building on Washington street.

Any man above 16 years of age, without regard to nationality, color, religious belief or creed is eligible to membership in this association and to enter these classes, and that is one of the reasons why the Y. M. C. A. deserves the support of all the people of Quincy.

The classes are designed as the prospectus says, for the man who works all day in shop, stone shed, store or office and who wants to perfect himself in lines which will be helpful to him in his business or trade; for the man who is ambitious to be more than "a mere machine" all his life; for the man who finds it difficult to study alone and wants the inspiration and impetus which studying with others in class gives.

The instructor of the class in mechanical drawing will be William S. Viall who is with the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, and the instructor of the classes in monumental drawing, and in clay modeling will be Herbert W. Beattie, the well known artist of this city.

Other classes in arithmetic and English will be started if a sufficient number of men desire such instruction. Later also there will be organized a mandolin and guitar club and a glee club. Inquiries concerning all classes should be made at 1361 Hancock street before Nov. 1.

South Boston Car Yard.

The cars of all divisions of the N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R. are now stored at South Boston, the Roxbury yard having been vacated on Monday. One of the chief benefits to be derived by the change is the greater facility with which trains can be made up for all the divisions and sent to the station. It will also relieve the cut between the terminal yard and the Back Bay station of the numerous train movements incident to the backing in of those to be sent out and the handling of those returning to the yard. These tracks are very fully occupied during the busy hours of the day, and the relief now made possible will be of wide benefit to the Providence division.

SIZE OF AN ATOM.

An Illustration That Gives Some Idea of Its Littleness.

How large is an atom? "Perhaps the simplest though not the most exact way of arriving at a rough estimate of the size of atoms is by measuring the thickness of a soap bubble film where it is as thin as possible just before it bursts," says a writer. "Such a film if composed of atoms must be something like a pebble wall. Now, a pebble wall would not stand if it were not several pebbles thick, and if we had reason to suppose that it was about a dozen pebbles thick we could easily make an estimate of the size of a pebble by measuring the thickness of the wall. That is the case with the thinnest region of a soap film. It is found to have a very definite uniform thickness. It is the thinnest thing known, and by refined optical means its thickness can be accurately measured. It must contain not less than something like a dozen atoms in its thickness, and yet it is only about the twenty-millionth of an inch in thickness by direct measurement. So that the diameter of an atom comes out between one two-hundredth-millionth of an inch. In other words, from about 200,000,000 to 300,000,000 of atoms can lie edge to edge in a linear inch."

BLADES OF GRASS.

The Reason They Grow So Abundantly Throughout the World.

Grasses are widely diffused throughout the world in order to provide abundantly for the sustenance of a very large portion of the animal kingdom.

"Grasses," says Paley, "are nature's care. Cattle feed upon their leaves, birds upon the larger, for our bread corn is a grass. They thrive under treatment by which other plants are destroyed. The more their leaves are consumed the more their roots increase, and the more they are trampled upon the thicker they grow. Many that seem dead and dry renew their verdure in the spring. On lofty mountains, where summer heats are not sufficient to ripen the seeds, grasses abound which are viviparous and consequently able to propagate themselves without seed."

It is interesting to note in this connection that animals at liberty in their pasture to range and choose attack the leaves and leave unharmed the stalks which support the reproductive flowers.

A CURIOUS ANIMAL.

The Jelly-like Amoeba Has Neither Limbs, Mouth Nor Stomach.

The amoeba, probably the simplest form of animal life, has neither limbs, mouth, nor stomach. Its whole anatomy consists of a simple cell of the jelly-like material called protoplasm. It moves with a flowing motion, just as a drop of glycerin might slide on a slightly inclined plate.

It feeds by flowing over and ingulfing and minute animal or vegetable organism that may be in its path. When it has digested its food it passes on and leaves the residue behind.

The amoeba can be found on the surface of the mud at the bottom of almost any stagnant pool and is hardly visible without a microscope. It reproduces its kind by simply dividing into two when it has reached a certain size. Occasionally two amoeba merge into one, which breaks up into many much smaller ones. In times of drought the amoeba incloses itself in a hard cyst and waits until its home is wet again.

A Purpose.

A purpose is always a companion. An earnest purpose is the closest of companions. To fulfill duties is more than to enjoy pleasures. It carries its own reward. There is no bitter loneliness for those affectionately devoted to blessing their fellow creatures. The keeper of the lighthouse when night settles around him and the tempest holds revelry and he looks out on the ghastly glare of the breakers and hears the shrieking of the storm fiend, finds good company in the thought that the friendly light he trims will warn endangered crews of their peril and perhaps save them from death. Gifted souls find solace and companionship in their works.

Mutual Lapse of Memory.

Mrs. B., who has passed the meridian of life and is ambling down its western slope, had occasion to consult her doctor. Before he diagnosed her illness he asked her age.

"Doctor," said the old lady, with some asperity, "I am just one year older than I was this time last year when you visited me professionally and asked the same question."

"How old were you then?" asked the doctor. "I have forgotten."

"So have I."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Deadlock.

"Yes," answered the novice, "and the only way to have confidence is to be perfectly sure you can swim."—Washington Star.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition.

CHAPTER XI—(Continued).

Be that as it may, this old dam' Margery Key dwelt there alone in her little hut so overthatched and grown by vines and scarce showing the shaggy slant of its roof above the bushes that it resembled more the hole of some timid and wary animal than a human habitation. And if any visited her for consultation it was by night and secrecy, and no one ever caught sight of her except now and then the nodding white frill of her cap in the green gloom of a window or the painful bend of her old back as she gathered sticks for her fire in the woods about. How she lived none knew.

A little garden patch she had, and a hive or two of bees, and a red cow, which many affirmed to have the eye of a demon, and there were those who said that her familiars stole bread for her from the plantation larders, and that often a prime ham was missed and a cut of venison, with no explanation; but who can say? Without doubt there are strange things in the earth, but we are all so in the midst of them and even a part of their workings that we can have no outside foothold to take fair sight thereof. Verily a man might as well strive to lift himself by his boot straps over a stile.

But this much I will say, that, as I was riding along, cogitating something deeply in my mind as to the best disposal of the powder and the shot which Mary Cavendish had ordered from England, I, coming abreast of Margery Key's house, saw of a sudden a white cat, which many affirmed to be her familiar, spring from her door like a white arrow of speed and off down a woodpath, and my horse reared and plunged, and then, with my holding him of no avail, though I had a strong hand on the bridle, was after her with such a mad flight that I had hard work to keep the saddle.

Pellmell through the wood we went, I ducking my head before the mad lash of the branches and feeling the dew therefrom in my face like a drive of rain, until we came to a cleared space, then a great spread of tobacco fields, overlapping silver white in the moonlight, and hamlet of negro cabins, and then Major Robert Beverly's house, standing a mass of shadow except for one moonlit wall, for all the family were gone to the governor's ball.

Then as I live that white cat of Margery Key's led me in that mad chase around Beverly's house, and when I came to the north side of it I saw a candle gleam in a window and heard a baby's wail, and knew 'twas where his infant daughter was tended, and as we swept past out thrust a black head from the window, and a screech as savage as any wild cat's rent the peace of the night, and I believe that the child's black nurse took us, no doubt, for the devil himself. Then all the dogs howled and bayed, though not one approached us, and a great bat came fanning past, like a winged shadow, and again I heard the owl's hoot, and ever before us, like a white arrow, fled that white cat, and my horse followed in spite of me.

Then—verily I speak the truth, though it may well be questioned—did that white cat lead us straight to the tomb which Major Beverly had made upon his plantation at the death of his first wife and in which she lay, and 'twas on a rising above the creek, and then the cat, with a wail which was like nothing I ever heard in this world, was away in a straight line toward the silver gleam of the creek, though every one knows well how cats hate water, and had disappeared. But, though to this I will not swear, I thought I saw a white gleam aloft, and heard a wail of a cat skyward along with the owl hoots.

And then my horse stood and trembled in such wise that I thought he would fall under me, and I dismounted and stroked his head and tried as best I could to soothe him, and we were all the time before the tomb, which was a large one. Then of a sudden it came to me that here was the hiding place for the powder and shot, for what safer hiding place can there be than the tomb of the first wife, when the second hath reigned but a short time, and is fair, and hath but just given her lord that little darling whose cries of appealing helplessness I could hear even there? So I gave the tomb door a pull, knowing that I should not by so doing disturb the slumbers of the poor lady within, and decided with myself that it would be easy enough to force it, and mounted and rode back as best I might to the road.

And when I came to the little dwelling of Margery Key a thought struck me, and I rode close, though my horse shuddered as if with some strange fright of something which I could not see. I bent in my saddle and looked in the door, but naught could I see. Then I dismounted and tied my horse to a tree near by and entered the house and looked about the sorry place as well as I could in the pale sift of moonlight, and—the old woman was not there. But one room there was, with a poor pallet in a corner and a chest against the wall and a stool and a kettle in the fireplace, with a little pile of sticks and a great scattering of ashes, but no one there, and also, if I may be believed, no broom.

All this I tell for what it may be worth to the credulity of them who hear; the facts be such as I have said. But whether believing it myself or not, yet knowing that that white cat, though it had been Margery Key in such guise or her familiar imp on his way to join her at some revel whither she had ridden her broom, had done me good service, and, seeing the piteous smallness of the pile of sticks on the hearth and reflecting upon the distressful bend of the old soul's back, whether she had sold herself to Satan or not, I lingered a minute to break down a goodly armful of brush in the wood outside and carry inside for the replenishment of her store.

And as I came forth, having done so, I heard the door of the nearby house open and saw two white faces peering out at me and heard a woman's voice shriek shrilly that here was the devil seeking the witch, and though I called out to reassure them the door clapped to with a bang like a pistol shot and my horse danced about so that I could scarcely mount. Then I rode away, something wondering within myself, since I had been taken for the devil, how many others might have been and whether men made their own devils and their own witches, instead of the prince of evil having a hand in it, and yet that happened which I have related, and I have told the truth.

Neglected Education.

Oliver Herford was entertaining some men friends in his flat one evening when a servant from the apartment below his brought a message to the effect that the gentleman in 310 was unable, by reason of the alleged noise made by Mr. Herford's party, to enjoy that peace and quiet he thought was due him.

"He says he can't read," remarked the servant.

"Present my compliments to the gentleman," said Herford calmly, "and tell him that I could when I was three years old."—Harper's Weekly.

Some London Street Names.

In London there are some quaint street names. In Bermondsey a road running by the side of the river is called Pickle Herring street. In Chelsea there is a World's End passage near Gray's inn, a Cow Bath square, and every one knows Poultry. Paternoster row, Amen corner and Ave Maria lane have all kept their names since Roman Catholic times, hundreds of years ago, when the processions used to pass along chanting orisons. The principal street in Edinburgh is the famous Cowgate.

RUSSIANS RETIRE

Pursuit Said to Be Working Havoc to Dispirited Army

JAPS' VICTORY ASSURED

London Critics Think Kuropatkin Shot His Bolt Well Toward the Mark, but Missed It Badly and Has Suffered Defeat

Tokio, Oct. 14.—It is yet too early to measure the results of the tremendous struggle which has been waged for the past three days south of Mukden, but all reports reaching Tokio indicate that General Kuropatkin has been decisively whipped and severely punished. The Russian commander was evidently caught while making his dispositions with his forces scattered and he was beaten before he could recover.

The Japanese have begun a desperate effort to turn the Russian right and if this effort should be successful, it will carry disaster to the Russian arms.

Estimates of the total forces engaged vary. One telegram from Liaoyang says that the Russians have 200,000 men, with 1000 guns. The Japanese force exceeds the number engaged at the battle of Liaoyang.

The pursuit by the Japanese is working great havoc to the dispirited Russians, who left their dead and wounded in heaps on the field in terrific rains. The fighting is the most severe and terrible of the whole war.

London, Oct. 14.—No appreciable progress has been made in the projected advance southward of the Russian army under General Kuropatkin since the initial success of the movement in the capture of Bentiaputse. Fighting of the most stubborn description continues along practically the entire front.

Field Marshal Oyama reports the capture of 30 guns from the Russians and claims distinct successes in forcing the Russians to retire from some of their advanced positions.

General Kuropatkin's report to Emperor Nicholas is couched in guarded terms and claims nothing in the way of accomplished results.

Reports from the Russian military commander at Port Arthur show that the Japanese have brought a shell fire to bear upon the inner fortress. The garrison, however, is represented to be hopeful of the outcome of the siege.

The London papers have to rely mainly upon official reports for news of the far east; but on dispatches thus far received regard a complete Japanese victory as assured and editorialize entirely from this point of view. Says The Daily Telegraph:

"General Kuropatkin has shot his bolt. It seemed to be speeding well towards the mark, yet has missed it badly. He suffered not merely a repulse, but a disastrous defeat, while Japan's incomparable army, under incomparable generals, have added another glorious page to their chronicle of war and proved that Oyama is still Kuropatkin's master in every branch of the art of war."

The Daily Graphic describes Kuropatkin's move as a "gambler's throw" and considers that the frank bluntness of his report to the emperor seems to speak the language of a man who has done his best with the bungling advice of some superior agency.

The Standard finds Kuropatkin's dispatch full of tragic meaning, while The Daily News argues that the Russian dash southward was prompted by a desperate desire to relieve Port Arthur rather than to Viceroy Alexieff's malign influence, the end of which in case of the fall of the fortress, cannot be far distant.

Spencer Wilkinson, in The Morning Post, discussing strategic possibilities, thinks the issue will turn upon which side shall first become exhausted by the protracted operations. "Telegrams," he says, "do not yet reveal the final decision, but they certainly do not point to the scale's turning in Russia's favor. It remains to be seen whether either army kept large reserves ready to throw in when it becomes apparent that the forces engaged have become exhausted." In this connection Wilkinson alludes to the report current last week that the Japanese had a strong force west of the Hun river, and says if the Japanese could utilize such a force now it would probably force the retreat of the whole Russian army.

Report From Kuropatkin

St. Petersburg, Oct. 14.—General Kuropatkin reports that during the fighting Wednesday and yesterday the advance troops were reinforced from the principal positions; that last evening the left wing was ordered to fall back on the main position and that about 2 p. m. the centre also was obliged to fall back. The report does not mention the fighting on the right wing.

Money Lost by Sunday Closing

St. Louis, Oct. 14.—President Francis declared, in a public speech delivered before the American Street Railway association, that the World's Fair has lost at least $1,000,000 through being compelled to close on Sunday.

Seven Thousand Tons.

The shipments of granite from the several railroad terminals for the month of September amounted to 14,005,190 pounds, a decrease of 238,400 pounds from the previous month. Of the amount shipped in September, West Quincy forwarded 5,834,920 pounds; South Quincy 4,903,300 pounds, and the Quarry railroad 4,271,970 pounds.

Team Matches.

Some of the best golf playing of the season is expected today on the Wollaston links when medal play team matches are scheduled. Three strong teams from Harvard are entered, and two from Oakley and two from the Wollaston club. The gross aggregate of each team will count.

Reception.

Bishop Anson Graves, of Laramine, Neb., will be given a reception this evening at the home of Hollis G. Rogers 150 Grand View avenue, Wollaston, 8 to 10 o'clock. Bishop Graves came here to attend the Episcopal convention at Boston and has been staying at the home of Mr. Rogers, who recently moved here from Nebraska, and is a relative.

Big Steamships.

Two Cunard steamships are building that will far surpass the Baltic. They will measure 760 feet in length, 88 feet beam, and will have 32,000 tons displacement, and will be fitted with turbine engines. They are intended to have a sustained speed of 25 knots; the record for ocean speed being now held by the North German Lloyd steamship Kaiser Wilhelm II at about 23 1-2 knots. But already the Germans have laid the keel of a craft at Stettin that shall be bigger and faster than these British boats will be.

Semi Finals Today.

Two Massachusetts women have won their way to the semi finals for the United States golf championship at Philadelphia. The card today is:

Miss Pauline Mackay, Oakley, vs. Mrs. E. F. Sanford, Essex County C. C. (Orange, N. J.)

Miss K. C. Harley, Fall River, vs. Miss Georgianna Bishop, Brooklawn C. C.

—Nose corsets in three sizes have been introduced in France. By means of this ingenious contrivance women, it is claimed, may gradually change the shape of their noses, the most determined snub being converted into a graceful aquiline.

WILL BE A CANDIDATE.

Principal Assessor James Thompson in the Field For Mayor.

James Thompson, the principal assessor, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor. His candidacy was formally announced at the meeting of the Republican City Committee on Thursday evening.

It is not understood that the committee is pledged to his support, and there was very little comment concerning his candidacy before adjournment, but after adjournment there was an informal talk among those present relative to the most available candidate.

It is said that recent criticism of Mr. Thompson, that he was pledged to reappoint certain City Hall officials, did the gentleman an injustice. The fact that these officials have endeavored to get other gentlemen to become candidates points that way.

Mr. Thompson was a candidate of the Republicans for the mayoralty several years ago and was defeated by Hon. William A. Hodges by 361 votes. That was in 1893. The only ward to give a Republican majority that year was the Wollaston ward and the total vote was:

Hodges,	1747
Thompson,	1386
Blanks	62

Since that year the city has become strongly Republican, and Mr. Thompson has also been prominent in city affairs, so that that vote need not be a bugaboo at this time.

The committee made arrangements for the caucuses in connection with the City election, and the filing of nomination papers.

A. G. Dolliver is chairman of the Republican City Committee this year, and the members elected by wards at the city caucus of 1903 were:

Ward One,—Edward Johnson, William T. Isaac, A. W. Stetson, A. F. MacLeod, Otto Gelotte, A. G. Dolliver and George Westland

Ward Two,—Melville C. Holmes, Arthur Sampson, Rollin H. Newcomb, George A. Sidelinger, Eugene R. Stone, Edwin W. Newcomb.

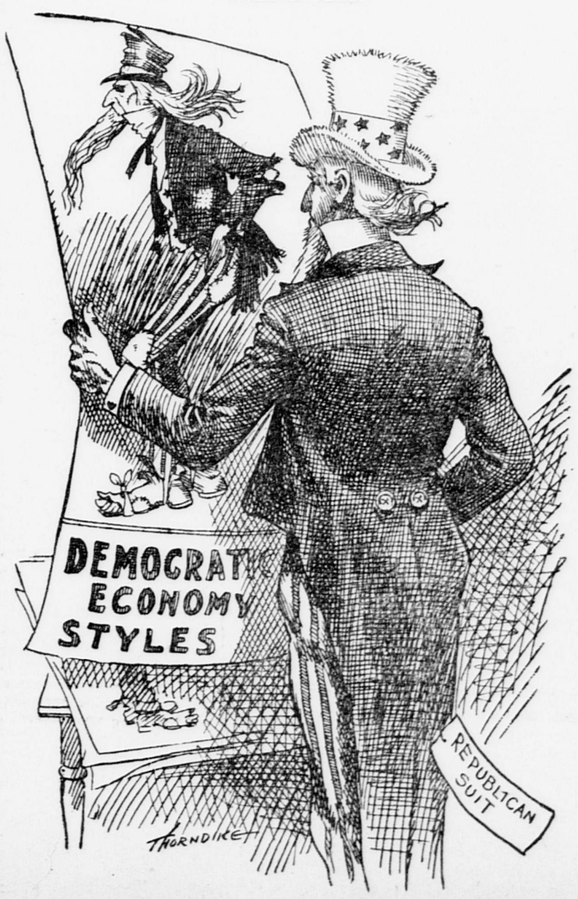

Ward Three,—Frank L. Carlton, Alfred O. Diack, John Kennedy, Harry S. Nicol, Walter E. Piper, John G. Roberts and Thomas W. Smith.

Ward Four,—James F. Allen, Andrew Anderson, Hiram W. Campbell, Per Person, Edward J. Sandberg, Alexander Shirley and William H. Teasdale.

Ward Five,—William M. Chase, Henry O. Fairbanks, Richard R. Freeman, George S. Baker, Albert W. Fay, Herbert J. Gurney, Walter S. Pinkham.

Ward Six,—Daniel McGrath, Ralph W. Hobbs, Roger H. Wilde, Herbert D. Gearwar, Louis F. R. Langelier, Elwyn R. Thorpe and Arthur C. Beal.

MORE BUILDING.

Great Secrecy About Work on Submarines.

Contracts from Russia and Japan.

Rumors That U. S. Shipyards Are Building Eighty.

A Washington dispatch to the New York Sun reports that several more submarine boats are being built at the Quincy shipyard and in other shipyards of the United States. It says:

It is learned here that the Westbound train wrecked near Minot, N. D., and found to have on board the dismantled sections of two submarine torpedo boats, was merely a part of 23 carloads of submarine boat sections which have been shipped from the works of the Fore River Ship and Engine Company, at Quincy, Mass., and which are destined for the Japanese navy.

Thirty submarine boats are now building in this country for the Russian navy, and it has been believed that the Japanese government had also placed an order with an American shipbuilding concern, some time ago. This was not definitely known until yesterday, however, when it was learned on the highest authority that the order placed by Russia with American firms for 30 submarines of the protector type, had been immediately followed by Japan with an order for 50 submarines of the Holland class.

About one-third of the large order was placed with the Fore River Company, and nine submarines were recently completed, tested and crated for shipment. The nine vessels were packed in 23 freight cars of the largest type, and it was a portion of this order which was wrecked at Minot, N. D., Tuesday.

Officials at the Fore River company are convinced that the wrecking of the train was not an accident, and that the probabilities are that it was the work of Russian sympathizers, or possibly paid spies of the Russian secret service. Armed guards will be sent with the next consignment of vessels from the Fore River yard, and special precautions will be taken to prevent a repetition of the wreck incident.

The submarines destined for the Russian government are being built at various shipyards, in some cases side by side with other craft of a somewhat similar type under construction for Japan. A shipment of submarines of the Protector type was recently made from the Newport News Ship Building Company to New York, whence they will be shipped direct to Russian territory.

Newport News Shipment.

A Newport News dispatch of Oct. 13 to the Herald says:

Preparations for the shipment of two of the five submarine boats building here for the Lake Submarine Boat Company of Bridgeport are completed. The engines and machinery have been packed and placed on a flat car in the shipyard. The vessels themselves are built in two sections, and the hulls may be separated in the centre to facilitate handling. Where the boats are going and whether they will be transferred to a steamer or to freight cars still is a mystery. The other three boats will be completed in a few weeks.

Doubts as to Wreck.

There is much speculation, says the Boston Advertiser, as to the whereabouts of the submarines built by the Fore River company. It is reported that the train carrying these boats in dismantled sections was wrecked at Minot, N. D., but at the agencies of the railroad companies whose roads run into Minot no report of any wreck had been received. From all that has been said, the inference is that the submarines have not yet been shipped. It is also a carefully guarded secret as to what railway line will carry this merchandise.

Drift of Opinion.

Somebody must have been mistaken when they proposed that law requiring candidates to file returns of their nomination expenses. None of the candidates appear to have spent any money for their caucus honors this year. Perhaps the Luce caucus law has worked out the reform. — Haverhill Gazette.

Much sentiment fills the columns of periodicals devoted to philanthropic work. It is a profound conviction of the writer that sentiment and emotion which do not take shape in outward action are as harmful as a boiler-full of steam with no piston rod to move. The emotion spends itself in wearing out one's sensibility, and lessens the power to act effectively.—The Sea Breeze.

Probably the party managers know their business; but in our opinion the campaign literature has about as much effect upon the voters as so much chaff. A good rousing campaign speech with music and fireworks is the sort of waking up which lukewarm voters require to get them into line and spur them up to their duty at the polls. The average voter does not care to wade through long-winded arguments or speeches, but prefers listening to the fiery orators as they present their side of the story, and come in touch with their fellow citizens at political gatherings.—Gloucester Times.

Should a man be admitted to congress who has said on the stump that the assassination of the President of the United States would be a good thing. Heflin is apparently just a little more of a hoodlum than Tillman of South Carolina and Vardaman of Mississippi. These men do their section and the Democratic party great harm by their efforts to stir up race prejudice and to increase homicide. If such men are to remain "in the saddle" in the south, Senator Bacon of Georgia and the more conservative leaders will find that their protests against "a solid north" will be of little avail.—Hartford Times, Democratic.

The Boston Herald warns the people in Boston who have entered upon another game of "tossing coppers" that some of the coppers are hot and may burn somebody's fingers. The advice is good, but it will doubtless be wasted. The love of gambling in some form or other is inherent in the breasts of many citizens, and they cannot be warned away from speculation even in the most dangerous and uncertain stocks, any more than they can be warned away from playing cards for money or swapping horses. The ordinary citizen of the world has a strong belief in his own perspicacity and shrewdness and ability to beat any combination in business that is stacked up against him, and he is likely to think that he can play the copper market with success and beat the fellows who are running the game from the inside.—Brockton Enterprise.

Citizens of Massachusetts, turn from that despairing utterance delivered amid the mixed scenery of comedy and tragedy on the stage of Boston theatre to the clear, plain figures of the reports of the bureau of labor, the savings banks and railroad commissioners, and you will see a commonwealth 94 per cent. of whose wage earners are happily employed at a higher average wage than ever before—a commonwealth whose vast industries are increasing and whose people have more money per capita in the savings banks, travel more and enjoy more comforts than any other people in the world. It is a state of fair renown, one that, because of its humane labor conditions, its atmosphere of liberty and spirit of enterprise has attracted men to it of every race; a commonwealth that gives every promise that, with a continuance of the Republican administration and policies under which it has grown great, its future will not be less bright than its past.—Governor Bates.

Brutal Murder of Woman In Street of Charlottetown

HEAD ALMOST SEVERED

Had Been Battered In With Axe Found at Scene of Crime--Ex-Convict From Boston Suspected as the Perpetrator

Charlotteown, P. E. I., Oct. 14.—During the height of a terrific wind and rainstorm, and in the inky darkness last night, a shocking murder was committed on one of the public streets of this city. The victim was Miss Lillian Warren, aged 40 years, whose body, lying in a pool of blood, was stumbled across by some persons proceeding homeward. Her head was almost severed and life had been extinct for some time.

Soon after the discovery of the murder William Power, who is supposed to have been recently in the state prison at Charlestown, Mass., was arrested by the police on suspicion of having committed the crime. The murder is one of the most brutal in the annals of this province, the excitement is great and the feeling against the prisoner is intense.

On account of the storm, the streets were almost deserted and the crime was not discovered until a long time after it had been committed. Some persons passing along Pownall street saw an object lying in a half crouching position on the ground and on advancing toward it found it to be a woman. They tried to arouse her, but failed, and on lighting a match a ghastly sight met their gaze, the woman's head being battered in, and the neck almost severed in twain, while a blood-stained axe beside the body told the story of the horrible deed.

The scene of the crime was only a short distance from the city hospital and not more than 200 yards from the jail. The woman's clothing indicated that she had made a desperate fight before death and evidently did not give up the struggle until felled by blows from the axe. The body was removed to the city hospital and the coroner and police were at once notified.

The police at once were suspicious of Power, who had been seen early in the evening lurking about the neighborhood, and as his character was known to be not of the best they at once sought him. He was found at the residence of a relative and arrested. It is said that blood spots were discovered on his clothing. The prisoner only arrived here Tuesday night from Boston, and it was reported in this city that he had been serving a term in the Massachusetts state prison.

Miss Warren was a seamstress, and she was not seen alive after leaving her place of employment at 7 o'clock last night. The police have so far been unable to find any motive for the crime. Miss Warren bore an excellent reputation, and as far as known had no previous acquaintance with Power.

The victim could not have made any great outcry or the hospital officials or police would have heard it.

At midnight the police arrested Henry Palmer, who is thought to know something about the crime. Another report says that it was in the state asylum in Massachusetts that Power was confined. He came here on the steamer Halifax last Tuesday night.

Well Treated by Britishers

Gravesend, Eng., Oct. 14.—The officers of the American European squadron were the guests at a dinner of the Welsh regiment here last night. Rear Admiral Jewell made a speech, in which he repudiated the statement that he and his fellow-officers had received scant attention in England. On the contrary, he said, they had received more marks of consideration than they could possibly have expected.

Minister Charged With Fraud

Pittsburg, Oct. 14.—Homer L. McKinney of Freeport, a Methodist minister, was arrested by postoffice inspectors on the charge of using the mails to defraud. McKinney, it is alleged, under the aliases of "Mary Robbins" and "Anna Hull," secured various sums of money from matrimonially inclined men throughout the United States, who thought they were corresponding with women.

Steamer Call Not Wrecked

Halifax, Oct. 14.—Conclusive evidence from Prince Edward Island shows that the steamer Call, which had been reported lost in Saturday's gale with 19 people on board, is safe at New London. The mythical story of the wreck caused great excitement to friends of those connected with the boat.

Hotel to Cost Ten Millions

Chicago, Oct. 14.—The News says that Chicago is to have the largest hotel in the world. It will cost $10,000,000, be 22 stories high and dwarf in size and magnificence, it is promised, any structure of the kind ever erected. The hotel will stand on Michigan avenue.

On Bottom of Boat For Eight Hours

New York, Oct. 14.—A man named Pallson was drowned and his companion, John Lynn, had a narrow escape from death when a small boat capsized in New York bay. Lynn clung to the bottom of the boat for eight hours before being rescued.

KING'S BROTHER HURT

Duke of Connaught Has Close Shave In Auto Accident

Edinburgh, Oct. 14.—The Duke of Connaught, brother of King Edward, while driving in a motor car from Edinburg, had a narrow escape from death and suffered painful injuries, from which he was for a time unconscious.

The automobile in which the duke was riding with his aid-de-camp, Major Murray, in passing a street car, collided with a cart. The overhanging portion of the cart struck the rear seat of the automobile and literally carried away that section of the vehicle.

The duke was thrown out with great force. As soon as the automobile could be stopped, Murray went to the aid of the duke, whom he found unconscious and bleeding from wounds about the head. A second automobile, carrying members of the duke's suite, came up and the duke was taken back to Edinburgh in it. By the time the automobile reached Edinburgh the duke had recovered and was able to walk into his hotel, where physicians took two stitches in the duke's ear. Major Murray was not hurt.

Eloping Couple Died Together

Richmond, Oct. 14.—Miss Bessie Stone and Robert Gill, who eloped from Ashland Tuesday, were found dead with their hands clasped near a pond in that vicinity last evening by a searching party. A bullet hole in the head of each told the story of supposed double suicide or murder and suicide. Miss Stone left a letter for her parents in which she asked that she be buried in the same grave with her lover, a request which, it is understood, will be complied with. Young Gill also left a letter.

Trying to Trace $5000 In Checks

Winsted, Conn., Oct. 14.—The Washington authorities have sent an official here to investigate the loss of two letters containing checks valued at about $5000. The letters were mailed at station A and were addressed to the First National bank and were from the Hurlburt National bank. Since they were deposited in the postoffice nothing has been seen of them. The letters should have been taken to station B in a mail wagon, but never reached that station, according to the bank officials.

Essen's Life Threatened

New York, Oct. 14.—George J. Essig, the complaining witness in the extortion charges against Philip Weinseimer, is protected by a guard of county detectives. Essig says that shortly after Weinseimer's indictment he received threatening letters and since his testimony of Tuesday against Weinseimer, more letters have been received. About three weeks ago he was seriously assaulted by three strange men near his home.

Profitable American Trip

Dublin, Oct. 14.—John E. Redmond arrived here last night from his American tour. Addressing a meeting of the United Irish league, he emphasized the unexpected success that had attended his visit to America. He said he believed there was nothing the Irish party could not ask from America so long as they avoided dissension and pursued a sensible policy in pressing towards the great goal of independence.

Labor Convention Adjourns

Lynn, Mass., Oct. 14.—The state branch of the American Federation of Labor brought its convention to a close yesterday, voting to meet in Pittsfield next year. FUTURE OF THE PHILIPPINES

Republican Success Guarantees the Welfare of the Island Peoples.

When the presidential election is over and the status of the Philippines is more certain, if the danger of tyranny and chaos following our retirement or the disturbance of peace by any promise of independence has been obviated, millions of capital will flow to the islands to develop their great resources. The Republicans have made no declaration as to future independence, but the Democrats have promised it. The former left the question of the future relation of the islands to our government to a time when it can be better decided, refusing to listen to the theories of the inexperienced and following the advice of those who have on the spot sought to solve the problem. Having the responsibility of government the administration is content with governing the islands well, teaching the natives by example the art of government and permitting them to participate in the conduct of their affairs so far as they are capable. This gives the conservatives a sense of security and prevents the radicals from being agitated by a pledge of independence that cannot be near at hand. It brings peace with its accompanying good order.

We have only made the beginning, but it is highly creditable. Further legislation is required to encourage commerce and to carry out the plans of development. We seem to have begun well, but we may have erred and should, perhaps, have followed the British policy. So far, however, there is nothing to indicate that we have erred or to warrant us in departing from the ideal of the "Philippines for the Filipinos," which guides our present work in the far Pacific.

WHY A PROTECTIONIST?

Reasons Given For Their Faith by Prominent Publicists.

Hon. D. B. Henderson, former speaker of the house of representatives:

"First.—Because the civilized world substantially protects itself, thus forcing us to protect ourselves.

"Second.—Because all the conditions of men and of women in this country are better than in other countries, and protection is needed to preserve our happier conditions.

"Third.—Because I want labor to get the best possible wages for its efforts.

"Fourth.—Because I want agriculture to find a near, sure and rich market.

"Fifth.—Because I want to keep the capital and labor of this country all actively employed, each helping the other."

The late Hon. George F. Hoar, United States senator from Massachusetts:

"I am a protectionist because I think by that policy the workmen of America will be well paid and not underpaid.

"Because I think by that policy the variety of industry will be created here which will make America strong in peace and in war.

"Because the industries so fostered will develop the skill and brain power of my countrymen and raise the people of the United States to the first rank in intelligence among the nations of the earth.

"Because that policy has already made us the richest and strongest nation on earth, and under a properly restricted immigration will bring to us much that is most valuable in the population of other lands."

—The popular cry is now for submarines, being the latest thing in naval construction. But these amphibious craft have their drawbacks. The other day the Shark took it into her head to go to the bottom, in one hundred feet of water, near Brenton's Reef lightship, and it was forty minutes before Leiutenant Nelson and his men could persuade her to come to the surface.

A NOVEL CEREMONY

Douglas Is Invested With Democratic Leadership

HIS FORMAL ACCEPTANCE

Subscribes to Democratic State and National Doctrines, Paying Particular Attention to Tariff and Reciprocity

Brockton, Mass., Oct. 14.—William L. Douglas was formally notified yesterday afternoon that he was the choice of the recent Democratic state convention for governor of the commonwealth; and he as formally signified his acceptance of the place at the head of the Democratic state ticket in the coming election. The ceremony was a departure from what has been the custom in Massachusetts. Heretofore it has been the usage in both parties to notify the candidate immediately after the declaration of the ballot, whereupon he has usually appeared before the convention and delivered his speech of acceptance.

The formal notification exercises took place in the City theatre. The auditorium was crowded, many citizens of Brockton turning out to see the visitors, witness the ceremony, and honor their fellow townsman.

In accepting the nomination Mr. Douglas said in part: I most cordially indorse the attitude of the Democratic party, as expressed in its state and national platforms and by its candidate for president, on the Philippine question. The government of an alien people without their consent is not the proper business of our republic. Moreover, viewed from a commercial standpoint simply, our experiment in those islands has proven most costly and unwise. We should treat the Filipinos with the same consideration shown to the Cubans. I am heartily in favor of a larger measure of home rule for our cities and towns. I favor election of United States senators by direct vote of the people and a just reapportionment of the legislative and senatorial districts. I am opposed to extravagance and in favor of strict economy and retrenchment in all governmental affairs.

The most important issue in this country this year is that of the tariff. In my opinion the Dingley tariff is entirely too high not only for the welfare of the consuming public, but for the manufacturers as a class. The protected "infant industries" of today are giants that get the lion's share of the tariff bonus and then show their appreciation by intimidating and oppressing ordinary manufacturers and by selling their tariff-protected wares in unprotected foreign markets at prices two-thirds or three-fourths as high as those charged at home. In my opinion, the American consumers, who pay the tariff taxes that go to swell the profits of these trusts, should be the most favored customers of these giant paupers. Our own people are entitled to any bargain-counter prices that our protected trusts may have to offer.

It is because Massachusetts is partly cut off from the rest of the country and is, by protected trusts, deprived of the cheap raw materials to which she is fairly entitled, as one of the states composing our union, that her more intelligent and enterprising citizens are now agitating for reciprocity with Canada and other countries. She is unwilling to further sacrifice her industries upon the altar of protection, and is asking her representatives in congress not to forget her interests.

The greatest of our manufacturing industries is that of boots and shoes, with a product for 1903 of $159,247,529. The value of stock used was $100,300,514, tariff taxed at $9,900,000, or 10 per cent. Nearly of this tariff tax goes to the beef trust by virtue of the 15 percent duty on hides, and to the leather trust by virtue of the 20 percent duty on leather. There were about 110,000,000 pairs of boots and shoes made in Massachusetts in 1903, the average manufacturing cost a pair was about $1.44 and the average tax about 9 cents a pair. The saving of this tariff tax by the reciprocal trade treaties or otherwise would enable us to greatly increase our output and to give steadier employment to labor. The saving to the 3,000,000 people of Massachusetts in the cost of shoes would be nearly $1,000,000. Speaking for myself, I would gladly give up the duty of 25 percent on shoes to obtain free hides and free sole leather. I could produce shoes at as low cost as any manufacturer in any foreign country and meet the competition of the world. Cheap labor is not cheap. It is dear when effectiveness is considered. It is the high cost of materials that bars us from foreign markets.

Recently, and especially since 60,000 Republican voters in Massachusetts have signed the reciprocity petition circulated by the Chamber of Commerce, a few Republican leaders have become timid advocates of a meaningless reciprocity in non-competing products. The Republicans of Massachusetts have reluctantly, and to a very limited extent, pronounced in favor of reciprocity. They are not in accord with their national organization. It is far more likely that the voice of Massachusetts will be heeded by the Republicans at Washington should it go Democratic this year and become a doubtful state.

INTERESTS OF LABOR

Churches Urged to Exercise More Influence In Problem

Boston, Oct. 14.—There was a public meeting in Faneuil hall last night under the auspices of "The Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor." Rev. F. J. C. Moran of New York told of the work done by the association in connection with the sweat system and "open shop" in New York, after which he stated that he was satisfied that for the health of the public, for good hours and good wages, the closed shop was essential to the tailoring trade.

Rev. Dr. Peters of New York said that the church ought to be interested in labor problems and that practical work could be done effectively only through organization. The trade unions he believed to be strong mediums for bringing about the brotherhood of men. He urged the clergy to exhibit a more active interest in labor problems.

Bishop Brent of the Philippines aroused applause by this declaration: "If the closed shop means the exclusion of child labor and a fair wage for a fair day's work, there is not a single one of our cloth who does not subscribe to it."

Resolutions were adopted calling upon capital and labor to employ first in labor difficulties that conciliation which is in the interests of peace, and that in case of failure to evolve some authoritative system of arbitration.

Changed a Confederate Bill

Boston, Oct. 14.—Ludwig Kopp of Manchester, N. H., came to Boston and before he had been long in the city he met a stranger who was most persuasive in conversation. They went together to a restaurant near the North station, and after their meal was over the newly found acquaintance started to pay the charges. He had only a $100 bill, which the cashier couldn't change. Kopp wanted to be accommodating, changed the bill, and a little later sought a policeman with a confederate $100 bill and a tale of woe.

Beyond Reach of Aid

Chatham, Mass., Oct. 14.—A terrific sea, the result of a three days' northeaster, drove onto Chatham outer bar at 8 o'clock last night an unknown three-masted schooner, which the life savers were unable to reach, and which they fear will go to pieces. The vessel had lights in the cabin when she struck the bar, but the life savers were unable to get any response to their hails, nor any answers to their signals.

Charged With Perjury

Boston, Oct. 14.—Walter P. Chapin was arraigned here on an indictment warrant charging perjury in two counts. It is alleged that Chapin appeared before Bail Commissioner Scigliano and gave bonds of $4000 for Abraham Parnes. Chapin swore he owned property valued at $6000, but this statement is alleged to be false. He was remanded to jail in $6000 bonds to await trial.

Admits Theft of Wool

Providence, Oct. 14.—W. L. Truesdell, who was accused by Charles F. Fenner, recently arrested in Worcester, charged with receiving stolen goods, of being the sender of wool stolen from the Spring Lake mills in Washington, R. I., pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing wool valued at $1700 from Albert H. Estes. He was released on bail.

To Aid Fall River Strikers

New London, Conn., Oct. 14.—The Connecticut Federation of Labor endorsed the cause of the striking textile workers at Fall River, and appropriated $200 to assist the strikers. The delegates were also instructed to secure such other assistance as could be given.

Suicide With Deadly Acid

Wallingford, Conn., Oct. 14.—Mrs. Florence Rima swallowed a large dose of carbolic acid last night on the steps of the Wallingford hotel and died a few moments later. She was but 26 years old and worked with her husband at the town farm. Despondency is said to have been the cause.

Can't Agree as to Divorce

Boston, Oct. 14.—During a two hours' debate on the divorce question by the house of deputies of the Episcopal general convention both sides appeared to be as far apart as ever and predictions are freely made that no final action will be taken at this time.

For $40,000 Missionary Fund

New Haven, Oct. 14.—Missionary tidings from other lands were given to the delegates at the closing session of the New England branch of the Women's Foreign Missionary society, and the branch voted to raise $40,000 the coming year for the cause.

Poolroom Keeper Punished

New Haven, Oct. 14.—John A. McKee, a bookseller of this city, pleaded guilty to the charge of keeping a poolroom in which gaming was done contrary to law, and was sentenced to the county jail for two months and fined $150 on each of six counts.

Killed In Sewer Trench

Waterbury, Vt., Oct. 14.—Edward Farrar, 60 years old, while superintending the construction of a sewer was in a trench 15 feet deep, when the earth caved in on top of him. Before the workmen succeeded in reaching Farrar he was dead.

Firebug at York Beach

York, Me., Oct. 14.—The third fire within a week at York beach has aroused the property owners there and watchmen have been engaged to patrol the district night and day. Owners believe all three fires were the work of an incendiary.

Makes a National Issue of "Government by Injunction"

Wheeling, Oct. 14.—David B. Hill injected a new argument into the Democratic campaign here last night—a straightforward condemnation of "government by injunction"—and the demand for a law granting a jury trial to persons held in contempt of court for the violation of a restraining order of a federal judge. The Democratic national platform sustains this position, although in guarded terms.

Wheeling was selected by Hill as the place to emphasize and make a national issue of this point, because of its varied industries giving employment to artisans of many vocations and also because the injunction has been used here in labor disputes in a number of instances.

The announcement, which was accompanied by a full explanation, was greeted with tremendous applause. Mr. Hill recited the history of the use of the injunction in labor disputes and the difficulty of finding an adequate remedy. He told of introducing and securing the passage of a bill through the senate in 1896 to this end. He then recited the Republican opposition in the house of representatives since that time, which was the ground for making the question a party issue to be called to the front at this time. He declared that a man had the right to quit work when and where he pleased.

"The position of the Democratic party upon this subject is right," he concluded. "A Democratic national victory will mean the enactment of the measure mentioned, and 'government by injunction,' as here explained, will no longer exist."

Another new point as a Democratic argument was also made by Mr. Hill, the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.

Ratification by Tammany

New York, Oct. 14.—Tammany ratified the national, state and city Democratic tickets last night at a meeting in Tammany hall and four out-of-door overflow meetings. Congressman Harrison, candidate for the lieutenant governorship, said that everywhere he has seen the signs of a great moral awakening and he believed the people of the state, fired with civic righteousness, were going to arise and bring back a Democratic administration.

Fairbanks' Long Tour Ended

Chicago, Oct. 14.—Senator Fairbanks returned to Chicago last evening from his campaign tour to the Pacific coast. The trip began at Chicago and has occupied 20 days. The distance travelled was 6396 miles. Fourteen states were traversed, 111 speeches made and no material accident or delay occurred to mar the success of the tour.

For International Peace

Pittsburg, Oct. 14.—Amid much enthusiasm there was founded here last night a society for the promulgation of the doctrine of international arbitration and universal peace. From many representative men came ringing endorsement of the movement. There were also messages of endorsement from President Roosevelt, Secretary Hay and Andrew Carnegie.

Dying Man Exonerated Shooter

Lebanon, Pa., Oct. 14.—Patrick Candlin, aged 23, of Worcester, Mass., the soldier who was shot at Mt. Gretna by a fellow soldier through the accidental discharge of a revolver, died last evening. Before dying, Candlin made a statement exonerating the comrade who shot him, saying it was an accident. The soldier will be court martialled.

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 14.—A special train, consisting of an engine and one coach, arrived here from Saltillo, carrying H. L. Cooper, a New York millionaire, to the bedside of his son, who is dangerously ill here. An average of 75 miles an hour was maintained during the run of 244 miles.

THE FRONT SEAT.

Is It Worth a Conflict Between the Husband and Wife?

Without inviting discussion of this thorny question, I may say that my own opinion is—supposing anybody wants it—that a husband's rights are what he can get. My view of a wife's rights is the same. Whether it is wise for either party to get all that he or she can is a question of expediency to be decided according to circumstances and individual inclination. The governing principle of the situation is that when two people ride the same horse one must ride behind. If both desire to ride in front, either one must give way or they must fight it out. In this fight one or the other may be so knocked about as to have no heart left for the enjoyment of the front seat, or the weaker vessel, while resigning himself to the back seat, may yet make the front one so uncomfortable that the occupier's life is a misery to him.

The question, therefore, whenever a conflict of rights arises is whether the front seat is worth fighting about, and, if so, how long and how hard. Some people prefer the back seat. Many who would take the front for choice would rather give it up than have a row about it. They don't always lose so much as you might think. Mr. Weller the elder, when his wife broke his pipe, stepped out and bought another, and a great man was of opinion that this, if not philosophy, was "a very good substitute for it."—Henry Labouchere in London Truth.

THE TWO HEADED EAGLE.

Origin of the Custom of Its Use as a National Symbol.

Austria and Russia today use the two headed eagle as one of their symbols. The origin of the custom is clouded more or less in obscurity. Professor A. H. Sayce, the authority on eastern antiquities, traces the travels of the symbol from primitive Babylonia down to the present time. In describing an ancient block of sculptured stone found in the east Professor Sayce says: "The block bears upon the inner side the figure of a double headed eagle, with an animal believed to be a hare in either talon and a man standing on its twofold head. The same double headed figure, supporting the figure of a man or a god, is met with at Boghaz Keni and must be regarded as one of the peculiarities of Hittite symbolism and art. The symbol, whose prototype goes back to primitive Babylonia, was adopted in later days by the Turcoman princes, who had perhaps first seen it on the Hittite monuments of Cappadocia, and the crusaders brought it to Europe with them in the fourteenth century. Here it became the emblem of the German emperors, who have passed it on to the modern kingdoms of Russia and Austria. It is not the only heirloom of Hittite art which has descended to us of today."

Moltke Was a Spy In France.

Was the late Marshal von Moltke ever employed as a spy in France? A writer in La Vie Contemporaine says he was. In 1868, says the writer in question, Count von Moltke entered France in disguise and inspected the frontier of the Rhine and the lines of Wissemburg. In particular he made a study of the defenses of Forbach and Spicheren. There is always, according to the same authority, a regular espionage department connected with the German army. It is a bureau, with a general at the head of it. It comprises three sections, at the head of each of which is a colonel. Each colonel has under him a certain number of officers of the general staff and clerks. The officers in this service are selected with the greatest care from among the most capable and distinguished men in the service.

His Mistake.

"What is the matter with our candidate?" asks the first politician. "He wires me that he is too ill to speak tonight."

"He made a mistake," explains the second politician. "Inadvertently he smoked one of the cigars he had bought to hand out to the voters."

CLUB FOR WORKMEN.

A Harvester Company's Plan to Benefit Its Employees.

CHEAP MEALS WILL BE SERVED.

Handsomest and Most Complete Building of Its Kind In the United States Is to Be Erected In Chicago. Will Contain Several Attractive Features.

Philanthropy of the kind that abhors almsgiving and sees in the physical and moral improvement of employees a direct business benefit is embodied in the $75,000 men's clubhouse for which ground has been broken in Chicago by the McCormick branch of the International Harvester company. When the structure is thrown open to the 6,000 employees of the corporation next December it will be the handsomest and most complete building of its kind in the United States, says the Chicago American.

In 180 by 70 feet of area the building's three stories and basement will contain all the atractive features that were deemed advisable after a correspondence that covered the world in a hunt for ideas.

The structure will face on Blue Island avenue at the end of the car line. The most space for any one purpose in the building has been devoted to the kitchen, serving room and dining rooms, in which 300 persons can be comfortably seated at one time on its 40 by 60 feet of floor. These rooms will be on the first or ground floor, and meals will be served there at cost.

From 4 to 11 cents each is the estimated cost of the meals that will be offered the toilers at noon and after their day's work is finished. The idea is that there should be economy in the preparation of a large number of meals at the clubhouse in comparison with the total cost in time and materials when the lunches are prepared separately at homes or by boarding house keepers.

The dining room will be two stories high and so arranged that it can be easily converted into a meeting hall or theater. At one end will be footlights and a stage, where entertainers can find ample space or amateur actors can present dramas for home audiences.

The same floor will also contain reading, living, billiard, game and office rooms. The finishing is to be in red oak, with white maple floors. Every room will have a large brick fireplace. Bowling alleys and shower baths, with a plunge bath, as well as the heating plant, will be located in the basement. On the second floor will be four large rooms suitable for meetings or instruction of night classes.

The officials of the McCormick Harvester company intend to provide teachers for a variety of subjects and to encourage their employees to add to their education. On the top floor are two large rooms where it is intended to offer manual training for those who wish to acquire a technical or specialized knowledge outside of the "rut" of ordinary labor.

The walls will be composed of brick, and the sills will be of stone, the whole presenting a handsome appearance. Over the ornamental entrance will appear the title "Men's Club."

The hope and expectation of the stockholders and officials whose money is going into this building are that it will prove a magnet to draw the employees from saloons and other places of resort where waste of money and weariness of flesh are the penalties that add to loss of time.

Both the women and men employees of the company are enthusiastic advocates of the clubhouse, although it has been planned primarily for the use of the men toilers alone. However, there will be many special occasions when the women will be welcomed, and they will find pleasant and ample rooms for their sole use.

STARVE THEM OUT!

Why not starve the germs to death? Scott's Emulsion will do it.

The germs of consumption are an invading army numbering millions upon millions; they must all be fed or they will soon die of starvation. A lung a little below "par" in vitality is just to their liking.

Why not put new life into it? Scott's Emulsion feeds the lungs. It fills the blood with nourishing food for all the weak parts. Good food means life. Life means resistive force.

Germs cannot live on healthy tissue. Scott's Emulsion and good fresh air drive out the germs of consumption.

Harvest Supper.

The harvest supper which was held at the Quincy Point church Thursday evening was well attended. The vestry was tastefully decorated with oak and maple boughs and vines. The supper consisted of corned shoulder, corned beef, cabbage, turnips, squash, beets, parsnips, carrots, potatoes, coffee, rolls, mince, squash, custard, pumpkin and apple pies, and baked indian pudding.

A social time followed the supper, with the sale of vegetables and fruits. No comment on the supper is necessary for the suppers which the Ladies' Aid Society give always speak for themselves.

Sudden Death.

Karl Roosval died suddenly at his boarding house at 29 Town hill last night. Mr. Roosval, who is a house painter, returned home sick in the afternoon and died in the evening. His death was due to drinking wood alcohol. The cause of his death as given by the Medical Examiner is poison caused by drinking intentionally wood alcohol. He was 54 years of age and is said to have a family in Finland.

Hypnotic Exhibition.

Although the weather was rather unfavorable there was a good attendance at Hancock hall last evening to witness the hypnotist tests of Prof. Charles Franklin. He had perfect control over his subjects and their actions while under his influence was very laughable.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition.

CHAPTER XII.

SUCH a blaze of light as was the governor's mansion house that night I never saw, and I heard the music of violins and hautboys and viola da gambas coming from within, and a silvery babble of women's tongues, with a deeper undertone of men's, and the tread of dancing feet and the stamping of horses outside, with the whoas of the negro boys in attendance, and through the broad gleam of the moonlight came the flare and smoke of the torches. It seemed as if the whole colony was either dancing at the governor's ball or standing outside on tiptoe with interest.

I sat waiting for some time holding my restive horse as best I might, but there coming no cessation in the music, I dismounted, and seeing one of Madam Cavendish's black men, gave him the bridle to hold and went up to the house and entered, though not in my plum colored velvet, and indeed being not only in my ordinary clothes, but somewhat splashed with mire from my mad gallop through the woods. But I judged rightly that in so much of a crowd I should pass unnoticed both as to myself and my apparel. I stood in the great room near the door and watched the dance, and 'twas as brilliant a scene as ever I had seen anywhere even in England. The musicians in the gallery were sawing away for their lives on violins and working breathlessly at the hautboys and all that gay company of Virginia's best spinning about in a country dance of old England. Such a brave show of velvet coats and breeches and flowered brocade waistcoats and powdered wigs and feathers and laces and ribbons and rich flaunts of petticoats revealing in the whirl of the dance clocked hose on slender ankles and high heeled satin shoes would have done no discredit to the court.

But of them all Mistress Mary Cavendish was the belle and the star. She was dancing with my Lord Estes when I entered, and such a goodly couple they were that I heard many an exclamation of delight from the spectators who stood thickly about the walls, the windows even being filled with faces of black and white servants. My Lord Estes was a handsome, dark man, handsomer and older than Sir Humphrey Hyde, who, though dancing with the governor's daughter Cate, had, I could see, a rueful eye of watchfulness toward Mary Cavendish.

As he and Cate Culpeper swung past me, Sir Humphrey's eyes fell on my face and he gave a start and blush, and presently, when the dance was over and his partner seated, came up to me with hand extended as if I had been the noblest guest there. "Harry, Harry," he whispered eagerly, "she hath danced with me three times tonight and hath promised again; and, Harry, saw you ever any one so beautiful as she in that blue dress?"

I answered truthfully that I never had. Sir Humphrey, in his blue velvet suit with the silver buttons, with his rosy face and powdered wig, was one to look at twice and yet again, and I regarded him, as always, with that liking for him and that fury of jealousy.

I looked at him and loved him as I might have loved my son, with such a sweet and brave honesty of simplicity he eyed me and for the sake of Mary Cavendish, who might find his love for her precious, and I wished with all my heart that I might fling him to the floor where he stood. Every nerve and muscle in me tingled with the restraint of the desire, for such an enhancement of a woman's beauty as was Mary Cavendish's that night will do away with the best instincts of men whether they will or not.

The next dance was the minuet, and Mary Cavendish danced it with my Lord Culpeper, the governor of Virginia. The governor, though I liked him not, was a most personable man with much grace of manner which had additional value from a certain harshness of feature which led one not to expect such suavity, and he was clad most richly in such a dazzle of gold broidery and fling of yellow laces and glitter of buttons as could not be surpassed.

My lord was in fact clad much more richly than his wife and daughter, whose attire, though fair enough, was not of the freshest. It was my good luck to overhear my Lady Culpeper telling in no very honeyed tones a gossip of hers, the lady of one of the burgesses, that her goods for which she had sent to England had miscarried, and were it not for the fact that there was a whisper of fever on the ship she would have had the captain herself for a good rating, and had my Lord Culpeper not been for him, saying that the man was of an honest record, she would have had him set in the stocks for his remissness that he had not seen to it that her goods were on board when the ship sailed.

"And there goes poor Cate in her old murrey colored satin petticoat," said my lady, with a bitter lengthening of her face, "and there is Mary Cavendish in a blue flowered satin with silver, which is the very twin of the one I ordered for Cate, and which came in on the Cavendish ship."

"Well," said the other woman, who was long and lean and had wedded late in life a man she would have scorned in her girlhood, and could not forgive the wrong she had done herself, and was filled with an inconsistency of spleen toward all younger and fairer than she, and who, moreover, was a born toad eater for all in high places, "'tis fine feathers make fine birds, and were thy Cate arrayed in that same gown in Mistress Cavendish's stead"—

"As I believe, she would not have had the dress had not Cate told Cicely Hyde, who is so intimate with Mary Cavendish," said my Lady Culpeper. "I had it from my lord's sister that 'twas the newest fashion in London. How else would the chit have heard of it, I pray?"

"How else, indeed?" asked the burgess' wife.

"And here my poor Cate must go in her old murrey colored petticoat," said my lady.

"But even thus, to one who looks at her and not at her attire, she outshines Mary Cavendish," said the other. That was, to my thinking, as flagrant hypocrisy as was ever heard, for if those two maids had been clad alike as beggars Mary Cavendish would have carried off the palm, with no dissenting voice, though Cate Culpeper was fair enough to see, with her father's grace of manner and his harshness of feature softened by her rose bloom of youth.

Catherine Cavendish was dancing as the others, but seemingly with no heart in it, whereas her sister was all glowing with delight in the merriment of it and her sense of her own beauty and the admiration of all about her, and smiling with the innocent radiance of a child.

As I stood watching her I felt a touch on my arm and looked, and there stood Mistress Cicely Hyde, and her brown face was so puckered with wrath and jealousy that I scarcely knew her.

"Did not Mary's grandmother send you to escort her home, Master Wingfield?" said she in a sharp whisper, and I stared at her in amazement.

"When the ball is over, Mistress Hyde," I said.

"'Tis time the ball was over now," said she. "'Tis folly to keep it up so late as this, and Mary hath not had a word for me since we came."

"But why do you not dance yourself, Mistress Hyde?"

"I care not to dance," she said pettishly and with a glance of mingled wrath and admiration at Mary Cavendish that might have matched mine or her brother's, and I marveled deeply at the waywardness of a maid's heart. But then came Ralph Drake, who had not drunken very deeply, being only flushed and somewhat lost to discrimination and disposed to dance with another since he could not have his cousin Mary, and he and Cicely went away together, and presently, when the minuet was over and another dance on, I saw them dancing in time, but always Cicely had that eye of watchful injury upon Mary.

It was late when the ball was done, but Mary would have stayed it out had it not been for Catherine, who almost swooned in the middle of a dance and had to be revived with aromatic vinegar and lie for awhile

Margery Key sending forth a blessing

in my Lady Culpeper's bedchamber, with a black woman fanning her, until she was sufficiently recovered to go home. Mary did not espy me until, returning from her sister's side to order the sedan chairs, she jostled against me. Then such a blush of delight and relief came over her face as made my heart stand still with rapture and something like fear. "You here, you here, Harry?" she cried and stammered and blushed again, and Sir Humphrey and Cicely, who were pressing up, looked at me jealously.

"I am here at your grandmother's request, Mary," I said.

Then my Lord Estes came elbowing me aside and made no more of me than if I were a black slave, and hoarsely shouting for the sedan chairs and the bearers, and after him Ralph Drake and half a score of others, and all cursing at me for a convict tutor and thrusting at me.

All the road was white with moonlight, and when we came alongside Margery Key's house, as I live, that white cat shot through the door, and immediately after I, looking back, saw the old dame herself standing therein, though it was near morning, and she quavered forth a blessing after me. "God bless thee, Master Wingfield, in life and death, and may the fish of the sea come to thy line, may the birds of the air minister to thee, and all that hath breath of life, whether it be noxious or guileless, do thy bidding. May even he who is nameless stand from the path of thy desire and hold back from thy face the boughs of prevention whither thou wouldst go." This said old Margery Key in a strange, chanting-like tone and withdrew, and a light flashed out in the next house, and the woman who dwelt therein screamed, and Mistress Mary, thrusting forth her head from the chair, called me to come close.

As for Catherine, she was borne along as silently as though she slept, being, I doubt not, still exhausted with her swoon. When I came close to Mistress Mary's chair, forth came her little hand, shining with that preciousness of fairness beyond that of a pearl, and "Master Wingfield," said she in a whisper, lest she disturb Catherine, "what, what, I pray thee, was it the witch woman said?"

I laughed. "She was calling down a blessing upon my head, madam," I said.

"A blessing and not a curse?"

"As I understood it, though I know not why she should have blessed me."

"They say she is a white witch and worketh good instead of harm, and yet"— said Mistress Mary, and her voice trembled, showing her fear, and I could see the negroes rolling eyes of wide alarm at me, for they were much affected by all hints of deviltry.

"I pray you, madam, to have no fear," I said, and thought within myself that never should she know of what had happened on my way thither.

"They say that her good deeds work in the end to mischief," said Mary, "and, and—'tis sure no good whatever can come from unlawful dealing with the powers of evil even in a good cause. I wish the witch woman had neither cursed thee nor blessed thee, Harry."

I strove again to reassure her and said, as verily I begun to believe, that the old dame's words, whether of cursing or blessing, were of no moment, but presently Mistress Mary declared herself afraid of riding alone, shut within her sedan chair, and would alight and have one of the slaves lead my horse and walk with me, taking my arm the remainder of the way.

I had never known Mistress Mary Cavendish to honor me so before, and knew not to what to attribute it, whether to alarm, as she said, or not. And I knew not whether to be enraptured or angered at my own rapture, or whether I should use or not that authority which I had over her and which she could not, strive as best she could, gainsay, and bid her remain in her chair.

But, being so sorely bewildered, I did nothing, but let her have her way, and on toward Drake Hill we walked, she clinging to my arm and seemingly holding me to a slow pace, and the slaves, with the chairs, and my horse forging ahead with ill concealed zeal on account of that chanting proclamation of Margery Key which, I will venture to say, was considered by every one of the poor fellows as a special curse directed toward him instead of a blessing for me.

As we followed on that moonlight night, she and I alone, of a sudden I felt my youth and love arise to such an assailing of the joy of life that I knew myself dragged, as it were, by it and had no more choosing as to what I should not do. Verily it would be easier to lead an army of malcontents than one's own self. And something there was about the moonlight on that fair Virginia night, and the heaviness of the honey scents, and the pressure of love and life on every side, in bush and vine and tree and nest, which seemed to overbear me and sweep me along as on the crest of some green tide of spring. Verily there are forces of this world which are beyond the overcoming of mortal man so long as he is incumbered by his mortality.

Mary Cavendish gathered up her blue and silver petticoats about her as closely as a blue flower bell at nightfall and stepped along daintily at my side, and the feel of her little hand on my arm seemed verily the only touch of material things which held me to this world. We came to a great pool of wet in our way, and suddenly I thought of her feet in her little satin shoes. "Madam, you will wet your feet if you walk through that pool in your satin shoes," I said, and my voice was so hoarse with tenderness that I would not have known it for my own, and I felt her arm tremble. "No," she said faintly. But, without waiting for any permission, around her waist I put an arm and had her raised in a twinkling from the ground and bore her across the pool, she not struggling, but only whispering faintly when I set her down after it was well passed, "You—you should not have done that, Harry."

Then of a sudden close she pressed her soft cheek against my shoulder as we walked and whispered, as though she could keep silent no longer, and yet as if she swooned for shame in breaking silence, "Harry, Harry, I liked the way you thrust them aside when they were rude with you to do me a service, and, Harry, you are stronger, and—and—than them all."

Then I knew, with such a shock of joy that I wonder I lived, that the child loved me, but I knew at the same time as never I had known it before my love for her.

"Mistress Mary," I said, "I but did my duty and my service, which you can always count upon, and I did no more than others would have done, Sir Humphrey Hyde"—

But she flung away from me at that with a sudden movement of amazement and indignation and hurt, which cut me to the quick. "Yes," she said, "yes, Master Wingfield, truly I believe that Sir Humphrey Hyde would do me any service that came in his way, and truly he is a brave lad. I have a great esteem for Humphrey—I have a greater esteem for Humphrey than for all the rest—and I care not if you know it, Master Wingfield."

So saying, she called to the bearers of her chair and would have a slave assist her to it instead of me, and rode in silence the rest of the way, I following, walking my horse, who pulled hard at his bits.

The Social Realm.

If thou wouldst live unruffled by care,
Let not the past torment thee e'er;"
If any loss thou hast to rue,
Act as though thou wert born anew;
Inquire the meaning of each day,
What each day means itself will say;
In thine own actions take thy pleasure;
What others do, thou'lt duly treasure;
Ne'er let thy breast with hate be supplied
And to God the future safe confide.

LAWYER McANARNEY'S ATTITUDE

Relative to Becoming a Candidate for the Mayoralty.

Says Any Backing from City Hall Is Upon Their Own Responsibility.

The Daily Ledger interviewed John W. McAnarney, Esq., today relative to his candidacy for Mayor, and the statements which have appeared in public print.

The gentleman denies in tote the City Hall backing which is credited to him, saying that if there is any combination there working for his nomination, they are doing it on their own responsibility, and they may be surprised when they learn his attitude.

Mr. McAnarney promises to make known his attitude in the Daily Ledger of Monday, and says there will be no equivocation. He will make it plain just where he stands, if he decides to be a candidate for Mayor, and it will then be for the Republican voters to decide whether they want him or not. He says it will make little difference to him.

Ex-MAYOR PORTER NOT IN POLITICS.

Denies That He Has Solicited Mr. McAnarney to be a Candidate.

Hon. Charles H. Porter, the first Mayor of the City of Quincy, was interviewed this morning, relative to a newspaper statement in connection with the candidacy of John W. McAnarney, Esq., for Mayor, which read:

"Rumor goes a ways further with Mr. McAnarney, and declares that ex-Mayor Porter has solicited him to allow the use of his name."

Mr. Porter denies having solicited Mr. McAnarney to allow the use of his name, adding that he was out of politics because of the fact that he is a member of the Massachusetts Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Porter admitted that he had been asked whether Mr. McAnarney would make a desirable candidate, and his reply was in the affirmative. He declined, however to sign nomination papers.

DENIALS ALSO COME FROM CITY HALL.

Officials Tell the Daily Ledger They are not Backing Lawyer McAnarney.

City Hall officials were today seen by Daily Ledger reporters relative to report that they were backing the candidacy of Lawyer John W. McAnarney for Mayor. Both Commissioner Knowlton and Overseer Cunningham emphatically branded the report as a lie.

Mr. Cunningham said he had had no interview with Mr. McAnarney and had made no tender of the Republican nomination for Mayor to him.

MAYOR BRYANT TO RETIRE.

Says Twenty-Five Thousand Dollars Would Not Tempt Him to be Mayor Next Year.

Mayor Bryant authorizes the statement that he is not a candidate for reelection. He would under no consideration accept another term as Mayor of this city. Not even if he was offered $25,000 for his year's service.

STABBED IN THE NECK

Unknown Man Murdered on a Street at Worcester

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 15.—Stabbed in the neck with a knife, an unknown man was murdered at 10:55 o'clock last night nearly opposite the saloon of Patrick Cummiskey. After being struck down his assailants ran down Millbury street and turned into Wade, where they disappeared. Frank Dix, 24 years old, and Joseph Zelecki, 26, were arrested at midnight by a squad of officers who surrounded the house at 88 Ward street, and are locked up, charged with being suspicious persons.

When the man was struck down the blood flowed from a wound in his neck in a stream. The street was covered with blood. Men from the saloon picked up the unconscious man and carried him to the curbing, where he died without uttering a word.

Gave Up Adopted Child

Boston, Oct. 15.—Bertha E. M. Natino, who has been before Judge Sherman, charged with kidnapping Caroline Romano, a 9-year-old actress, retracted her plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty, thus ending abruptly the trial. Sentence was postponed indefinitely. Mrs. Natino contended that the child was hers, the mother having given it to her four years ago; but when the mother saw the child was able to make money on the stage she sought her custody. Mrs. Natino now agrees that the child shall go to the mother.

Tucker Wants Three Experts

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 15.—J. H. Vahey and C. H. Innes, counsel for Charles L. Tucker, charged with the murder of Mabel Page, filed a petition in the superior court asking permission to employ three experts for defendant. Theodore Hurd, clerk of the court, refused to allow the paper out of his possession, maintaining that the public knows too much about the case already. Hurd refused to give the names of the experts named.

Slugged With Meat Hook

Boston, Oct. 15.—As the result of a fracas on board the steamer Lancastrian at the Hoosac Tunnel docks, George Robinson, a negro, is in a critical condition, while the police are searching the docks and the vicinity for S. P. Arnold, a young white man, who, Robinson told the police, had inflicted the wound that may cause his death. Robinson claims that Arnold struck him over the head with a meat hook.

Passed Relics of Wreck

Boston, Oct. 15.—Captain Clark of steamer Toronto, from Hull, Eng., reports that when off Brown's bank the steamer passed a quantity of wreckage, including the masts of a vessel, portions of the woodwork of the vessel painted white, boards and lumber. The flotsam extended over a large area, and portions of it were passed within a short distance of the bay.

Bloomberg Claims Cut Down

OLD CANON STANDS

Episcopalians Against Change In Divorce Regulation

SUBJECT OF LONG DEBATE

Whole Strength of High Church Party For Proposed Reform, but Pacific and Southern States Were Against a Change

Boston, Oct. 15.—The house of deputies of the Episcopal general convention, at the close of a four days' debate, rejected an amendment to the divorce canon which sought to prevent the remarriage of divorced persons by clergymen of the denomination. While the house of bishops may yet act on the matter, it is certain that no change will be made by the present convention. Those who are urging a law forbidding the remarriage of any divorced person will renew the contest at the general convention which will be held in 1907.

The present law of the church, which has been in operation since 1859, allows the remarriage of the innocent person in a divorce granted for infidelity. For several years attempts have been made to repeal it, its opponents gaining strength at each convention. When a vote was taken by the house of deputies, sitting as a committee of the whole, on the question of reporting the proposed amendment to the house itself, the reformers were successful by a vote of 214 to 191, and this vote was regarded as representing the actual strength by yea and nay vote of the contending forces.

The final vote, however, was taken by dioceses and orders, and where a diocese was evenly divided in its sentiment its strength was counted in the negative. The vote by dioceses was: Clerical, for the amendment, 30; against, 21; divided, 10; lay vote, for, 25; against, 24; divided, 6.

Practically the entire strength of the middle western states, the stronghold of the high church party, declared for the proposed reform, but the Pacific states and a number of the southern states voted not to change the present canon. The diocese of New York went against the amendment, while that of Pennsylvania was for it.

In New England, Vermont, New Hampshire and western Massachusetts voted for a change, as did the lay deputies from Rhode Island. The clerical deputies from Maine favored the amendment, but the votes of Connecticut and Massachusetts were cast on the negative side.

The issue was not a party one, although the whole strength of the high church forces was given to the reform movement. The president of the house of deputies, Rev. Dr. R. H. McKim of Washington, voted for the old canon, although the clerical vote of his diocese supported the proposed change.

Dropped Dead on Race Track

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 15.—In the first heat of a 2:20 class pacing, Royal Bell, a bay gelding, driven by George Swisher, was a close second to Nancy H. Just before the distance flag was reached he dropped dead and fell against the fence, breaking through it and smashing the sulky. Swisher sustained only an injured knee. The horse was valued at $1000.

People Should Elect Postmaster

Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 15.—Mr. Bryan, in a speech here last night, said: "I am so Democratic that I would like to see postmasters elected by the people. I am tired seeing the federal government come into a town and appoint as postmaster a man whom the people do not want. I am tired seeing federal patronage used to build up political machines."

Express Train Struck Light Engine

Albany, Oct. 15.—An express train missed a serious wreck in the Rensselaer yards last night, largely because she was not yet under full speed in her journey to New York. As it was, a fireman was killed, an engineer slightly injured and two locomotives were wrecked by colliding with a light engine standing on the main line track.

Robbers and Citizens In Duel

Lakota, N. D., Oct. 15.—An attempt has been made to blow the safe of the People's State bank here, two explosions of dynamite awakening the citizens, who turned out with shotguns and revolvers. Several hundred shots were fired. The bank safe was wrecked, but the robbers escaped without securing any money.

"Thrown Once a Year"

Washington, Oct. 15.—Attorney General Moody was thrown from his horse while riding near the White House grounds, due to a collision with a pair of mules whose driver had lost control of them. Mr. Moody was unhurt. Recalling his accident at Annapolis a year ago, he remarked: "I get thrown once a year."

Wheat Scarce For Grinding

Chicago, Oct. 15.—Inability of domestic flour mills to secure wheat suitable for grinding was the main cause of an advance of over 2 cents a bushel in the price of wheat options here. A big shortage in the French crop added to the feeling of buoyancy.

Death of King George of Saxony

Dresden, Oct. 15.—King George of Saxony died at Pillnitz this morning. His end was peaceful. His sons were present at the deathbed.

EXPLANATION IN ORDER

Russians Opened Mail Pouch Directed to the Cincinnati

Washington, Oct. 15.—It has developed that a pouch containing mail for the United States cruiser Cincinnati, then at Nagasaki, Japan, which was aboard the British steamer Calchas when that vessel was seized by the Russian Vladivostok squadron, had been opened while in the possession of the Russian officials, re-sealed and sent on to its destination.

This information has come to the postoffice department in a communication from the Japanese postal administration. The matter will be referred to the state department for action, as was done with the case of the ordinary United States mail on the vessel at the time she was seized.

The latest phase of the seizure of the Calchas mails has caused a painful surprise in official circles, and if the act of opening the pouch addressed to the Cincinnati was wittingly done, the probability is that a strong protest will be lodged with the Russian government.

It is stated at the navy department that the mail pouch referred to did not contain any official communications, being simply mail for the men on board the ship.

Hills Latest Contribution

Parkersburg, W. Va., Oct. 15.—Four days of continuous speech-making is beginning to tell on the vocal powers of Henry G. Davis. Aside from hoarseness, however, Mr. Davis seems as fit as when he began his tour. "I am sure that if Alton B. Parker shall be elected president he will endeavor to have the department of commerce and labor divided, and see to it that a genuine and intelligent representative of labor interests will have the place devoted to labor interests and a man devoted to the interests of commerce at the head of the commerce department." This was David B. Hill's contribution to the campaign yesterday.

Lawyers' Modest Fees

New York, Oct. 15.—Charges preferred by some of the creditors that counsel representing the estate were being paid excessive fees caused an adjournment of one week in the bankruptcy proceedings against Daniel J. Sully. One of the items which was named by the protesting creditors was the payment of $2500 to Elihu Root for examining two witnesses in the proceedings. Exception also was taken to the fee claimed by Receivers Taft and Miller, who asked for $30,000 for attending to the legal matters connected with the receivership and $25,000 for acting as receivers.

Primate May Settle Church Row

New York, Oct. 15.—The Archbishop of Canterbury has been asked to use his influence in bringing about an amicable adjustment of the present crisis between the Union Free church of Scotland and the United Presbyterian church in Scotland. In responding, the archbishop said that it would be to him the greatest source of satisfaction to be able to promote a reasonable solution of the difficulties, and that his experience in this country encouraged him in the belief that a solution of the present problem ought not to be impossible.

Killed by Life-Saving Device

St. Paul, Oct. 15.—P. M. Scannon and wife fell from the third-story window of a building to a stone sidewalk here. The woman was killed and Scannon is not expected to live. Scannon is the inventor of a fire escape. He was testing it and had swung himself down from the eighth floor of the building to the third, where his wife was awaiting him in a window. When the woman's weight was added to that of her husband, the stone window ledge above cut the strands of the rope sustaining them, letting both fall.

Contracts For Cancelling Machines

Washington, Oct. 15.—The first contracts for cancelling machines let since the postal investigation have been let to the American Machine company of Boston, the International Postal Supply company of New York, the Columbia company of Silver Creek, N. Y., the Barry company of Syracuse and the Barr Pike company of Kansas City. The old contracts for cancelling machines figured conspicuously in the postal investigation.

Trade Making Slow Progress

New York, Oct. 15.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says progress is slow, but sure, in the leading branches of manufacture contracts being more readily placed for distant delivery. Labor is fairly well employed, according to the latest official trades union reports, although the Fall River struggle has lasted longer than expected.

To Break Up Auto Speeding

Pittsburg, Oct. 15.—The Pittsburg Automobile club has decided to take a novel stand against the fast driving of automobiles. It will pay $250 for the arrest of each person speeding beyond the legal limit. This, it is believed, will effectively break up the practice.

TWELVE PERISHED

Story of Wreck of Schooner Wentworth Off Chatham

SURFMEN COULD NOT AID

Made Almost Superhumon Efforts to Reach Those Aboard Doomed Craft--Captain's Wife and Three Children on Board

Chatham, Mass., Oct. 15.—A small part of the forward section of the hull and a slanting foremast stand as mute reminders of the ocean tragedy enacted here when the three-masted schooner Wentworth of Moncton, N. B., struck on Chatham bar during a raging northerly gale, and all on board perished in the terrific seas. With the exception of the loss of the steamer Portland in November, 1898, the wreck of the Wentworth is the most appalling disaster that has occurred on the Cape Cod coast during the last decade.

Of the 12 persons who were on board the stranded vessel not one reached the shore alive, although two bodies were snatched from the surf, one of them that of a woman, believed to be the wife of the captain. With her three children, she was accompanying her husband on a trip from Hillsboro, N. B., to Newark, N. J.

The loss of the Wentworth was particularly distressing, inasmuch as those on shore could do nothing to assist the crew of the disabled craft. The Cape Cod life savers from the Old Harbor and Orleans stations were unable to launch their surfboats, as no craft could have lived 10 seconds in the fearful surges that crashed upon the sandy beach. The hardy surfmen dragged their boats and surf guns by hand through the soft, shifting sands and made almost superhuman efforts to assist those on board the doomed vessel.

A shot line was fired to the schooner, which lay not much more than 300 yards from shore. There was one answering pull, and the life savers thought they heard a voice above the roar of the surf, crying "All right," but beyond this there was no further sign of life on board the craft.

Not receiving another pull on the shot line, the life savers thought it had landed and more lines were shot out to the vessel. When the wreckage came ashore it was discovered that the first line had been made fast to the wheel of the schooner and it is believed that a heavy sea swept over the vessel just as the line was fastened and that all the men on deck were washed overboard. It is also believed that those who sought safety in the rigging climbed the main and mizzen masts, both of which fell while the life savers were hoping against hope that the schooner might hold together until the sea moderated sufficiently to permit the launching of the lifeboats.

The Wentworth was bound from Hillsboro, N. B., to Newark, N. J., with a cargo of plaster rock. On board were the captain, his wife and three children, and a crew of seven men.

The Cape Cod shore for a distance of many miles is being carefully patrolled in the hope that when the sea gives up its dead the bodies of those unfortunates who perished in the waves may be recovered.

When the Wentworth left Hillsboro she carried 12 passengers and crew, including Captain Esau E. Priddle, Mrs. Priddle and her three children; First Mate George Campbell, Prince Edward Island; J. J. Godfrey, a negro, Barbadoes; Thomas Perguson, Norway; John Johansen, Norway; John Dillon, Ireland.

These 12 were all on board when the Wentworth staggered on to the shoals and all met their deaths, without a doubt, upon the jagged rocks.

Navy Is Short-Handed

Washington, Oct. 15.—Even after the sweeping plans of the navy department for laying up many of the older and less efficient vessels of the service have been carried out in full it is probable that some of the new battleships and armored cruisers will still be under-officered and under-manned. Orders have been sent to the three recruiting parties now in the field to make every effort in their power to bring about a large enlistment.

FALLING BY THOUSANDS

Russian "Advance" Forced Northward by the Japanese

THE BATTLE STILL RAGES

Russians Lost Fifteen Thousand Men Up to Friday Noon--Japs Showed Splendid Generalship In Meeting Advance Almost at Its Inception--A Continued Hammering at Port Arthur Without Result--St Petersburg In Pessimistic Frame of Mind

London, Oct. 15.—The main armies of Russia and Japan in Manchuria continue to be engaged in a desperate struggle for supremacy south of Mukden. On both sides there have been such losses in killed and wounded as mark the contest as one of the bloodiest battles in history. Already the losses at Liaoyang have been approximated, and the indications are that they will be exceeded, that of the Russians up to noon of Oct. 14 being estimated at 15,000.

The Russian advance has been converted into a stubbornly-fought retreat. The result, according to the Russians, is still to be determined. Reports from the Russian left wing are lacking, leaving room for question if that part of General Kuropatkin's army is not in worse extremity than the centre and right were at any stage of the battle. On both sides the soldiers have shown the utmost tenacity and bravery and whole regiments have gone down before the fire of the enemy.

Oyama apparently has forced Kuropatkin's entire front back from the positions seized in the first rush of the southward movement. It is too early to assume Kuropatkin's complete defeat, for he may have reserves that will be able to stem the tide of the battle which still is raging with the utmost fury, but his strategy, whatever it was, has been frustrated.

The point about the whole affair is that the Japanese have shown splendid generalship in meeting the Russian advance almost at its inception, and striking hard and fast at the different units of Kuropatkin's army before they could get to the positions assigned to them and present an unbroken front to the enemy.

Whatever the result of the present fighting may be, it must not be too hastily assumed that the campaign is ended. Kuropatkin has prepared Tie pass for a point to fall back upon, and if he can recover as quickly from the blow that he may receive south of Mukden as he did from that at Liaoyang, the finish is not yet.

Russian press dispatches, as well as Kuropatkin's official reports, show that the great battle has been marked by display of the utmost gallantry and endurance on each side. Along the centre and western portions of the battle-line many positions have been swept alternately by Russians and Japanese. General Oku's capture of Russian guns came at the end of one of these fierce eddies of the tide of fighting, the czar's troops losing part of their artillery, recapturing the guns, and again suffering both the first loss and a new one.

Meanwhile the Japanese are assailing Port Arthur with reckless bravery, which is met by an equally heroic defense. The closeness of the fighting in the attack and counter-attack is shown by the fact that hand grenades are used by both sides with fearful results. For instance, Signal Station Hill was captured by the Japanese the other day after most bloody work, but they were unable to hold the position, owing to the fire from the other forts.

This failure of the Japanese to gain a foothold on the inner lines of forts indicates the skill with which the defenses were designed, the main line of forts supporting each other in such a manner as to render any one position captured untenable because of the enfilading fire of the others. But continued assaults, involving as they do an immense expenditure of ammunition, to say nothing of their wearing-down effect on the garrison, are bound to cause the greatest anxiety in St. Petersburg. The placing into position of mortar batteries where they can play into the beleaguered town is a most serious phase of the situation.

RESULT IN THE BALANCE

Wounded Soldiers Pouring Into Mukden For Treatment

Mukden, Oct. 15.—The fighting continues to rage with the same bitterness as on previous days of the engagement, and the result is still in the balance. The losses on both sides are enormous, that of the Russians being 15,000. Wounded soldiers are being brought in from all directions. The roads are crowded with long trains of wagons, baggage and transport wagons, as well as ambulances, being pressed into service, even Chinese two-wheeled carts filling the mandate of the military.

Men afoot are limping in, using their guns as crutches, the less severely wounded supporting their comrades, after a first-aid dressing on the firing line. Even across the fields you meet them, taking the shortest and straightest road for help and shelter.

It is the most pitiful feature of the bloody drama being enacted at the front when, stiffening with wounds, pain-racked bodies sink to the roadside after the support of the danger and glory of the active fight have been withdrawn.

In the distance the sounds of battle are still plainly heard. The rain has ceased and the sun is shining serenely.

BLAME FOR FAILURE

It Will Rest Upon Kuropatkin, Whether Deservedly or Not

St. Petersburg, Oct. 15.—The great feeling of concern which exists in high circles in the Russian capital by no means equals the foreboding of coming disaster pervading the general public, which is indulging in the deepest pessimism.

In the absence of official news the public is being fed on the wildest rumors of defeat suffered by General Kuropatkin yesterday. The fact that no word regarding the battle has been officially given out only confirms the popular fear.

General Kuropatkin's report of the result of the day's operations has reached Emperor Nicholas at Tsarkoe Selo, but it has not been returned here before the war commission. The czar himself is represented as being bitterly disappointed and spending hours with his cabinet, studying out with the help of his military aides the reports of the battle.

The depressing feature of the situation is that every one is willing to believe the worst. Thus, reports from Tokio and elsewhere stating that the Japanese are advancing and the Russians falling back are accepted with faith based upon the previous Russian retreat.

Naturally many reports are current as to the Genesis of the forward movement. It is freely stated that Kuropatkin was forced into taking the offensive by pressure by the authorities here. This has been officially denied, and as Kuropatkin's order to advance was given over his own signature, it seems likely that he will have to bear all the responsibility, whether the situation is of his own making or not.

Friends of Kuropatkin say the present offensive movement was inspired from St. Petersburg, as was doubtless Stackelberg's movement for the relief of Port Arthur, and that if Kuropatkin's star has set others higher than he are responsible. Supporters of Kuropatkin point out that even if he was forced to advance against his better judgment, he is too good a general to have undertaken an aggressive movement which he did not feel strong enough to carry through without leaving open a road for retreat, and that, while the Russian forward movement may be an absolute failure so far as the relief of Port Arthur is concerned, and though Kuropatkin may lose many men and some guns, this is the worst that can happen.

Godsend For Japanese Army

Tokio, Oct. 15.—It is unofficially reported that the Japanese right army has succeeded in isolating a force of three or four divisions of Russians in the Bensihu-Kiaotau district. It is rumored that Kuropatkin himself is with the force, which seems doomed to destruction. The central army captured 11 guns and the left army 25 guns, while the spoils of the right army are expected to be still more valuable. General Kuropatkin's move was an unexpected Godsend for the Japanese army.

WARE EXPLAINS ORDER

Pension Commissioner's Clear Defense of the Age Pension Order.

It Is Right In Principle and In Law—Dullness of Parker Constitution Club Well Shown.

To the Editor of the Sun:

Sir—All Democrats are constitutional lawyers and occupy the relation to the Republican party that mosquitoes do to a fisherman.

I have recently seen report No. 1, made by the Parker Constitution club of New York, in which they find that pension order No. 78, known as the age order, is an invasion of the constitution, and they hold the president responsible therefor.

Order No. 78 was an order making the proof of certain ages of old soldiers evidential facts of certain degrees of disability; not conclusive—only evidential.

Seventy years, being the Biblical age of threescore and ten, was fixed as the probable age of total disability, "which so incapacitated them from the performance of manual labor as to render them unable to earn a support." The foregoing are the words of the statute.

The United States statutes make the commissioner of pensions the executive officer to carry out and enforce the pension laws. The laws are brief and need much interpretation, and the position of commissioner is in many respects analogous to that of a judge in that he must interpret the law and weigh the evidence presented and declare therefrom whether the claimant is entitled to a pension or not. Over 100,000 claims are by him rejected annually.

Among other things which the commissioner is called upon to decide is the meaning of the sentence above quoted. For instance, What is "manual labor?" Notice a policeman strolling leisurely along. Is he performing manual labor? Is the night watchman in a hotel or the cashier in a bank or many another whom we might cite engaged in manual labor?

The commissioner must decide what is "manual labor." The statute does not apply to brain labor, nor does it define "manual labor." Congress pensions for physical and not mental decay.

Again, what is "a support?" Must an old soldier live on rice or on cornmeal? Is the support contemplated by congress the cheapest that will keep life in him at one meal a day? Must he live in a cellar or in a bunk, like a San Francisco Chinaman. Must he wear rags? Must he wrap himself up in a piece of carpet and hibernate through the winter?

The present attitude of thought in the pension bureau is that the word "support" means clothes good enough to go to church in, and a respectable abode, and such medical attendance as may be necessary, and three good square meals a day, and plenty of plug cut and several other things, and then some more.

Order No. 78 finds that an old soldier who is sixty-two years of age is probably able to earn only one-half of this kind of a support and is entitled to $6 per month as a pension, and at sixty-five he is two-thirds disabled and entitled to $8.

This rule is within the strict line of statutory authority, human experience and executive precedent. No Democratic president or commissioner will ever abrogate order No. 78, because it is for all time, yet a Democratic president or commissioner would have that power, and General Black, who had been pension commissioner, knowing of this power, thought it wise to suggest that congress put the question beyond the reach of his party by making an act done in pursuance of congressional authority the motive of a specific act.

There being nothing wrong in principle with order No. 78, let us now examine the particular charge of unconstitutionality which the Parker Constitution club sets forth.

The club finds President Roosevelt responsible for the order and finds that it contravenes section 9 of article 1, which reads as follows: "No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

History and the public records concerning order No. 78 show that when it was made congress was in session; that the order was made March 15, 1904, but was not to go into force until April 13, 1904; that it was immediately reported to congress, with a request that $1,500,000 be appropriated to carry the order into effect. The sum estimated was embodied in the pending deficiency bill and came up for quick discussion. As order No. 78 had been made under and by virtue of authority granted by congress there was then one of three courses to be taken by congress—first, it could deny that the authority was granted, deny that the order was legal and refuse to pass the appropriation; secondly, it could repeal the law and abrogate the order; thirdly, it could recognize the order as legal and valid and vote an appropriation to carry it out.

Congress, after hearing what everybody had to say, took the third course and voted the $1,500,000 to carry it out.

Congress having approved the order and voted the money, the pensions began to issue under the order and to be paid.

How did the commissioner get the money to pay those pensions? How did he get it out of the treasury? Did Mr. Roosevelt go to Mr. Shaw and treat him as Caesar did Metellus and take the money away from him? No. Did the commissioner open the treasury with a crowbar and abstract the money? No. Well, how was it? Let us ask Mr. Shaw. He will say that not a dollar has gone out of the treasury without an appropriation bill passed by each branch of congress and signed by the presiding officer of each body.

When order No. 78 was issued Democratic newspapers offered four remedies—the impeachment of the commissioner, the dismissal of the commissioner, a mandamus to compel the commissioner to do his duty as they understood it, and, fourth, an injunction to restrain action on order No. 78.

The passage of the appropriation bill recognizing the legality of the order and voting the money to carry it out ended the consideration of the remedies proposed.

This brings us around to the proposition stated by the Parker Constitution club in report No. 1. It reads: "We find that President Roosevelt deliberately disregarded article 1, section 9, of the constitution, providing, 'No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.'"

I submit the proposition to any blacksmith in the United States, with perfect confidence that he will see where that eminent body of lawyers mistook the meaning of that comprehensive document. E. F. WARE.
Bureau of Pensions, Washington, Sept. 19.

A RESOURCEFUL LEADER.

Country to Be Congratulated on the President's Letter.

The New Haven Register, usually Democratic, has this to say of President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance: One way to estimate the fighting strength of an army, which is what a political party is, is to study its leader. A bold and resourceful leader can perform wonders with his men, whether they represent or not the normal fighting condition in numbers and organization. Theodore Roosevelt is a bold and resourceful leader, and he never appeared more so since he entered public life than in this letter of acceptance. For his political enemies to deny the fact or to withhold full realization of its value as a campaign document will be to weaken their own lines of offense and defense. Though not a pupil of Senator Platt in the Sunday school where Governor Odell learned his political p's and q's, and though but a reluctant supporter of James G. Blaine, Mr. Roosevelt has outplayed all of them as a practical politician. He has learned, if he ever doubted it, that to be a leader one must be self confident before he is sure of his soldiers. In this respect there is no letter of acceptance to compare his with. He steps to the firing line and with a popular bluntness of speech passes in review before him all of the acts of his administration which have been criticised and salutes each one as sound in conception, wise in execution and beneficial in achievement. His is the attitude of the famous old beau who advised younger swains to "never explain nor apologize." It is the attitude, moreover, of an astute politician who understands human nature, especially in its weaknesses, and knows how to appeal to it. It is the attitude of the politician militant who challenges his enemies to combat, and it will for that reason inspire his party to larger endeavor and set for the spellbinders a livelier pace than they have themselves known how to take.

From our point of view the country is to be congratulated upon the receipt of this letter, which, while sent to Speaker Cannon, is addressed to it. It gives assurance of the debate which must follow. Though the Democrats are unfortunate in the errors which they have made during recent years, which Mr. Roosevelt takes full and clever advantage of, there is still a wide difference in their attitude toward policies of government to be hereafter enforced. Mr. Roosevelt declares that as he has done he will continue to do. It is now the duty of Mr. Parker, speaking for his supporters, to state as clearly and boldly as Mr. Roosevelt has done what he proposes to do if given the opportunity. In no other way can the vote of the electorate be cast intelligently. As the Hartford Courant aptly puts it: "No man who votes for the next president of the United States can truly say that he is prepared for that responsible duty until he had read this letter. This is not to say that after reading the letter he will necessarily vote for Theodore Roosevelt. He may not. But, at any rate, if he does so vote against Theodore Roosevelt after the perusal of this letter he will do so with his eyes open, and that is a state of mind on the part of the millions of voters of this country that is eminently to be desired."

The Old Story.

[From the Hartford Courant.]

This theory that Theodore Roosevelt is a bad and dangerous man is merely a new application of the usual Democratic method. The established Democratic formula for forty years has been to "view with alarm." Sometimes it is this thing that is viewed, and sometimes it is that, but the alarm is constant. This year it is Roosevelt who is so viewed. Lincoln was so viewed in his immortal day. The real question, however, as to how the Democratic party and its candidate of unexpressed opinions would manage the affairs of the United States remains unchanged.

Boston, Oct. 15.—Steamer Old Dominion arrived in port from New York nearly two days and two nights overdue on a trip that usually requires but 24 hours, the delay being due to the fierce gale that prevailed along the coast. The steamer had a very rough trip and many of the passengers were so terrified that they became hysterical.

Notorious Burglar Held

Boston, Oct. 15.—James Lee, who, the police say, confessed to more than a dozen breaks in the last six months, waived examination in court and was held in $2500 for the grand jury. In his confession to the police Lee implicated George Wilson, who is in Cambridge jail awaiting trial on a charge of burglary.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

This year the voters will elect one member of the School Committee at-large and Wards Two and Three will each elect one from ward. The member at-large whose term expires is Dr. N. S. Hunting, and the members from wards, Frederick H. Smith of Ward Two, and John L. Miller of Ward Three. All will probably be reelected without contest.

Drift of Opinion.

☞The Dingley tariff is not a perfect tariff. No tariff is. No tariff has been. The United States has however, been under protective tariff since the year 1860. At that time free trade was rampant. The Confederate states were scarcely less eager advocates than Cobden himself. The United States followed protection. England followed free trade. England has admittedly been passed in the race for industrial supremacy, and her successors are two countries of avowed protectionist principles—Germany and the United States.—Commericial Bulletin.

☞The weight of the fighting line tells very little. Coeur de Lion could not have dashed through a Japanese square, or have stood unhurt at the door of Front de Boeuf's castle if the defenders had been using rifles instead of bows and beams. The mistake is the based belief justified in great part by history, that an Asiatic army can replace a European one of equal number in a pitched field unless the latter is deficient either in willingness or in military equipment. The usual exception—the victories of the Janissaries—has little to do with the matter for the Janissary regiments were recruited from the tribute of European children. We confess that upon this subject we share the surprise which helps to delude the Russians. There is nothing in the history of Asia, at least within the last 300 years, which points to the possibility that an Asiatic state might in the course of centuries produce, without employing European offices, a fighting force of the kind that the mikado now controls.—London Spectator.

OPENING TODAY.

D. E. Wadsworth & Co. Now Have Twice As Much Space.

Today marks an important date in the business history of D. E. Wadsworth & Co. First, the completion of their fifteenth year in business in Quincy, and second the opening of the enlargement to their store. Messrs. Wadsworth have been located in the Greenleaf block for several years, and almost from the first have felt the need of larger quarters in which to transact their growing business. It was not until recently, however, that opportunity to secure additional room presented itself. The moving of the pharmacy, made vacant the store adjoining, and the opportunity to enlarge was at once taken advantage of.

A large force of workmen was put at work and the changes and improvements necessary were completed so that they were able to open their new addition to the public this morning. The entrance to the new addition adjoins that of his other store. The two stores however, are connected in the rear so as to practically make one store, and a very large attractive one, too.

The new department will be devoted exclusively to ladies' coats, suits, skirts and shirt waists, a large line of which will be carried.

Another thing which the ladies will appreciate is a well appointed retiring room, which has been fitted up in the basement.

Potted plants in abundance are used in the interior decoration of the store. Besides this there are several floral pieces the gifts of business friends. These include a large basket of roses from Henry F. Tilden of Walker, Stetson & Co. The basket is tied with a wide ribbon upon which in gold letters is the word "Success." Also a horse-shoe of white pinks from Tyler Brigham and Charles H. Brigham, and a bunch of Jack roses from Henry W. Poor.

On the front is a large show window which has been decorated with foliage, whose leaves have commenced to take on their autumnal tints, and there is a display of new goods suitable for fall wear.

Two little misses are in attendance this afternoon presenting the rose buds to callers, and this evening there will be four. Those in attendace this afternoon are Miss Hope Green and Miss Emily Doherity. This evening they will be assisted by Miss Louise Dunn and Miss McCarthy.

This afternoon several Boston business men with whom the firm has done business, called to extend congratulations and wish the firm continued success.

Messrs. Wadsworth are having many callers today, and each caller as they leave the store is presented with a rose. A supply of fifteen hundred has been provided for this purpose.

Lectures at Braintree.

In connection with the People's Pleasant service for Sunday evenings, the Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern will give a course of John L. Stoddard's famous lectures, by special permission of the Publishers; Balch Bros., Boston. These lectures will be the same in language as given by the great lecturer himself and will be illustrated by many beautiful pictures of the scenes described. No expense will be spared to make these lectures worthy of the renowned author whose name they bear.

An illustrated service of song will precede each lecture. The lectures will be free, although each person attending is expected to contribute, to meet the expenses of the same. Sittings will be reserved for those who bring a silver offering. Children under 12 must be accompanied by parents or friends.

The course will be given on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock as follows. Topics:

Oct. 16, "Jerusalem, the Holy City."

French Club.

James A. Sanborn of Everett, the publisher of several French papers and the organizer of Franco-American clubs is in Quincy today, organizing a club in the interests of the regular Republican candidates. A rally for French voters will probably be held next week.

STATE AND MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

Great Fluctuations in the Votes for Governor and Mayor.

Current rumor has it that at the last municipal election George H. Wilson received as many Republican votes for Mayor as Democratic votes. If this is a fact Mr. Wilson must have received over 800 Republican votes and Mr. Bryant over 600 Democratic votes.

The total vote at the State election of 1903 was 3875, and at the Municipal election 4227, being 352 larger at the latter than the former, while at the same time there were 58 less blanks.

A comparison of the vote of each election by precincts will be of interest but tells the story only in part:

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

The total vote for the Republican candidate for Governor at the State election was 1877, while at the Municipal election the Republican candidate for Mayor received 2155. Mr. Bryant gained in seven of the precincts and lost in four. His net gain over Gov. Bates was 278, while the increased total vote for candidates was 410 larger.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES.

Mr. Wilson gained in every precinct, except the Ward Six two. His net gain over Col. Gaston was 473, which was larger than the increase in total vote.

THE UNITY CLUB.

Open the Season with a Reception at Wollaston.

The twelfth season of the Wollaston Unity Club, was most pleasantly opened by a reception, in the Unitarian vestry at Wollaston last evening.

A cordial invitation had been extended to all who were interested in the club, and a goodly number of representative people responded.

The guests were received by the president, Mr. Winthrop N. Crocker, and Mrs. Crocker, assisted by the secretary of the club, Miss Mary A. Thomas.

The evening's program consisted of piano solos by Mr. William Weston, several songs delightfully rendered by Mrs. May Hastings Slade and a short address of welcome by President Crocker.

After extending a cordial greeting to all present, Mr. Crocker said that he highly appreciated the honor conferred upon him, in electing him to the office which had been so ably and acceptably filled for eleven years. He believed that the purpose of the club was two-fold: to promote sociability as well as to broaden the intelligence of its members.

The officers have arranged what he hoped would prove to be an interesting and instructive program, but he emphasized the fact that with the members themselves rests the year's success.

The subject for the season is "Glimpses of American Life and Industry."

Refreshments were served and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed. The vestry had been beautifully and appropriately decorated with the national colors and American flags, and the committee in charge deserve much credit for their work.

The Proper Course.

Neighbor Prescott is receiving congratulations on having won his recent libel suit. It always makes his fellow-members of the craft feel good to see libel cases result like this. The newspapers are published for the benefit of the public. They give the news as they get it and if they are in error sometimes, there ought to be some other method for an over-sensitive person to right the wrong than by resorting to law, which means expense to both parties. If any person's character has been damaged, the money of a newspaper publisher cannot repair the damage, but the newspaper itself can place that man in a position before all the world, which will remove whatever stain or injury he has received. If you ever see anything in a newspaper that casts reflection on you, just go, in a courteous manner, to the publisher and he will readily and freely set you right before the public—Quincy Advertiser.

Vespers at Wollaston.

The music at the vesper service at the Wollaston Baptist church at 4 o'clock Sunday will be:

THE STONE BREAKER.

An Example of Content In Honest but Monotonous Toil.

In my country of Alsace, on the solitary route whose interminable ribbon stretches on and on under the forests of the Vosges, there is a stone breaker whom I have seen at his work for thirty years. The first time I came upon him I was a young student setting out with swelling heart for the great city. The sight of this man did me good, for he was humming a song as he broke his stones. We exchanged a few words, and he said at the end, "Well, goodby, my boy, good courage and good luck!" Since then I have passed and repassed along the same route under circumstances the most diverse, painful and joyful. The student has finished his course; the breaker of stones remains what he was. He has taken a few more precautions against the seasons' storms—a rush mat protects his back, and his felt hat is drawn further down to shield his face. But the forest is always sending back the echo of his valiant hammer. How many sudden tempests have broken over his bent back, how much adverse fate has fallen on his head, on his house, on his country! He continues to break his stones, and coming and going I find him by the roadside smiling in spite of his age and his wrinkles, benevolent, speaking—above all in dark days—those simple words of brave men which have so much effect when they are scanned to the breaking of stones.—From "The Simple Life," by Charles Wagner.

Haseltine---Randall.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 12, Mr. Scott Earle Haseltine of South Braintree was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Randall of Holbrook, at the home of the bride by Rev. W. W. Dornan, pastor of the Winthrop Congregational church. Myron L. Cudworth of Dorchester was best man and Miss Mabel Mellen of South Braintree, maid of honor. Miss Mellen wore white organdie and carried a bouquet of pinks.

The ushers were: L. Thurlow Torrey, A. Elihu Oliver and J. Parker Hobart of South Braintree; Carl Derby, Quincy; Walter Lincoln and Frank Thayer of Holbrook.

Misses Natalie Haseltine and Helen Stetson were ribbon girls.

The bridal procession was as follows: ribbon girls, groom and best man, maid of honor, then the bride escorted by her brother, Howard Randall.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, was beautifully gowned in white satin with pearl trimmings. She wore a pearl necklace and carried a bouquet of bride roses.

Frank A. Kennedy, violinist, and Miss Jennie Harvey, pianist, of Boston, played the wedding march and also discoursed sweet music during the reception, which was held from eight till ten. During the reception Mr. and Mrs. Hazeltine were assisted in receiving by the maid of honor and best man.

Never did the home of the bride look so beautiful. The floral decorations consisted of a large hook and eye of green leaves and two hearts united of red leaves and berries. There were also potted plants, ferns, autumn leaves, roses and chrysanthemums.

The bride and groom received a large number of wedding gifts, furniture, cut glass, china, bric-a-brac, art work, linen, silver ware, clock, pictures, table ware, paintings, needle work, etc.

The groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. David C. Haseltine of French avenue, South Braintree, and enjoys a large circle of friends.

Special electric cars conveyed the guests from South Braintree.

After a wedding trip of two weeks to Albany, New York, Philadelphia and Washington the happy couple will reside on French avenue, South Braintree.

Hussey—Williams.

On Wednesday evening, Oct. 12th, the home of Mrs. Sarah C. Williams of Cross street, was the scene of a pretty wedding. The occasion was the marriage of Mrs. Williams' daughter, Miss Sarah C. Williams, to Mr. William G. Hussey of Lawrence, Mass.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. William A. Mayo of the Methodist Episcopal church. The bride and groom were attended by Miss Mabel Ripley of West Quincy, and Mr. Richard Jones of this city.

At the close of the ceremony the bride and groom were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Sarah C. Williams and Mr. and Mrs. Hussey of Lawrence. The interior of the house was beautifully decorated with cut flowers, ferns and autumn leaves. The bride was charmingly gowned in pearl gray nuns veiling over taffeta with trimmings of chiffon and lace and carried a bouquet of bride roses. The bridesmaid wore white nuns veiling over white taffeta, and carried a bouquet of carnations.

During the evening refreshments were served by A. Philip, caterer. Among those present were friends and relatives from Lawrence, Boston, Winchester and this city. The presents were many and varied, and showed the high esteem in which the couple were held.

Amid a shower of rice, and with the best wishes of their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Hussey left for Boston from where they took the train for Greenville, N. H. After their return they will reside at 26 Upton street, Boston, and will be at home to their friends after November first.

Harmony and Reciprocity.

Oh, happy outcome—
Harmony
'Twixt William J.
And Alton B.;
The cross of gold
Held up today
By Alton B.
And William J.
It's mighty tough
On William J.,
But as he grunts
And tugs away
His soul may soak
In harmony
Poured out on him
By Alton B.
Oh, happy outcome—
Is there bliss
This side of heaven
More than this?
Breathes there a man
Who would have bet
They'd get together
With this get?
And still it is
No more than right,
Because in nineteen hundred's
Losing fight
A vote was cast
By Alton B.
For William J.
And harmony.

ANECDOTES ABOUT JOSEPH JEFFERSON

Veteran Actor's Test of His Powers Without Stage Scenery.

REVENGE OF A PROPERTY MAN.

The Comedian's Encounter With One Who Was Repulsed For His Familiarity—Novel Experience With an Irishman—Result of an Interview With a Valet—Jefferson's Story of a Pass Worker.

Several years ago Joseph Jefferson, the veteran actor, who recently retired from the stage, spent a short summer vacation as the guest of an old time Minneapolis friend at a comparatively unknown resort at one of the lesser Minnesota lakes, says the Chicago Mail. "General," said the actor to his host one day, "my object in coming here was threefold—first, I wanted to meet you again and enjoy your companionship; second, I needed rest and recreation, and this is a good place to secure both, and third, I wanted to test my own powers a little.

"Do you know, I once felt very certain concerning my own histrionic abilities? Well, I did. When I was many years younger I was egotistical enough to believe that it didn't make much difference whether I had the valuable accessories of a fine theater and good scenic effects or not. At any rate, I was able to handle my audience about as I wanted to do it, whether I played Rip in a barn or a first class theater. I knew then that the people turned out to see me and not the work of the scene painter. I am not sure about it now. I find myself wondering whether I have lost the power of moving the people aside from the associations of a good supporting company and excellent theatrical appointments. I want to test this matter, and I mean to do it before I leave here. Will you help me?"

"Nothing could be easier," replied his host. "We will spend an evening with some friends of mine who do not know you, and I will arrange matters so that you can give them a few selections from 'Rip.' I have an acquaintance—a well to do miller—who lives in a small village about six miles from here. We will drive over there some afternoon this week and spend the evening. No one in the place knows you. I will introduce you as Mr. Joseph, an old friend of mine from New York, who formerly was an actor. This will give you an opportunity to test your powers upon utter strangers and without any help from scenery or supporting company."

A few evenings later the Minneapolis gentleman and his friend, "Mr. Joseph" of New York, were seated in the miller's parlor after tea. The conversation turned upon the stage and the difference between the modern styles of acting and those of a half century ago. "My friend here did some creditable work in his time, I am told," said Jefferson's companion. "Have you forgotten all your old tricks? Can't you give us a few lines from some of your old plays or have you entirely forgotten them all?"

"Well, I don't know—it's been a great many years since I tried anything of that sort, you know. I don't know whether I can remember any of my old lines or not. But I'll try it if you'll agree not to make fun of me. H'm! How does it go? Yes—no—ah, yes, I have it. The line runs like this"—

And Jefferson began reading the scene between Rip, the jolly vagabond, and his scolding wife. The little audience evidently enjoyed it, as the hearty and almost incessant laughter abundantly testified. Then "Mr. Joseph" gave Rip's parting with little Meenie. The laughter ceased. Then followed the weird scene between Rip and the dwarfs in the Catskills. At this point the silence in the room had become painfully oppressive. Every auditor seemed to be holding his breath. The old man paused for a moment and then gave the lines describing Rip's return home after his twenty years' sleep. As the reading progressed the silence in the room was broken, but it was broken by the sobs of the miller and his household. There was not the slightest manifestation of applause when "Mr. Joseph" abruptly ended his reading and resumed his seat.

As Jefferson and his companion bade their entertainers good night and started upon the homeward trip the Minnesotan merely said, "Well, Joe?" and "Mr. Joseph" simply replied, "I am satisfied."

On several occasions one summer Mr. Jefferson had with him as a guide an old colored man, to whom had reached dimly and from afar the fame of Rip Van Winkle, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. One day, when the two were out fishing in a rowboat, he hazarded a few remarks: "Boss, is it a circus you are in?" "Not exactly a circus," said Mr. Jefferson. "Yas, sah. Ye can act, can't ye?" Mr. Jefferson made a modest reply. "Well, sah, I never git to New York, but I'd powerful like to see ye act, sah, but I'd give 50 cents if you'll cut up right now!"

Mr. Jefferson does not like to be spoken of as Joe, says the Kansas City Journal. He believes that his age and position entitle him to the respect shown by the use of his full Christian name and cites in his argument that Edwin Booth was rarely if ever referred to as Ned.

Once while on a western tour the comedian carried with the company a property man whose fondness for strong waters was as large as his bump of veneration was small. The latter failing led him into speaking of the stars as "his jigsteps" and "his riplets."

One morning the property man turned up at rehearsal in a highly inebriated condition. Meeting Mr. Jefferson in the wings, it occurred to him that it would be a graceful thing to tender him an offhand apology. So, leaning gently up against the comedian, he remarked:

"Jeffy, old boy, when one feller comes to another feller"—

"Jeffy, old boy," shocked the comedian beyond expression.

"Go, sir!" he exclaimed. "Go, sir, at once!"

The offender went. That night "Rip Van Winkle" was the bill, and the house was packed from pit to dome. In a corner of the gallery sat the property man, looking rather frayed around the edges. The play progressed. Rip is turned out into the storm and, standing upon the threshold of his home, utters the most pathetic line in the piece:

"You say that I have no share in this house?"

Then through the silence comes in sad and asthmatic tones:

"Only 80 per cent of the gross, Jeffy, old boy."

The comedian collapsed. The property man was avenged.

A good story is told of an experience of Joseph Jefferson, the great actor, says Leslie's Weekly. A number of years ago he played a one night engagement in a small Indiana town, appearing in his favorite part of Rip Van Winkle. In the hotel at which he stopped was an Irishman "recently landed," who acted as porter and general assistant. Judged by the deep and serious interest which he took in the house, he might have been clerk, lessee and proprietor rolled into one.

At about 6 o'clock in the morning Mr. Jefferson was startled by a violent thumping on his door. When he struggled into consciousness and realized that he had left no "call" order at the office he was naturally very indignant. But his sleep was spoiled for that morning, so he arose and soon after appeared before the clerk. "See here," he demanded of that individual, "why was I called at this unearthly hour?" "I don't know, sir," answered the clerk. "I'll ask Mike."

The Irishman was summoned. Said the clerk: "Mike, there was no call for Mr. Jefferson. Why did you disturb him?" Taking the clerk by the lapel of the coat the Hibernian led him to one side and said in a mysterious whisper, "He were shnoring loike a horse, sor, and Oi'd heerd the b'ys say as how he were onct afther shlaping for twinty years, so Oi ses to mesilf, ses Oi, 'Moike, it's a cooming on to him agin, and it's yer juty to git the crayther out of yer house instantly!

Jefferson once had in his employ a plausible sort of man, half valet, half factotum, grossly incompetent and unsatisfactory, whom he desired to get rid of, says the New York Press. It was a certainty the man drank. Wine from the cellar would disappear mysteriously, and the supply in the decanters would disappear gradually, but there never was any ocular proof that the servant was responsible.

"And," said Mr. Jefferson, in telling the story to a friend, "there I was. What could I do? However," he continued, "one day as I was sitting in my library, who should I see but William reeling up the walk, drunk as a lord. My opportunity had come after many years. I waited for him. I would tell him how drunk he was. He would deny it of course. He would insist he was sober. But I should have the calm consciousness of right on my side, and my excuse for sending him away would be sufficient. So when William approached I gazed at him with all the severity I could summon, and said:

"'William, you are drunk.'

"He returned my look with perfect imperturbability. 'Mr. Jefferson,' he said, 'I am more than that. I am very drunk, sir.'

"And," continued Mr. Jefferson, "will you tell me what I could do? He took the wind out of my sails. He proved himself a perfectly truthful man."

"And you finally got rid of him?" asked the man to whom the story was told. Just then some one came in to light the lamps, and the comedian looked at him quizzingly. "No," he answered, with a smile. "That was William who just came in. I couldn't discharge a man for telling the truth, could I?"

Among after dinner speakers Joseph Jefferson ranks as one who can tell a good story in a dry, delightful way, says Harper's Weekly. His stories deal principally with theatrical subjects. Here is one of his best:

"While starring through Indiana several years ago," he said at a dinner one night, "my manager was approached by a man who had the local reputation of being a pass 'worker,' or dead beat. He told the usual yarn about being an ex-actor and ended by asking for professional courtesies.

"'I would be glad to oblige you,' said the manager, 'but unfortunately I haven't a card with me.' Just then a happy thought struck him, and he added: 'I'll tell you what I'll do. I will write the pass where it will be easy for you to show it.'

"Leaning over, with a pencil he wrote 'Pass the bearer' on the fellow's white shirt front and signed his name. The beat thanked him and hastened to the gate. The ticket taker gravely examined the writing and let him take a few steps inside, then he called him back and said in a loud voice:

"'Hold on, my friend. I forgot. It will be necessary for you to leave that pass with me!'"

Roosevelt and the Farmer.

[From the Orange Judd Farmer.]

Especially do the farmers of America pin their faith to Theodore Roosevelt. He knows them and their wants.

He was the first president to comprehensively grasp the problems of forestry, irrigation, good roads, rural free delivery, etc. He was instrumental in putting into force laws and policies for aiding agriculture in these and many other respects.

He appointed a commission of experts to review the land laws and to outline such reforms as would best promote the public interest in general and also the welfare of the bona fide settler, stockman, rancher and lumberman, while putting a stop to the plundering of the public domain. Roosevelt means that the public lands, waters and forests shall be the heritage of the people.

The federal irrigation policy has been wisely championed and fathered by Theodore Roosevelt. Without subjecting east or south to further agricultural competition, this irrigation policy is creating thousands of happy and self sustaining homes in the previously arid west, thereby developing a large addition to that best of all markets for our labor, capital and manufacturers—the home market.

Still more wonderful, this national irrigation policy is being carried out without expense to taxpayers. The money for it comes from the sale of public lands—$27,000,000 now available—and is paid back by the settlers upon the land irrigated.

Anti-Imperialist Fashions.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Mr. Dooley remarked a few days ago, "Th' attic of ivry Dimmycrat's house is filled with ol' policies that he wanst used—policies that have faded or punctured a tire or broke a mainspring or been run over be a band wagon." Anybody who goes into the Democratic garret and seeks the corner where the castoff garments of anti-imperialism have been thrown with the successive changes of fashion will certainly confess that Mr. Dooley in this respect understands the Democracy. For five years now the Democracy has been denouncing "imperialism," and this year it again appears in that role, with the so called anti-imperialists proclaiming it the only hope of human liberty. Yet the fashion of its anti-imperialism has changed so often and so completely that it would hardly know itself if it rigged up in its former costumes for the part.

Like Many Others.

An old time Democrat in a Michigan town was discussing politics with a rural Democrat, at the same time dividing a sack of peanuts between them and spreading the shucks over the courthouse steps. "How did you like Judge Parker's speech of acceptance?" asked the town Democrat. "Well," said the rural delegate, as he took another handful of peanuts, "I like peanuts a whole lot better."

The Issue Remains.

[From the New York Globe.]

It is as true now as the campaign enters upon its closing month as it was at the outset that there is only one issue in the canvass, Shall we have a change? In other words, shall the country continue for four years longer in the policy it has pursued during the past eight years or shall it enter upon a new and uncertain policy? Nobody can say that there is anything experimental or uncertain about what the Republicans offer. They "stand pat," saying through their platform and candidate, "If you wish to know what our future will be, look at our past." Neither can anybody say that there is anything except uncertainty about what the Democrats offer. What their policy is they themselves do not know. All that they promise is a change, and that in itself is a pledge to unsettle existing conditions—that is, to bring about uncertainty.

The Friend of Labor.

[From the Post-Express.]

Will organized labor be wise enough and bold enough in its own cause to cast its influence for a president who has proved beyond peradventure that he is not the creature of organized capital and who in taking that course has put his political fortunes in jeopardy?

He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition.

CHAPTER XIII.

IT was dawn before we were abed, but I for one had no sleep, being strained to such a pitch of rapture and pain by what I had discovered. The will I had not to take the joy which I seemed to see before me like some brimming cup of the gods, but not yet, in the first surprise of knowing it offered me, the will to avoid the looking upon it and the tasting of it in dreams. Over and over I said to myself, and every time with a new strengthening of resolution, that Mary Cavendish should not love me, and that in some way I would force her to obey me in that as in other things, never doubting that I could do so.

Well I knew that she could not wed a convict, nor could I clear myself unless at the expense of her sister Catherine, and sure I was that she would not purchase love itself at such a cost as that. There remained nothing but to turn her fancy from me, and that seemed to me an easy task, she being but a child and having, I reasoned, but little more than a childish first love for me, which, as every one knows, doth readily burn itself out by its excess of wick and lack of substantial fuel. And yet, as I lay on my bed with the red dawn at the windows and the birds calling outside and the scent of the opening blossoms entering invisible, such pangs of joy and ecstasy beyond anything which I had ever known on earth overwhelmed me that I could not resist them.

Knowing well that in the end I should prove my strength, for the time I gave myself to that advance of man before the spur of love which I doubt not is after the same fashion as the unfolding of the flowers in the spring and the nesting of the birds and the movement of the world itself from season to season, and would be as uncontrollable were it not that a man is mightier even than that to which he owes his own existence, and hath the power of putting that which he loves before his own desire of it.

But for the time, knowing well that I could at any time take up the reins to the bridling of myself, I let them hang loose, and over and over I whispered what Mary Cavendish had said, and over and over I felt that touch of delicate tenderness on my arm, and I built up such great castles that they touched the farthest skies of my fancy, and all the time braving the knowledge that I should myself dash them into ruins.

But when I looked out of my window that May morning and saw that wonderful fair world and that heaven of blue light with rosy and golden and green boughs blowing athwart it and heard the whir of looms, the calls and laughs of human life, the coo of dove, the hum of bees, the trill of mock birds, outreaching all other heights of joy, the clangor of the sea birds and the tender rustle of the new leaved branches in the wind, that love for me which I had seen in the heart of the woman I had loved since I could remember seemed my own keynote of the meaning of life sounding in my ears above all other sounds of bane or blessing.

But the strength I had to act in discord with it and thrust my joy from me, and I went to planning how I could best turn the child's fancy from myself to some one who would be for her best good. And yet I was not satisfied with Sir Humphrey Hyde, and wished that his wits were quicker, and wondered if years might improve them, and if perchance a man as honest might be found who had the keenness of ability to be the worst knave in the country.

But the boy was brave, and I loved his love for Mary Cavendish, and I could think of no one to whom I would so readily trust her, and it seemed to me that perchance I might by some praising of him and swerving her thoughts to his track lead her to think favorably of his suit. But a man makes many a mistake as to women, and one of the most frequent is that the hearts of them are like wax, to be molded into this and that shape.

That morning, when I met Mistress Mary at the breakfast table, she was pale and distraught, and not only did not speak to me nor look at me, but when I ventured to speak in praise of Sir Humphrey's gallant looks at the ball she turned upon me so fiercely with encomiums of my Lord Estes, whom I knew to be not worthy of her, that I held my tongue. But when Sir Humphrey came riding up a little later she greeted him with such warmth as at once put me to torture and aroused that spirit of defense of her against myself which hath been the noblest thing in my poor life.

So I left them, Mistress Catherine at the flax wheel and Mary out in the garden with Sir Humphrey, gathering roses for the potpourri jars and the distilling into rose water, for little idleness was permitted at Drake Hill even after a ball. I got my horse, but as I started forth Madam Cavendish called—a stiffly resolute old figure standing in the great doorway—and I dismounted and went to her, leading my horse, which I had great ado to keep from nibbling the blossoms of a rose tree which grew over the porch. "Harry," she said in a whisper, "where is Mary?"

"In the garden with Sir Humphrey Hyde," I answered.

Then Madam Cavendish frowned. "And why is she not at her lessons?" she asked sternly.

"The lessons are set for the afternoon, and this morning she is gathering rose leaves, madam," I answered. But that Madam Cavendish knew as well as I, having in truth so ordered the hours of the lessons.

"But"— she said, hesitating. Then she stopped and looked at me with an angry indecision, and then at the garden, where the top of Mary's golden head was just visible above the pink mist of the roses, and Sir Humphrey's fair one bending over it. "Harry," she said, frowning, and yet with a piteous sort of appeal, "why do you not go out into the garden and help to gather the rose leaves?".

Then, before I could answer, as if angry with herself at her own folly, she called out to Mary's little black maid, Sukey, to bid her mistress come in from the garden and spin. But before the maid started I said low in Madam Cavendish's ear, "Madam, think you not that the sweet air of the garden is better for her after the ball than the hot hall and the labor at the wheel?" And she gave one look at me, and called out to Sukey that she need not speak to her mistress, and went inside to her own work and left me to go my way.

I was relieved in my mind that she did not ask me whither, since if she had I should have been driven to one of those broadsides of falsehood in a good cause for which I regret the necessity, but admit it, and if it be to my soul's hurt I care not so long as I save the other party by it.

I was bound for Barry Upper Branch and rode thither as fast as I could, for I contemplated asking the Barry brothers to aid me in the removel of Mistress Mary's contraband goods and was anxious to lose no more time about that than I could avoid.

I was set upon Major Robert Beverly's tomb as a most desirable hiding place for them, and knowing that there was a meeting of the assembly that evening at the governor's to discuss some matters in private before he sailed for England, Major Beverly being clerk, I thought that before the moon was up would be a favorable time for the removal, but I could not move the goods alone, remembering how those sturdy sailors tugged at them, and not deeming it well to get any aid from the slaves.

So I rode straight to Barry Upper Branch, and a handsome black woman in a flaunting gown, with a great display of beads and an orange silk scarf twisted about her head, came to parley with me and told me that both the brothers were away, and added that she thought I should find them at the tavern.

The tavern was a brick building abounding in sharp slants of roof and dimmed in outline by a spreading cloud of new leaved branches, and there was one great honey locust which was a marvel to be seen, and hummed with bees with a mighty drone as of all the spinning wheels in the country, and the sweetness of it blew down upon one passing under, like a wind of breath. And before the tavern were tied, stamping and shaking their heads for the early flies, many fine horses, and among them Parson Downs' and the Barry brothers', and from within the tavern came the sound of laughter in discordant shouts and now and then a snatch of a song. Then a great hoarse rumble of voice would cap the rest, telling some loose story, then the laughter would follow—enough, it seemed, to make the roof shake—and all the time the hum of the bees in the honey locust outside went on.

Before I entered the tavern out burst Parson Downs and caught hold of me with a great shout of welcome. Half drunk he was and yet with a marvelous steadiness on his legs and a command of his voice which would have done him credit in the pulpit. It was said that this great parson could drink more fiery liquor and not betray it than any other man in the colony, and Nick Barry, who was something of a wag, said that the parson's wrestlings with spirits of another sort had rendered him powerful in his encounters with these also. Be that as it may, though I doubt not Parson Downs had drunk more than any man there, no sign of it was in his appearance except that his boisterousness was something enhanced and his hand on my shoulder fevered.

"Good day, good day, Master Harry Wingfield," he shouted. "How goes

The Barry brothers and Captain Jaynes

the time with ye, sir? And, I say, Master Wingfield, what will you take for thy horse there? One I have which can beat him on any course you will pick, with all the creeks in the country to jump, and the devil himself to have a shy at, and even will I trade and give thee twenty pounds of tobacco to boot. 'Tis a higher horse than thine, Harry, and can take two strides to one of his; and mine hath four white feet, and thine but one, which, as every one knoweth well, is not enough. What say you, Harry?"

"Your reverence," I said, laughing, "the horse is not mine, as you know."

"Nay, Harry," he burst forth, "that we all know, and you know that we all know, is but a fable. Doth not Madam Cavendish treat you as a son, and are you not a convict in name only, so far as she is concerned? I say, Harry, you can ride my horse to the winning on Royal Oak day at the races. What think you, Harry?"

"Your reverence," I said, "I pray you to give me time," for well I knew there was no use in reasoning with the persistency to which frequent potations had given rise.

Up to my horse he went with that oversteadiness of the man in his cups, who moves with the stiffness of a tree walking, as if every lift of a heavy foot was the uplifting of a root fast in the ground, and went stroking his head, when straightway my horse, either not liking his touch or the smell of his liquored breath, and judging, as was his wont, that the fault must by some means lie with his own race, straightway lashed out a vicious hind leg like a hammer and came within an ace of the parson's own valuable horse—not the one which he proposed trading for mine—and the wind of the lash frightened the parson's horse, and he in his turn lashed out, and another horse at his side sprang aside.

Straightway there was such a commotion in the tavern yard as never was, and slaves and white servants shouting and forcing rearing horses to their regular standing, and I stroking my beast and striving as best I could to bring his pure horse wits to comprehend the strong pressure and responsibility of humanity for the situation, and the Barry brothers and Captain Jaynes came running forth, Captain Jaynes swearing in such wise that it was beyond the understanding of any man unversed in that language of the high seas; and Nick Barry, laughing wildly, and Dick, glooming, as was the difference with the two brothers when in liquor.

And the landlord, one John Halpin, stood in his tavern doorway with his eyebrows raised, but no other sign of consternation, knowing well enough that all this could not affect his custom and being one of the most toughly leather dried little men whom I have ever seen, and his face so hardened into its final lines of experience that it had no power of changing under new ones. And behind him stood peering, some with wide eyes of terror and some with ready laughs at nothing, the few other roisterers in the tavern at that hour. 'Twas not the best time of day for the meeting of those choice spirits for the discussion of the other spirits which he raised, willy nilly, from the grape and the grain, for the enhancing of the joy of life and defiance of its miseries; but the Barrys and Captain Jaynes and the parson were nothing particular as to the time of day.

When the horses were something quieted, I, desiring not to unfold my errand in the tavern, got hold of Parson Downs by his mighty arm and elbowed Dick Barry, who cursed at me for it, and cut short Captain Jaynes' last string of oaths, and hallooed to Nick Barry and asked if I could have a word with them. Captain Jaynes, though, as I have said, being in the main curiously well disposed toward me, swore at first that he would be hanged if he would stop better business to parley with a convict tutor; but the end of it was that he and the Barry brothers and Parson Downs and I stood together under that mighty humming locust tree, and I unfolded my scheme of moving the powder and shot from Laurel Creek to Major Robert Beverly's tomb.

Noel Jaynes stared at me a second with his hard red face agape, and then he clapped me upon the shoulder and shouted with laughter and swore that it should be done, and that it was a burning shame that the goods had been put where they were to the risk of a maid of beauty like Mary Cavendish, and that he and the Barrys would be with me that very night before moonrise to move them.

Then the parson, who had a poetical turn, especially when in his cups, added quite gravely that no safer place could there be for powder than the tomb of love whose last sparks had died out in ashes, and Dick Barry cried, with an oath, that it would serve Robert Beverly rightly for his action against them in the Bacon rising, for though he was to the front with the oppressed people in this his past foul treachery against them was not forgot, and well he remembered that when he was in hiding for his life—

But then his brother hushed him and said, with a shout of dry laughter, that the past was past, and no use indwelling upon it, but that when it came to a safe hiding place for goods which were to set the kingdom in a blaze and maybe hang the ringleaders he knew of none better than the tomb of a first wife, which, when the second was in full power, was verily back of the farthest back door of a man's memory.

So it was arranged that the four were to meet me that very night after sunset and before moonrise and move the goods, and I mounted and rode away, with Parson Downs shouting after me his proposition to trade horses and even offering £10 to boot when he saw the splendid long pace of my thoroughbred flinging out his legs with that freest motion of anything in the world unless it be the swift upward cleave of a bird when the fluttering of wing wherewith he hath gained his impetus hath ceased and nothing except that invincible rising is seen.

FASHION'S WHIMS.

Skirts With Embroidered Flounces. Taffeta Gowns Still the Vogue.

Taffeta silk as a dress material seems to have taken a new lease of life. Dressmakers predicted that its career in this capacity would end with the summer—another case of dressmakers proposing and patrons disposing.

The latest taffeta street frocks are in three pieces—skirt, waist and a smart little jacket. A new color in this silk is a peacock blue.

Skirts with embroidered flounces, often three in number, are to be very much worn. The embroidery is on the order of English punched work, buttonholed on the edge.

The separate waist is in the fashion field again, and for evening wear white taffeta of an exceedingly soft quality is to be employed.

White taffeta skirts to accompany the taffeta blouse waist is an economical turn of la mode, as a skirt of this description will do duty with a number of dainty waists.

A charming white gown for a young girl is of white, silky henrietta trimmed with heavy lace. The skirt has a deep gathered flounce of henrietta formed of groups of tucks and lace insertion. It gathers slightly about the waist. The bodice has a yoke of lace and a stole formed of broad stitched bands trimmed with buttons. A band of the lace insertion is applied in the sleeve near the lace cuff.

The smart figure represented in the cut wears a toilet of orchid taffeta, a shade which is much in favor. The skirt has a panel in front and a gathered empiecement about the back and hips. At the bottom are festoons of guipure lace and a ruffle of silk.

The Louis XV. corsage is draped around the body and fastened a little at the side of the pointed waist effect with butterfly bows. A fichu of lace edged mull is arranged about the lace yoke. The elbow sleeves are formed of a series of graduated puffs.

Queen Cophetua And the Beggar Man

By KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1904, by Keith Gordon

"Oo, no," concluded Askew, regarding his hostess intently with just that touch of cool mastery in his glance which always made her wonder if the telltale blood were rising in her cheeks and which, at the present moment, caused her somewhat haughty eyes to avoid him, like quivering, cornered animals. "A man's manhood is a greater thing even than his love! And the poor man who asks a rich woman to marry him is like the chap who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

"You place a high value upon love!" she murmured, and despite her efforts there was a little catch in her breath.

"Yes, I think I do," he resumed imperturbably, "so high a value, in fact, that I would place it above all suspicion—above even the suspicion of suspicion!" he ended in an emphatic tone.

Considering that the two were platonic friends of several years' standing, the air of the drawing room seemed curiously surcharged with meaning. Though they sat in silence with their eyes fixed upon the open fire for some time after Askew's last remark, each was fully aware of the other's thoughts, and each listened to the regular ticking of the clock with a vague impression that the sound was ominous with love and heartbreak.

Askew was a man of thirty, with a square jaw, strongly cut features and that pronounced air of masculinity that caused Miss Vance to realize with a thrill that to such a man his manhood, as he had said, must be first! It could not possibly be otherwise. Deep down in his heart of hearts a woman might reign—loved with the passion that only such natures can feel, but never really dominating his life.

Always he would be complete master of himself—and of her! He would love her with a tenderness strong and deep. In her own domain she would be supreme, but that domain would never be coextensive with his own larger life. And yet, to the tips of her fingers, she felt that she would rather be loved by him than by any other man in the world!

Moreover, she was loved by him! She knew it, though he had never by so much as a word admitted it. She was as sure of it as she was of her own love for him, and at the mere thought the blood danced riotously through her veins and her head involuntarily went up. No queen could be prouder, no mere woman more humble, than that thought made her.

Few of her associates would have recognized the expression that softened and glorified the face of the "haughty Miss Vance," as she was called behind her back, as she turned more fully toward Donald Askew and demanded softly:

"Do you mean to say that if you happened to fall in love with a rich woman—and—and"—

"And?" he interrogated.

"And she loved you—or you had reason to think that she did"—

For the second time she paused with a confused impression that the air of the room was suddenly exhausted and that breathing was by no means the simple, natural matter it had always seemed.

"Do you mean to say," she blurted out, with schoolgirlish impetuosity, "that you would not tell her that you loved her?"

"Never in the world!" was the deliberate reply. "Never!" Then he added coolly, "But I should be careful not to do anything so asinine as to fall in love with a rich girl in the first place, knowing, as I do, that the money making talent is not one to which I can lay claim."

For a moment her heart turned to ice. Then the blood flowed back warm and strong, and she understood. He was taking this stand in the hope of throwing her off the track, because his fantastic sense of honor put him out of the running, and he wished to divest himself even of the interest that an undeclared love might arouse in her. She could have laughed for very joy at his dissembling.

"What would you do assuming that in spite of yourself you should fall in love with an heiress?" she persisted.

He fenced manfully. "Well, I think I should clear out. It would be the best thing to do in a case like that."

Miss Vance, the haughty Miss Vance, the heiress of the Vance millions, regarded him demurely. She was a person who was accustomed to having her wishes complied with. She wondered vaguely what it was about the man before her that made her ready, eager even, to step down from the regal position she had always occupied and sue for his favor; why in her eyes he should seem the king! And when at last she spoke her voice was almost wistful.

"But what about the woman—the poor rich woman? Perhaps—perhaps she might hate her riches—she might just loathe them. But what could she do? Perhaps they came to her and she could not get rid of them any more than she could change the color of her eyes or the shape of her nose! And what if, in spite of it all, she loved you? Shouldn't you consider her at all?"

"Great Scott!" exclaimed Askew, with mock dismay. "How did we ever get into such a sentimental discussion—two good comrades like you and me? By the way," he went on quickly, "have I happened to mention to you that I'm going off for awhile—possibly for good?

"It's an excellent business offer, but it takes me to the other side of the continent. I have not actually decided, but I shall doubtless accept it. Indeed, I can scarcely afford not to for several reasons."

He did not look at her, and she was thankful for even that small sign of perturbation on his part. A quick resolution seized her. It was leap year—blessed thought—and why should not a woman, once in a thousand years or so, stand up and demand her own as fearlessly and directly as a man would do? Had she not, by every wile that a woman may use, tried to make him acknowledge his love for her? Never—never—never would he ask her to marry him because of her millions. Well, then, she would ask him!

The first tumult of her resolution over, she felt a strange exhilaration. Even the thought that intruded itself like a specter between them—the possibility that she might have mistaken his feeling toward her—did not deter her.

If she were rejected? Well, she had rejected a number of men in her day, and there would be a certain poetical justice in his meting out to her what she had meted out to them!

While these thoughts were racing through her mind she had touched the bell.

"Remember, Smithson, I am not to be disturbed," she threw over her shoulder to the butler.

"You might light a cigar if you have one about you," she suggested whimsically. "It would be a favor to me if you would. Men are always more approachable when they're smoking, aren't they?"

Askew smiled assent and complied with her request. Then he paused with the lighted cigar between his fingers and gave her a long look, which she returned unflinchingly. With an effort she began to speak.

"Duncan," she said bravely, "I have something to tell you. Perhaps not another woman in the world would do it, and perhaps you'll hate me for it"—

"Hate you!" he interrupted in a voice whose derisive incredulity was music to her ears. "Hate you! I can imagine a good many things, but not that."

"Well"—her voice was slightly uncertain, but her eyes looked into his without wavering—"you see, there is a poor rich girl—a girl who has loads of money and who just hates it because it is always cutting her off from all the things and people she cares for"—

"Poor thing!" sighed Askew mockingly. "What a pity she can't divide with me!"

"That's just what she wants to do," leaped from her lips. "She wants to give it all to you. You see—I—I'm speaking for her. She isn't in the habit of saying things like this to men, and she doesn't know exactly how to do it. But she wants you to know that she thinks you the one man in the world; that her faith in you is so great that she even dares to tell you that—she—loves—you—Donald—because she knows that if she has made a mistake and you do not care for her you will be as truthful with her as she has been with you."

Donald Askew sat as if stupefied, while the struggle between pride and love went on within him. To be pointed out as the man who married the rich Miss Vance, to have it said of him that he had feathered his nest well—these and kindred possibilities rose up in his mind and galled his spirit beyond endurance.

Then his vision cleared, and he saw nothing, was conscious of nothing in the world but a proud, sensitive face covered with womanly shame. Before that vision his pride went down, and, leaning forward, he buried his face in her lap. A moment later her lips touched his hair.

"I'm a brute, a perfect brute," he groaned, "to have made you do it!"

"You're the brute I love, though," was the whispered answer.

Optical Exaggeration.

Owen Wister, writing of his experience with "The White Goat and His Country," mentions a circumstance which will perhaps recall to naturalists and hunters some miscalculations of their own. He had traveled across the continent in the hope of killing white goats, and of course he had white goats in his eye.

By 10 o'clock the next morning T. and I saw "300" goats on the mountain opposite where we had climbed. Just here I will risk a generalization. When a trapper tells you he has seen so many hundred head of game, he has not counted them, but he believes what he says.

The goats that T. and I now looked at were a mile away in an air line, and they seemed numberless. The picture which the white, slightly moving dots made, like mites on a cheese, inclined one to a large estimate of them, since they covered the whole side of a hill.

The more we looked the more we found. Besides the main army there were groups, caucuses, families sitting apart over some discourse too intimate for the general public, and beyond these we could discern single animals moving, gazing, browsing, lying down.

"There's 100,000 goats!" said T.

"Let's count 'em," I suggested, and we took the glasses. There were thirty-five.

Good Old Stories.

"There's no doubt about it; he is getting on in politics."

"He hasn't done anything in particular."

"No. But they are telling the same anecdotes about him that they used to tell about Henry Clay and Daniel Webster."—Washington Star.

Their Start.

"Where did they go on their honeymoon?"

"To the hospital. You see, they had so many fool friends."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Necessity For Arctic Exploration

By Commander ROBERT E. PEARY, U. S. N.

ONLY two great prizes now wait the present day explorer, THE NORTH POLE AND THE SOUTH POLE.

Mr. Ziegler of Brooklyn, with commendable but, I fear, misdirected persistence, is pushing his attack upon the pole via Franz-Josef Land, and news from his expedition may be received at any time.

In Europe, "the metropolis of the world," geographical work is now of necessity a work of detail and rigid scientific development.

Of this class of work perhaps no better example can be given than that inaugurated and carried on by Sir John Murray in the Scottish lakes.

What yet remains to be done? On this I can touch only in the briefest and broadest way and from a personal point of view.

The fact of my personal interest in the polar field does not affect the truth of the broad statement that there is no longer any great pioneer work of geographical discovery to be accomplished, EXCEPT AT THE APEXES OF THE EARTH, at the north and south poles.

It has been somewhat the fashion in the last few years in the interest and enthusiasm excited for antarctic work to rather decry further arctic work as not likely to be of any value and to assume that in the antarctic region alone is there a field for really valuable scientific investigation.

I do not at all agree with this view. There are no three million square miles of the earth's surface that do not contain scientific information of value much greater than the cost of securing it.

FURTHER THAN THIS, I BELIEVE IN DOING THE THING THAT HAS BEEN BEGUN AND THAT IS WORTH DOING BEFORE SHIFTING TO A NEW OBJECT. THERE IS NO HIGHER, PURER FIELD OF INTERNATIONAL RIVALRY THAN THE STRUGGLE FOR THE NORTH POLE.

The south pole, from a practical geographical point of view, is no less a prize, but I do not consider it a greater than the north pole. But the north pole HAS A PLACE IN HISTORY, IN LITERATURE, IN SENTIMENT, if you will, which the south pole will never hold.

I will note here but two other geographical feats of primary magnitude yet to be accomplished by the explorer. The culminating point of Asia remains yet to be won. The culminating point of North America remains yet untrodden by human foot.

THERE IS AMPLE ROOM FOR A LARGER FORCE OF ACTIVE, ABLE WORKERS IN THE FIELD OF GEOGRAPHICAL RESEARCH.

There is too much money devoted to schools and libraries and too little to the field of exploration and research, WHICH FURNISHES THE FACTS FOR INSTRUCTION IN THE SCHOOLS AND MATERIAL WITH WHICH TO FILL THE VOLUMES IN THE LIBRARIES.

Meaninglessness of the Degree

By Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY, Eminent English Chemist

I HAVE often seen men whose circumstances or whose character or whose deliberate choice has led them to abstain from taking a degree and who are none the less MOST SUCCESSFUL INVESTIGATORS and who have proved inspiriting teachers.

* * *

On the other hand, I have perhaps more frequently come in contact with graduates whose only claim to recognition is a parrotlike ability to repeat what has been told them and a knack of gauging the idiosyncrasies of the examiner. THE OLDER I GET THE LESS I BELIEVE IN THE UNIVERSITY DEGREES AS A TEST OF CAPACITY.

* * *

The pernicious system of competitive scholarships and fellowships instead of eleemosynary support given to the necessitous and the deserving youth has also contributed to the DEBASEMENT OF THE SCIENTIFIC SPIRIT, for it has early implanted in the young mind the idea that to outrun his fellows and to work solely for money reward are the ends to be aimed at INSTEAD OF THE JOY OF THE EXERCISE OF A DIVINE GIFT FOR THE BENEFIT OF MAN.

In Ten Years Ireland Will Belong to Irishmen

By JOHN E. REDMOND, Irish Parliamentary Leader

IF at the next general election we present a solid and united front in Ireland, if with the material assistance of our friends and brethren in the United States we are able to hold our eighty-five seats in parliament and to organize our forces in the English constituences, the next government will have so small a majority that its continuation in office WILL DEPEND LARGELY ON THE GOOD WILL OF THE IRISH PARTY.

IN TEN YEARS IRELAND WILL BE THE PROPERTY OF THE PEOPLE OF IRELAND.

All matters relating to LOCAL government are in their hands. We have only to copy the perseverance and inability to recognize defeat which were shown by the Boer farmers in South Africa to win victory. A few short years will witness, if not the full ideal of Irish freedom, at least such an advance as will make it certain that our sons and our grandsons will witness THE DAWN OF THE GLORIOUS DAY OF IRELAND'S INDEPENDENCE.

The Daughters of the Revolutions are very glad to announce that Mrs. Smith is still in care of their house the John Adams house.

PALACE OF PLEASURE.

New Jersey Church's Institution to Fight the Devil.

BOTH SEXES IN ITS MEMBERSHIP.

Building In Jersey City Where Dancing, Card Playing, Billiards, Gymnastic Exercises and Theatrical Performances Are Provided For. Rev. Dr. John L. Scudder and Joseph Milbank Creators of the Plan.

One of New Jersey's churches has undertaken to fight the devil with some of his own weapons, says the New York Tribune. A few days ago a church in Jersey City opened a "palace of pleasure," so the public might obtain recreation there instead of at saloons and dance halls. There people may dance, play cards, billiards and pool and take part in as well as witness theatrical performances. There the boys may box and wrestle and the men may smoke.

The People's palace, as it is known from the inscription over its entrance, was created by the Rev. Dr. John L. Scudder, pastor of the First Congregational church of Jersey City, and Joseph Milbank, a citizen of New York. Mr. Scudder furnished the ideas, Mr. Milbank the money. As Mr. Scudder said at the time the cornerstone of the building was laid: "The People's palace will sanctify all legitimate amusements and will not let the devil have a monopoly of them. It will keep boys off the streets, young men out of saloons and young women out of dance halls."

Both Mr. Scudder and Mr. Milbank believe in "practical Christianity," and the way they were brought together illustrates what "practical Christianity" is. About ten years ago the pastor of the First Congregational church of Jersey City induced its members to build tenpin alleys in its basement, so that the boys of the neighborhood might "have their fun" there instead of at beer halls. The tenpins made a great rumpus among some other clergymen, and they also attracted the attention of Mr. Milbank. The clergymen openly criticised such an amusement in a church and said it would send more boys to the beer halls. Mr. Milbank watched and waited. He said nothing.

The tenpins stayed, and the congregation, and especially the Sunday school, increased until the First Congregational became the largest church of that denomination in Jersey City. Furthermore, one "innovation" led to another. One day Mr. Scudder discovered that some of the boys in their desire to learn to swim went down to the water front, where they were compelled to mingle with the low characters always to be found there. He immediately decided that the church should have a swimming tank of its own and succeeded in having one built. Mr. Milbank heard of the tank, and on meeting the pastor, he said:

"Well, I understand that you have added a swimming pool to your church?"

"Exactly. Cleanliness is next to godliness," the clergyman replied.

"Well, well, and what will you do next?"

"We would build a pleasure palace for our people if we could. We would begin tomorrow if we had the money. At any rate, you ought to believe in a church swimming pool."

"How's that?" asked Mr. Milbank.

"Because you are a Baptist," said Dr. Scudder.

The two men have been close friends ever since, and they have worked together in planning and building a house of amusement as if they were of one and the same creed. It is for this reason perhaps that the People's palace is wholly undenominational. Before the People's palace was opened 400 men, women and children applied for membership. More young women wanted to join the dancing classes than there was room for.

Many of those who are now to be found nightly at the People's palace are young men who used to hang about the poolrooms of the water front. They may be seen playing at the pool and billiard tables or engaged in games of pinochle or cribbage. Others are up on the top floor, which is equipped as a gymnasium and armory, engaged in boxing and wrestling bouts. Dr. Scudder is particularly anxious that all his boys should know how to defend themselves with their fists, and in his spare moments he instructs them in pugilism. Only the other night he found two boys wrangling over a game of checkers and just caught a big boy about to strike a smaller lad. Putting his hand on the shoulder of the latter, he said:

"This is as much your fault as the other fellow's. If you had developed your muscle he would have been afraid to touch you."

The People's palace stands at Bergen avenue and Forrest street on a plot 117 by 63 feet. It is four stories high and cost $100,000. Its auditorium on the third floor is the largest on Jersey City heights and will hold 1,300 persons. Its stage is equipped with all the accessories of a modern theater. It will be used at different times as a theater, ballroom and Sunday school room. The basement will contain bowling alleys, shuffleboards, pool and billiard tables, a rifle range and a smoking room for men. On the other floors are rooms for dining, reading, card playing and for sewing and cooking classes. There are also private apartments where men and women may arrange their dress for a ball. In pleasant weather the roof may be used as a garden or a drilling place for the Roosevelt troopers, as Dr. Scudder calls a regiment of boys to whom he has given military training.

The annual fair of the Ladies' Aid society of the Methodist church occurred on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 11 and 12 at the Town hall.

A special meeting of All Souls church parish was held Wednesday evening, Oct. 12, at 7.45 o'clock. Though small in numbers, owing to the severe weather, the meeting was an enthusiastic and interesting one. Ten names were presented and voted into membership. It was voted to continue the present method of raising money for current expenses, which the treasurer recommended as having been entirely satisfactory.

Rev. Matthew McDonnell will probably occupy his new home on Washington street, during the coming week. The Philergians cordially invite the pupils and teachers of the public schools of Braintree, East and South Braintree included, to sttend an entertainment given by the club, the afternoon of Oct. 18th from 4 to 6 at the Monatiquot school building. Mrs. Huntington Smith from the Animal Rescue League, Boston, will give an interesting talk, illustrated by stereopticon views. It is hoped that all the pupils will take advantage of this opportunity to hear Mrs. Smith, and learn something of the work done in behalf of the dumb animals.

Free delivery of mail in Braintree will undoubtedly be established throughout the town just as soon as the houses are officially numbered. This is being brought about in response to two petitions which have gone in; one from Braintree, the other from South Braintree. Three government inspectors were in town Thursday looking over the field and find the houses sufficiently near together to warrant free delivery. When the buildings are properly numbered the expressman and others, as well as the mail carriers, can easily find their delivery place. We believe free delivery here is in the line of progress and after it is established we would not part with it.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

COLUMBIA MUSIC HALL.

Boston is to have a new music hall of the first class. There has long been a persistent demand for a first-class house where one might enjoy wholesome, funny burlesque and clever vaudeville in clean, bright, attractive surroundings. With the end in view of supplying such want, Harry N. Farren, long favorably known in the management of the Columbia theatre, has associated himself with W. A. Edwards, of Montreal, and secured a long lease of that house, which is being entirely re-decorated for the opening next Monday, Oct. 17. The Sparrow Amusement Co. Limited, of which Mr. Edwards is a member, is the wealthiest theatrical syndicate in the Canadas and has extensive European and American connections. It has just purchased all the property rights, costumes and scenery of the popular Weber-field burlesques and they can be produced at no theatre other than the Columbia Music hall, as the house is now named. The opening attraction will be the funniest of all—"Whoop-De-Doo," presented with one of Weber and Field's own casts of New York principals.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

The special feature of the vaudeville show at Keith's the week of Oct. 17 will be Jean Marcel's bas reliefs, a species of living pictures that has enjoyed a great vogue the past two seasons. The models employed are all from the Ateliers of famous French artists and their posing is pronounced the most artistic that has ever been witnessed in America. Mon. Germinal, a noted French operatic singer, will attract the music lovers in large numbers, as he is pronounced the best male vocalist who has ever been heard in the varities. Yorke and Adams, favorite Hebrew comedians and parody singers; Zeno, Carl and Zeno, aerial acrobats; Irving Jones, a favorite "real coon" singer and story teller; Paulton and Dooley, two of the cleverest trick and fancy bicycle riders in the world, and Leroy and Clayton, in an Irish dialect comedy sketch, "A Horse on Hogan," will be some of the prominent entertainers in the bill. "Mike" a marvelously trained dog, will be the special feature of the juveniles.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The attraction at the Castle Square theatre next week is sure to create unusual interest among its host of patrons as the management has selected Bronson Howard's famous comedy "The Henrietta" for production. It will be remembered that this play was one of the earliest successes of the Robson and Crane combination and that it made a fortune for these two famous actors nearly twenty years ago. This brilliant dramatic effort was, upon its original presentation at the Union Square theatre, New York, hailed as a typical American comedy, by an American author for American audiences, original, truthful, clean and moral. Its record has proved the correctness of the estimate first put upon it and the playgoer who has not yet enenjoyed the story told in "The Henrietta" has delightful dramatic treat to anticipate.

TREMONT THEATRE.

It has been said of "Parsifal," Wagner's sacred festival musicdrama which Henry W. Savage will produce in English at the Tremont theatre, Boston, on October 17th, for the first time on any stage, that in no other work of the master have the moods of the drama itself been so wonderfully reflected in and illuminated by music. In the prelude one hears the whole promise of the drama spoken to him in music of ecstatic beauty. Beginning with the lofty "Eucharist" motive, one is carried through the uplifting "Grail" motive, the tremendously vivifying "Faith" motive and then, at the rise of the curtain, the agony of the sinning Amfortas. No more beautiful analysis of the prelude has ever been written than that which Wagner wrote himself. His poetic exposition of the prelude is: Strong and firm does faith reveal itself, elevated and resolute even in suffering. In answer to the renewed promise the voice of Faith sounds softly from the dimmest heights—as though borne on the wings of the snow-white dove—slowly descending, embracing with ever-increasing breadth and fullness the heart of man, filling the world and the whole of nature with mightiest force; then, as though stilled to rest, glancing upward again toward the light of heaven. Then once more from the awe of solitude arises the lament of loving compassion the agony, the holy sweat of the Mount of Olives, the divine sufferings of Golgotha; the body blanches, the blood streams, forth and glows now with the heavenly glow of blessing in the chalice, putting forth on all that lives and languishes the gracious Gift of Redemption through love. For him we are prepared, for Amfortas the sinful guardian of the shrine who, with fearful rue for sin gnawing at his heart, must prostrate himself before the chastisement of the vision of the grail. Shall there be redemption from the devouring torments of his soul? Yet once again we hear the promise and hope."

☞ Fake piano tuners are becoming so numerous and are spoiling so many pianos that a National Society of Tuners has been formed to protect the people from them. We notice that Frank A. Locke, the well known piano tuner in this town, has been appointed an examiner for Boston and vicinity.

☞ Eyeglasses fitted scientifically. No guess work.—Williams.

Y. M. C. A. Work at Brockton.

Rain interferred but little with the registration for the evening educational classes at the Young Mens' Christian Association at Brockton, says the Enterprise. The majority registered for the civil service course which started Thursday evening. Registration for this and other classes will be continued through the week. Mechanical drawing, penmanship, electricity and German will start next week and the other courses will be commenced as soon as they fill. Signwriting, Spanish, commercial law, bookeeping and English are coming with good encouragement.

The classes in poultry raising and automobiling are not scheduled to start before the early part of November and both are receiving recruits already.

Gymnasium members are showing sufficient interest in a class for "First aid to the Injured" to insure its success and plans will be completed in a short time for the series of lessons and demonstration. Men interested in the study of vocal music and note reading are also beginning to be heard from and a well known first class teacher has been seen and promises to take a class if sufficient interest is shown.

There also appears to be enough interest in the Camera Club to insure information. There are enough followers in the association if they will only get together.

The association already has a good orchestra.

☞ For representatives to the Legislature vote for Levi H. Turner and Gustave B. Bates.

QUINCY MUSIC HALL.

The Location is the best of any hall in the city. The street cars pass the door with a turnout right in front of the Hall.

The Floor is of selected maple laid with the greatest care, and is kept in perfect condition, being covered with canvas when not used for dancing.

The Ventilation—a most important consideration—is such as to keep the air pure with even a crowded hall and without causing any drafts.

The Hall is Lighted by electricity, brilliantly and pleasantly, and with a switchboard arranged so that all desired effects can be obtained in the Hall proper or on the stage. Gas is used as an auxiliary light.

The Heating is direct—indirect, ample, and giving the most healthful results.

The Stage has been designed with care, and is furnished with a particularly generous supply of attractive and appropriate scenery.

For Advertising. the Music Hall Billboards throughout the City are of very great value.

To Darken the Hall, there are special window fitings so that at noonday the Hall can be made as dark as at midnight.

In case of fire there are pails of water and chemical fire extinguishers throughout the Hall. There is an asbestos fire curtain by which the Stage can be instantly cut off from the Hall proper. There are nine (9) doors opening from the Hall and five (5) separate exits.

As a whole. Quincy Music Hall has been carefully planned to meet the requirements of those who wish a large and really first class Hall.

SLAUGHTER CONTINUES

Awful Bloodshed In Series of Battles South of Mukden

RUSSIAN LOSS OF 40,000

Losses of Japanese Said to Be Smaller Than Those of Opponents--Kuropatkin's Report to Czar Indicates That He Is Hard Pressed--British Experts Agree That He Has Met Defeat--Plain Occupied by Retiring Russians Covered With Bursting Schrapnel

Mukden, Oct. 17.—The battle was renewed and continued throughout last night, being especially heavy at midnight. The Russians retain their position along the Shakhe river and have made frequent attacks upon the Japanese, capturing six of the latter's guns. The eastern army is helping the western forces. There was very heavy artillery fire Sunday. The fighting is now centred on the plain.

London, Oct. 17.—At the close of the seventh consecutive day of fighting between Mukden and Liaoyang the battle was still raging, the Russians offering a stubborn resistance to the fierce onslaughts of the Japanese. The sacrifice of life has been appalling, estimates of the Russian losses alone in killed and wounded at the end of the sixth day's fight being conceedly 30,000, while it is not improbable that it aggregated at that time 40,000.

Japanese official reports estimate that 10,000 Russians were left on the field of battle up to the night of Oct. 14 and claim that the Japanese losses are small by comparison with those of the Russians.

General Kuropatkin's report to Emperor Nicholas depicts the desperate character of the fighting and praises the valor of the troops, indicating, however, that he is hard pressed, with the result still in the balance. All hope of securing Port Arthur this season has been abandoned.

St. Petersburg has an unconfirmed report that General Nodzu has been seriously wounded. A question of interest in St. Petersburg is the fate of General Kuropatkin as a factor in the Russian military situation.

All reports today agree upon General Kuropatkin's defeat, in what military critics consider one of the greatest battles of modern times, comparable with Koniggratz and Leipsic. Spencer Wilkinson considers Marquis Oyama's conduct of the battle as not marked by the same distinctions of plan and execution as that of General Kuropatkin, whose handling of his army is quite intelligible on the assumption that he was ordered to make the attack.

Belated dispatches arriving in London descriptive of the week's fighting to some extent bear out this view. For instance, The Standard's correspondent with General Kuroki's army testifies that the Russian troops were more skilfully led and more capable and resolute than those encountered in the opening weeks of the campaign. The same correspondent remarks the grave disadvantage under which the Japanese are laboring, owing to the inferiority of their field guns. He refers to the fighting of Oct. 11, when "our six batteries, though well posted and admirably handled, were compelled to remain silent the greater part of the day and see the chances of a lifetime pass under the very muzzles of their guns. Effective pursuit was debarred us by the superior range of the Russian artillery."

AS A MATTER OF PRIDE

Russians Do Not Want to Stop Until They Win One Battle

Mukden, Oct. 17.—There was a lull in the battle Saturday, but fighting was continued yesterday on the right. The army is southwest of here 10 miles. It is now certain that the army will be able to extricate itself.

The losses amount to 30,000. It has been a bigger battle than that of Liaoyang.

The firing to the southwest is less violent. The men are tired out and food has been insufficient. Every available gun and man is being used. The troops have behaved most gallantly, hurling themselves repeatedly against impregnable positions.

The heavy storm of Oct. 14 added to the misery of the troops. There is great depression, but stolid tenacity among the men. There has been great sacrifice of officers.

The plain occupied by the retiring Russians is covered with bursting shrapnel. The gunners shovelled shells into the breeches of the guns as stokers shovel coal into furnaces. Howitzers are used by the eastern army. The TRUNKS RIFLED.

Two Maids Who Kept Their Money in an Unsafe Place.

Sometime between 8.30 Saturday night and 6.30 Sunday morning sneak thieves entered the house of Andrew Hawester at 136 Granite street, and rifled the trunks of Lena Hakkaraini and Fannie Maki. They secured over $50 in money from the Hakkaraini girls trunk and $47 from the trunk of the Maki girl. The two girls are employed as maids in Wollaston families but have a room at 136 Granite street. Their room was on the first floor but on the opposite side of the house from that occupied by the Hawester family. The girls were at home Saturday night and when they left at 8.30 for Wollaston their money was all right. Sunday morning on their return it was gone. The thieves gained entrance through a window and forced open the trunks. It is thought that the thieves must have had some intimation that there was money in the trunks.

JUG SMASHED.

Whiskey Went Down the Sink When Officers Came to Raid.

Inspectors McKay and Bradley accompanied by Officers Goodhue and George A. McKay raided the boarding house of Sarah A. Madden at 5 Temple street, Sunday noon, and seized a small quantity of lager beer, and a lot of empty beer bottles. As the officers approached the premises they were seen by parties in the house, one of whom hastily smashed a jug of whiskey in the sink.

Birthday Party.

There was a pretty gathering at the home of Floyd Perkins Macdonald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Macdonald of Faxon avenue on Friday afternoon Oct. 14, it being his second birthday. About fifteen of his little friends and relatives with their mothers made it a pleasant time for all.

He was well remembered with little tokens. Ice cream, cake, candy and fancy cookies, were served from a prettily decorated table. All wore bonbon caps and received as favors tiny little lambs. Graphophone selections were enjoyed during refreshments, and all seemed to have a very pleasant time.

Among those present were: Masters Charles Hearn, Harry Glover, Leslie Newell, Earle Prario, Sumner Swingle, Lawrence Cash. Misses Pauline Swingle, Hazel Carlin, Doris Belcher, Gladys Glover, Elvira Casb, Ivy May Prario, Hazel Belcher.

Brotherhood Meeting Postponed.

The continued illness of Rev. W. Sherman Thompson, who was to have addressed the Brotherhood on Tuesday evening, makes it necessary to postpone the meeting. Mr. Thompson writes he finds it absolutely necessary for him to give up all work for at least two months. He hopes however at some future date to be able to fulfill his engagement to the Brotherhood.

The next regular meeting will be held the second Wednesday in November and a most enjoyable evening has already been planned. Stereopticon views of the World's Fair will be shown, and described by a Quincy man who has visited the fair. All men of the city are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

Handicap Tournament.

A. G. Lockwood made the best gross score (78) at the open handicap tournament on the Wollaston golf links on Saturday, but the prize for the best net score went to M. F. O'Connell with 73. B. L. Pratt of Wollaston was tied with Mr. O'Connell at 80 for the second best gross score, and with G. S. Sprague of Brae-Burn for the second best net score. Thirty-one cards were turned in.

Rabbit Hunt.

A rabbit hunt was the attraction at the Blue Hills reservation on Saturday, and 3000 boys and girls participated in the sport. Coupons had been attached to saplings and bushes, and certain ones entitled the bearer to a live rabbit at the waiting room. Several prize coupons were found, but not all of them, and the hunt will continue. White rabbits were the favorites.

CHRISTIAN MEN

The Need of the Hour, Says Fr. Supple.

In Address to Knights of Columbus.

Special Vesper Services at St. John's Largely Attended.

Special services for Quincy Council, Knights of Columbus, were held Sunday evening at St. John's church, and were largely attended by members and friends.

The services were conducted by Rev. John J. Coan assisted by Rev. Julian E. Johnstone and Rev. John S. Casey.

The musical vespers were by the regular choir assisted by Mr. William Sullivan of Atlantic and were given under the direction of Miss Anastasia A. Hughes, the organist. The anthems were chanted by a double male quartette. "Ave Maris Stella" was sung by the quartette; "Veni Creator," by Mr. Joseph Burns; "O Salutaris," by Mr. William Sullivan; and "Tautum Ergo" by double male quartette.

The sermon was by Rev. James N. Supple, the State chaplain, whose theme was the need of christian men. Fr. Supple said that men of christian faith must assert themselves. They are needed in the home and in public places. Men who will lead an honest life before the world, and do their duty to church and state. There is danger in this age of liberality of losing faith and christianity.

There are in this country 75,000,000 people. The Roman Catholics claim 10,000,000 to 15,000,000, and the Protestants 20,000,000. The 20,000,000 have different beliefs and creeds. Then there are 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 who reject christianity. Thus the atmosphere is dangerous unless we are strong of character. Our young men should not be led astray by secularization or by infidelity.

The only safegard is in organizations like the Knights of Columbus which have an attachment for the church, the home, and the uplift of society. You illustrate to the world what it is to be a christian Catholic man. Liberalism means the destruction of church and society. United we gain the admiration and respect of the public. What you preach, do.

Our battle today is fought in the body and soul of the child. We must work for the protection of the child. They should be taught in the home or by persons duly authorized by the church.

The only way to make men love our church and faith is to set an example. Be valiant men. It is better to die in battle, than to allow evils to exist which threaten the church and the home. Work for the love and glory of God.

A VETO EXPECTED.

Also Several Reports at Meeting of City Council.

A regular meeting of the City Council will be held tonight. It is understood that the Mayor will return the order appropriating $3000 for the school department, without his approval.

Reports may be expected from the Finance Committee, and there are several matters before the Ordinance committee for which reports may be received.

MISS M. E. LAVELLE.

A Notable Funeral of Prominent Young Lady of Wollaston.

Many friends of Miss Mary Ellen Lavelle gathered at her home at Wollaston on Sunday to show their last respect and love for one dear to them. Her dear little children of whom she was Sunday School teacher felt her loss so keenly, that it was indeed touching. Her sodality of which she was a leading member felt that extreme loss, which only they can understand; and the Sunday School teachers with whom she mingled each Sunday or when needed, mourned with the bereaved family. Her companions all of whom were exceedingly dear to her mourned her loss, as one of the family.

The cortege left the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lavelle, at 2 P. M. led by Sunday school teachers, Sodality and pupils. The pall bearers consisted of eight young men. Everything moved in keeping with the saintly one, to the church of the Sacred Heart, Atlantic, where her body was to enter for the last time on this earth.

Services were held by the pastor, Rev. John P. Cuffe. A eulogy which he said is not customery, was pronounced by the pastor, saying this was an exception on which he must say something in regard to the deceased, as he had known her from infancy, baptized her in the St. John's church, Quincy, during his time there, she growing up in the parish, always as an example.

His words were eloquent and affecting the preacher dwelling with consoling effect on her many virtues, which he knew so well, and which had endeared her to all who had known her through life. His words gave to her bereaved parents the consolation they so much needed.

The pall bearers were: Byron Brown, Harry McGrath, Walter Elcock and John Heaney of Quincy, William Hayes and Joseph Hayes of Charlestown, John Lavelle of Dorchester and George Lavelle of Neponset.

The floral tributes were handsome and many, including:

Picturesque Padua.

Padua, in spite of its flat surroundings, is one of the most picturesque cities of upper Italy. And the seeker after gardens will find many charming bits along the narrow canals or by the sluggish river skirting the city walls. Indeed one might almost include in a study of gardens the beautiful Prato della Valle, the public square before the Church of St. Antonio, with its encircling canal crossed by marble bridges, its range of baroque statues of "worthies" and its central expanse of turf and trees. There is no other example in Italy of a square laid out in this parklike way, and the Prato della Valle would form an admirable model for the treatment of open spaces in a modern city.—Century.

Where Sisters Dress Alike.

In Yucatan, Central America, sisters dress precisely alike, even to the tying of a bow, the turn of a button or the flower in the hair. In the tropics large families are the rule, and any day you may see in the country girls in groups of from three to a baker's dozen, who belong to the same family, as their clothes will show. It is easy thus to distinguish the members of a family anywhere, and not infrequently the sisters are called by their favorite flower or color.

STABBED IN NECK

Boston Milliner Is Slain With His Own Sword

TWO SOLDIERS ARE HELD

One of Them Admits Having Quarreled With Victim and to Have Been Responsible For Death, but Claims Self-Defense

Boston, Oct. 17.—Larkin W. Hall, aged 35, proprietor of a millinery establishment at 47 Winter street, was killed at his Back Bay lodgings, 2 St. Botolph street, sometime Saturday night. The death was not discovered until late Sunday, when a friend of the dead man called by appointment.

Last night the police arrested Fred Watson and Eugene Sennott, both privates in the 77th company of the coast artillery stationed at Fort Warren, Boston harbor. The men are held on the charge of murder, and Watson, the police say, has admitted the killing, but claims that he did it in self-defense.

Watson's story of the tragedy is the only one that the police have, as Sennott is said to have been stupefied by liquor at the time and wholly unconscious of what was happening.

According to Watson's story, he had become acquainted with Hall a little more than a week ago. On Thursday he received a letter from Hall, requesting a meeting in Boston on Saturday night, and containing the further request that Watson bring one of his friends with him. Watson wrote to Hall that he would keep the engagement, and accordingly Saturday night he came up from Fort Warren and Sennott accompanied him.

They met Hall in the Park street subway station, and the trio proceeded to a restaurant in the West End, where they all had supper. They spent two or three hours in drinking and then Hall invited the two soldiers to spend the night at his apartments. When they arrived at Hall's rooms Hall produced more liquor for his guests. Soon after Sennott fell asleep on the bed.

Among the decorations in Hall's room was a curiously patterned Japanese sword, about 20 inches long, and having a curved blade. Hall showed it to Watson and the latter commented upon its effectiveness as a weapon of defense. Soon after Sennott fell asleep, Watson claims, he and Hall became engaged in an altercation, and that the latter seized the sword and attacked him. With his bare arm Watson parried the first thrust, and the point of the weapon was deflected, entering Hall's left leg and causing a slight flesh wound.

Watson says that Hall chased him around the room for nearly a quarter of an hour trying to strike him with the sword. Finally Hall forced Watson into a corner and made another thrust at him with the weapon. Watson again parried the blow, and the point of the sword, which was still in Hall's hand, penetrated his neck and severed the jugular vein. Hall fell to the floor and expired almost immediately.

Watson says that when he realized what had occurred he aroused Sennott and the two men left the house, proceeding to the foot of State street, where they boarded the launch for Fort Warren, leaving the city at 1 o'clock Sunday morning.

Although Hall was killed about midnight Saturday night, the tragedy did not become known until yesterday afternoon when a friend of the dead man entered his apartments and found the lifeless body on the floor. In making a search of the room the police found the letter which Watson had written to Hall, agreeing to meet him on Saturday night.

Watson was arrested at Fort Warren last night and as Sennott was known to have accompanied him Saturday night, he also was taken into custody. Soon after being brought to the Back Bay station Watson admitted having killed Hall and told his story of the tragedy.

Hall had been engaged in business in this city about 15 years. He was a native of Rockland, Me., and is unmarried. Watson and Sennott are recent recruits in the army. Both of them are 21 years old. They enlisted in New York early last month.

A Cowardly Assassination

Fatality Did Not Stop Race

Paris, Oct. 17.—In the annual 100 kilometre race for motor boats on the River Seine, the wash of a competitor swamped the Mercedes I, which sank, her engineer, named Noel, being drowned. The race, which was not interrupted by the accident, was won by Rapee IV.

HAD NO TIME TO LOSE

Crew of Fishing Schooner Barely Escaped With Their Lives

Block Island, R. I., Oct. 17.—The entire crew of the little fishing schooner Clara of Manchester, Mass., were obliged to take hastily to their dories in Point Judith channel during the night while their vessel, which had suddenly sprunk aleak, sank as the last man was going over the side. They all reached here in safety after a 10-mile row.

The Clara had been fishing about half way between Point Judith and Block Island in quite a heavy sea. About midnight, while nearly all of the men were below, it was discovered that the vessel was leaking, and so quickly did she settle that the crew had to work fast in getting overboard the dories, so that none of them were able to save any of their personal effects.

By the time the last boat had been hoisted overboard the vessel was down to her guards, and as the last man jumped into his boat she lurched forward and sank in 20 fathoms of water.

Captain Palmer collected his boats as his little schooner disappeared and headed for the basin. It was a 10-mile pull against a head sea, and all the fishermen were exhausted when they finally gained the harbor. The New Shoreham life savers assisted them to the station, where they were made comfortable. The Clara had a complete outfit of fishing gear.

Judge Reed found the defendant guilty.

SLAUGHTER CONTINUES

Russian guns have superior range and burst shrapnel at 6000 yards.

Two divisional commanders have lost their chief staff officers, one of them being killed, and many commanding officers have met death heroically leading their regiments.

Shrapnel fell near General Kuropatkin. He showed desperate energy and even in the darkest hour remained hopeful. The Japanese must feel the strain.

There was a cessation of hostilities Saturday. Neither side can stand many such contests, the ferocity of which was frightful.

The Russians are now fighting as a matter of pride; Manchuria is forgotten. They feel that they cannot stop—that they must win one battle. The Japanese seem no nearer. Fires are burning to the south. About 12 miles from here the eastern army is retiring without fighting.

The station here is congested and trains are moving out towards Harbin only. In some cases it is absolutely impossible to move trains loaded with wounded, and the unfortunate soldiers have to be kept here. The whole hospital staff is displaying the greatest courage and fortitude, working day and night. Many, after working seemingly to the limit of human endurance, have gone to the front to continue their work under fire, replacing those incapacitated on the firing line. Every road converging on Mukden is crowded with vehicles transporting the wounded, who are being sent north by wagon road as well as by rail. The result of Sunday's fighting is uncertain.

Fears For Squadron's Safety

St. Petersburg, Oct. 17.—The Novoe Vremya, protesting against the sending of the Baltic squadron to the far east without a single friendly port on the route thither in which to repair or refit, advances the suggestion of purchasing one of the smaller Dutch East India islands for the purpose of establishing a naval station, where the squadron might be finally overhauled before starting on the last stage of the journey for Port Arthur.

Scares Circulated by Russians

London, Oct. 17.—The correspondent of The Times telegraphs from Pekin that after travelling through the northern provinces of China he has arrived at the conclusion that reports of unrest and anti-foreign disturbances have little foundation in fact, and are largely disseminated through the influence of the Russian legation for interested motives.

Baltic Squadron Has Started

Copenhagen, Oct. 17.—The Baltic squadron passed Bornholm island yesterday in two sections. It comprised a total of six battleships, 11 cruisers and numerous smaller craft and was going northeast.

Canal For War Purposes

St. Petersburg, Oct. 17.—It is announced that the Japanese have constructed a canal joining the Taitse and Hun rivers, facilitating transportation from Yinkow to Sianchan, 35 miles southeast of Mukden.

Guard For Russian Embassy

Washington, Oct. 17.—Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, has returned to Washington. The guarding of the Russian embassy will be continued, as it has been thought expedient to guard the Russian ambassador while the war is in progress.

Irish Party Acted Unwisely

Cork, Oct. 17.—Addressing a monster meeting here, William O'Brien declared that home rule was in the offing, since it was believed the Dunraven scheme of an Irish financial commission had sympathy in official quarters, but the foolish conduct of the Irish party in fighting Chief Secretary Wyndham, the lord lieutenant, and Anthony MacDonnell, under secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland, who were pledged to conciliation, threatened to spoil all.

Attempt at Wholesale Murder

Stubenville, O., Oct. 17.—A Slavish boarding house was fired and completely destroyed by unknown incendiaries. When the 17 inmates attempted to escape, a number of shots were fired in the darkness, several boarders being hit by the bullets, but none seriously hurt. The proprietor of the boarding house says that he has incurred the ill-will of a secret society of foreigners.

Killed Woman and Self

New York, Oct. 17.—Coroner Jackson investigated the death of Charles Pfefferman, a fruit dealer, and Miss Cora Kipling, who were found dead in Pfefferman's apartments. Both had been shot in the right temple and Pfefferman also had a bullet wound in the right side. The coroner concluded that it was a case of murder by Pfefferman first and suicide afterward.

Saw Much War Service

New York, Oct. 17.—William S. Worth, brigadier general, U. S. A., retired, is dead, following a long illness. He was born at Albany in 1840 and served through the war of the rebellion, in several Indian campaigns and in Cuba. In 1898 he was commissioned brigadier general and a month later was retired on account of disabling wounds.

GORGEOUS MALE ATTIRE.

Laws Against Sartorial Excesses In the Seventeenth Century.

Considering the way women are maligned in these days for their fondness for purple and fine linen, it is rather a shock to find that the sumptuary laws of the past were directed mainly against male excesses in the matter of ailment. There is, for instance, an ordinance issued by the lord mayor and common council of London in 1611 with regard to the dress of 'prentices, who were in many cases the sons of wealthy city merchants, gaining "freedom of the city" by apprenticeship. It was ordained in the proclamation, among much else, that they should wear "no hat lined, faced or tufted with velvet, silk or taffety, nor any lawn bands nor lace edged collars nor any pukadille or other support about the collars of their doublets nor breeches or doublets of any kind of silk nor gloves garnished with silver or gold lace, velvet or silk nor girdles or garters or shoe ties of silk or ribbon nor any rose or such like toyes at all upon the shoes or garters nor sleeves held out by a framework of wire nor silk stockings nor Spanish leather shoes nor any shoes with high heels nor the hair done with any tufts or locks, but cut close in decent manner."

LINCOLN TO YOUNG MEN.

He Urged Them to Bear Their Share In Political Life.

Abraham Lincoln's belief that young men should get up and show what they can do, without waiting to be sought out by older folk, is set forth in the following letter written to William H. Herndon, then at Washington, under date of June 22, 1848:

As to young men. You must not wait to be brought forward by the older men. For instance, do you suppose that I should ever have got into notice if I had waited to be hunted up and pushed forward by older men? You young men get together and form a "Rough and Ready club" and have regular meetings and speeches.

Take in everybody you can get. Harrison Grimsley, L. A. Enos, Lee Kimball and C. W. Matheny will do to begin the thing, but as you go along gather up all the shrewd, wild boys about town, whether just of age or a little under age—Chris Logan, Redlick Ridgely, Lewis Zwisler and hundreds such. Let every one play the part he can play best, some speak, some sing and all "holler."

Your meetings will be of evenings; the older men and the women will go to hear you, so that it will not only contribute to the election of "Old Zach," but will be an interesting pastime and improving to the intellectual faculties of all engaged. Don't fail to do this.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

MUSHROOMS ON TREES.

The Method by Which They Are Cultivated In Japan.

Mushrooms grown on trees form quite an important article of export from Japan to China. Shikoku island, where much camphor is produced, is the chief home of this industry. The method employed is as follows: Oak trees about thirty years old are felled in the autumn, and incisions are made with axes at intervals of three or four inches. The trees are then cut into logs four or five feet long and are left in dark, secluded parts of the forest.

After three years mushrooms make their appearance in the incised portions, and when the crop shows signs of growing thin fresh logs are provided. These mushrooms will grow at every season of the year, but in winter and spring artificial stimulus is needed, which is supplied by steeping the logs in water and striking them with mallets or axes to prepare the beds and facilitate the growth. The autumn crop is the largest. The mushrooms after being collected are dried by the sun or by artificial heat.

SLOCUM DISASTER

Commission Finds Government Inspectors Were at Fault

STEAMER WAS FIRETRAP

Practically No Safeguards From Fire, While Master and Pilot Neglected Their Duty In the Hour of Peril

Washington, Oct. 17.—Investigation of the General Slocum disaster by the national commission created for the purpose has been completed and the report of the commission is made public. In connection with the findings of the commission, presented in the report, President Roosevelt, to whom the report was submitted, has written a letter to Secretary Metcalf of the department of commerce and labor, briefly summarizing the report and directing him to carry into effect the recommendations of the commission.

He also directs that Robert S. Rodie, supervising inspector of the second district, steamboat inspection service, and James A. Dumont and Thomas H. Barrett, local inspectors in charge of the port of New York, be discharged from the service, the commission holding them directly responsible for the laxity of the steamboat inspection to which the Slocum disaster was directly attributable.

The president says that the department of justice has secured indictments against the master of the Slocum, the managing directors of the Knickerbocker Steamboat company, the owners; against Inspectors Lundberg and Fleming for joint charges of negligence by all, misconduct by the master and inspectors and aiding and abetting by the directors. Also the indictment of the manager and three employes of the Nonpareil Cork company of Camden, N. J., who sold life preserver cork blocks containing pieces of iron to make the required weight. He calls upon congress to provide more rigorous laws concerning excursion boats.

The report of the commission is elaborate and exhaustive, containing about 32,000 words. An elaborate description of the Slocum is given in the course of which it is stated: "All the upper works of this vessel were constructed of light wood and had been painted and burnished many times and were, therefore, in a highly inflammable condition. In the construction of the vessel there were no safeguards against fire other than compliance with the regulations as regards the proximity of woodwork to boilers. The vessel had no fire-proof hatches or bulkheads and was built entirely of wood.

"The General Slocum was a vessel built to carry a large number of excursionists (2500 allowed by law) and in her design there was apparently no consideration whatever given to the question of inflammability. In such a vessel a fire, once having obtained fair headway, could not be controlled and the vessel would be quickly consumed, as exemplified in the case of the General Slocum.

"There are many similar vessels doing service in the waters of the United States, the construction of which is quite as dangerous as that of the Slocum, and unless this kind of construction shall be prohibited or modified by law the safety of a large number of passengers carried by excursion steamers and steamers plying on the inland waters of the United States cannot be assured.

"The fire started in the forward cabin, so-called, and probably originated in a barrel containing packing hay, which was in that compartment, in one of the barrels used for bar glasses and brought on board by the charterers. Fire was probably communicated to this barrel through the carelessness of some unknown person."

The report shows that this cabin was filled with inflammable material, a large amount of oil being among its contents. It was lighted by electricity, but lamps were filled and burned there and the crew frequently lighted matches in the compartment.

The apparatus of the vessel for fighting fire is described at length, showing it to be utterly inadequate. "The forward valve and standpipe were supplied with a 100-foot length of cheap, unlined, linen hose, costing probably less than 20 cents a foot, age unknown, but probably several years old." This hose could not stand the water pressure. "Preponderance of evidence shows that no water came from the nozzle of the hose." The report pays a tribute to Assistant Engineer Brandow and also to Chief Engineer Conklin, who remained at their posts.

"An essential fact of negligence is the utter failure of the master to fight the fire or aid the passengers. In a less degree the pilots, in the same manner, after beaching the boat, and while there were still many passengers on board, failed in their duty to assist and rescue the said passengers. Very little assistance was given or control exercised by any of the officers or crew on behalf of the passengers.

"After a careful consideration of the entire testimony as to the time of the discovery of the fire, the commission is of the opinion that the men in the pilothouse had knowledge of the fire before the steamer passed the eastern end of Ward's Island. The commission therefore believes that the master knew of the fire in time to have beached the vessel with her stern to the wind so that the flames would be driven forward and away from the passengers."

The commission declares that Pilot Van Wart showed bad judgment and lack of skill in beaching the vessel at a considerable angle with the shore line, thus leaving in deep water all but the bow of the ship which was in flames and affording the passengers who could not swim little opportunity to save their lives.

The commission sharply criticizes the condition of the fire-fighting apparatus on the vessel, saying that the whole fire hose equipment was bad, except possibly 100 feet of new hose, which was not used at all. The evidence shows that no water had ever been put through the fire hose on the Slocum.

The commission says that the mate, Flanagan, in distinct violation of the law and contrary to the requirements of the vessel's certificates, was not a licensed officer.

The report shows that the total loss of life by the Slocum disaster was 955 persons and the number injured 175, out of a total list of 1358.

After considering the composition of the excursion party the commission says "a very important conclusion from this set of facts is that the law and regulations must recognize the fact that an excursion party must be taken care of, and can not take of itself."

Banker's House Dynamited

Rensselaer, Ind., Oct. 17.—The residence of T. J. McCoy, president of the defunct McCoy bank, against whom indictments were recently returned for alleged complicity in the wrecking of the bank, was dynamited and totally destroyed. The house was valued at $25,000. When the explosion occurred the house was unoccupied. McCoy is believed to be in Chicago. The detonation was heard for miles. Excitement is intense.

The elevator boy was arrested for leaving his car while the child was in it.

Miss Nan Carter has arrived home from the Berkshires, after a two months' visit at Interlaken, her sister's home.

Mr. H. H. I. Smith has moved into his new store on Washington street and the old Post Office store is closed.

Don't forget that the annual fair of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., opens tonight in the Coliseum near the Quincy depot.

Mr. and Mrs. Rufus W. Billings have rented Miss Prescott's house on Bigelow street and will take possession November first.

After a long illness Henry Gallagher of Pierce street, East Milton, passed away Saturday. He leaves a widow and several sons and daughters.

Jennie, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gibb of Edison park, fell from the porch on Friday and it is feared that she is injured internally. Two doctors were called in.

The New England Kennel club opened its trap shooting season at Braintree on Saturday. W. F. Beal secured a leg for the Monatiquot cup, and W. R. Goodnow won the weekly club cup.

Nearly every person met in City Square Saturday afternoon had a rose bud showing that they had been to the opening day at the new store of D. E. Wadsworth & Co. Friends continued to call until late in the evening. The firm received many congratulations on their enterprise and all expressed themselves as very much pleased. It certainly is a handsome store.

ANOTHER DAY

Before Mr. McAnarney's Letter Will Be Ready.

Is Busy with Superior Court Cases.

And Friends Are Demanding Much of His Time.

These are strenuous days for John W. McAnarney. Between his extensive law practice and the many hours of his time which have been demanded by friends since his name was prominently mentioned for Mayor of our city, he has found it impossible to prepare the open letter to the voters promised today.

Since Friday last, he says, he has scarcely had an hour to himself, and today he found it necessary to go to the Superior court early.

The reason why the letter takes more time than an ordinary letter is the fact that Mr. McAnarney is considering the advisability of certain changes in our City Charter, both in the legislative branch, as well as in the administrative departments.

In common with many others Mr. McAnarney sees the desirability of changes in the conduct of city affairs. He hopes to be able, tomorrow, to give his views in the Daily Ledger.

A mayoralty candidate with a platform will be something new for Quincy, but an innovation which should be a precedent.

Feronda D. Osgood of Farrington street died suddenly Saturday afternoon.

Joseph Ryan has opened a barber shop in the Pinel block on Water street.

St. Ambrose court of Foresters holds a whist party at Hibernian hall, West Quincy, this evening.

There will be a meeting of the Fragment society in the Unitarian chapel on Wednesday at 2 P. M.

The Registrars of Voters met in Ward Three Saturday night and added 68 names to the voting lists.

The lateness of the trains this morning gave the Atlantic station the appearance of a camping ground and a noisy one at that, as all the men were anxious to get in Boston.

The Thayer Academy foot ball team was defeated by St. Marks at Southboro on Saturday 5 to 0. The home team was unable to score until near the end of the game.

Herbert Hodgkinson of Bigelow street, a High school boy, had the misfortune to stick a nail in his foot last week which has confined him to the house since. He was at work in the cellar at the time.

A rich musical program was presented at the vespers at the Wollaston Baptist church on Sunday. Special mention may be made of a beautiful solo by Mrs. Maisie Hastings Slade, and the grand interlude of Mrs. Alma Faunce Smith, the organist.

A Guaranteed Cure for Piles.

Is it an Honest Statement?

In the Ledger of Thursday, Oct. 13, 1904, under the caption, "Open to All Men" appeared this paragraph "Any man above 16 years of age, without regard to nationality, color, religious belief or creed is eligible to membership in this association and to enter these classes, and that is one of the reasons why the Y. M. C. A. deserves the support of all the people of Quincy."

This certainly implies that all men "without regard to nationality, color, religious belief or creed" are "eligible to membership in this association" on equal terms, and may enjoy equal rights and privileges which is far from the truth. It is only necessary to examine the constitution of the Y. M. C. A. to see why it cannot be supported by a large majority of the self-respecting citizens of Quincy. In that constitution will be found either the following section or sections of the same tenor.

CONDITIONS OF MEMBERSHIP.

Section 1. The members of this association shall consist of men at least sixteen years of age, classed as active and associate.

Section 2. Any man who is a member in good standing of a Protestant Evangelical church as defined by the International Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations, held at Portland, Maine, in 1869, may become an active member. None but active members shall vote or hold office.

Section 3. Any man of good moral character may become an Associate member. Associate members shall be entitled to all privileges except those of voting and holding office.

The Quincy Y. M. C. A. has membership in the State Organization. The conditions of that membership are found in Article V of the Constitution of the State Organization, which reads as follows:

Section 1. After the adoption of this constitution, any association desiring membership in the State Organization, and representation at its meetings, shall be admitted upon the following conditions: viz., that the active membership of such association be composed of young men who profess to love and publicly avow their faith in Jesus, the Redeemer, as divine, and who testify their faith by becoming and remaining members of churches held to be evangelical and we hold those churches to be evangelical which do maintain the Holy Scriptures to be the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and do believe in the Lord Jesus Christ the only begotten of the Father, king of kings, and lord of lords, in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, who was made sin for us though knowing no sin, and who bore our sins in His body on the tree, and that His name is the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved from everlasting punishment.

Section 2. Any Association changing its test of active membership as prescribed in this article, shall at once cease to be a member of the State Organization.

The Y. M. C. A. is therefore essentially a sectarian organization and has the same claim upon the general support of the citizens of Quincy as other sectarian organizations. To ask persons to give money to an organization whose constitution discriminates against those asked, classing them as inferior and unworthy to vote how the money shall be used or to hold office in the organization, is an insult. An organization has a perfect right to make the conditions of its membership what it pleases so long as its members support it; but when it asks for "the support of all the people" it should discriminate against none. To discriminate against a man and then ask him for his support is to ask him to pay for his humiliation. To advertise the Y. M. C. A. in such a way as to give the readers to understand that all "without regard to nationality, color, religious belief or creed" are "eligible to membership in this association" on equal terms and with equal rights is not ethically sound. If the Y. M. C. A. is as broad and non-sectarian as these words imply let it publish in full its constitution since it appeals to "all the people of Quincy." If it does offer membership to all on equal terms without any religious test, there are many in this city who would be glad to know it, who would be glad to become members and to support it heartily. The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE first man my eyes fell upon was Parson Downs, lolling in a chair by the fireless hearth, for there was no call for fire that May night. His bulk of body swept in a vast curve from his triple chin to the floor, and his great rosy face was so exaggerated with merriment and good cheer that it looked like one seen in the shining swell of a silver tankard.

When Nick Barry finished a roaring song, he stamped and clapped and shouted applause till it set off the others with applause of it, and the place was a pandemonium. Then that same colored woman who had parleyed with me the other day and was that night glowing like a savage princess—as in truth she may have been, for she had a high look as of an unquenched spirit, in spite of her degradation of body and estate—went about with a free swinging motion of hips, bearing a tray filled with pewter mugs of strong spirits.

Around this woman's neck glittered row on row of beads, and she wore a great flame colored turban, and long gold eardrops dangled to her shoulders against the glossy blackness of her cheeks, and bracelets tinkled on her polished arms, which were mighty shapely, though black. In faith, the wench, had she but possessed roses and lilies for her painting instead of that duskiness as of the cheek of midnight, had been a beauty such as was seldom seen. Her dark face was instinct with mirth and jollity, and, withal, a fierce spark in the whitening roll of her eyes under her flame colored turban made one think of a tiger cat and roused that knowledge of danger which adds a tingle to interest. A man could scarce take his eyes from her, though there were other women there, and not uncomely ones.

Another black wench there was, clad as gayly, but sunk in a languorous calm like a great cat, with Nick Barry, now his song was done, lolling against her, and two white women, one young and well favored and the other harshly handsome, both with their husbands present, and I doubt not decent women enough, though something violent of temper. As I entered, Mistress Allgood, one of them, began a harangue the top of her shrill voice, with her husband plucking vainly at her sleeve to temper her vehemence. Mistress Allgood was long and lean and gaunt, with red fires in the hollows of her cheeks and a compelling flash of black eyes under straight frowning brows.

"Gentlemen"— said she. "Be quiet, John Allgood. My speech I will have, since thou, being a man, hath not the tongue of one. I pray ye, gentlemen, listen to my cause of complaint. Here my good man and me did come to this oppressed colony of Virginia seven years since, having together laid by fifty pound from the earnings of an inn called the Jolly Yeoman in Norfolkshire, in which for many years we had run long scores with little return, and we bought a small portion of land and planted tobacco and set out trees.

"Then came the terror of the Indians, and Governor Berkeley, always in wait for the word of the king and doing nothing, and once was our house burned, and we escaped barely with our lives, and then came Nat Bacon, and blessings upon him, for he made the beginning of a good work. And then did the soldiers, riding to meet him, so trample down our tobacco fields with horse hoofs that the leaves lay in a green pumice and that crop lost. And then this navigation act, which I understand but little of except that it be to fill the king's pockets and empty ours, has made our crops of no avail, since we but sent the tobacco as a gift to the king, so little we have got in return. And look, look!" she shrieked. "I pray ye look, and sure this is the best I have, and me always going as well attired as any of my station in England. I pray ye look! Sure 'tis past mending, and the stitches and the cloth go together, as will the colony, unless somewhat be done in season to mend its state." So saying, up she flung her arm, and all the under side of the body of her gown was in rags, and up she flung the other, and that was in like case.

Then the other woman, who was a strapping lass and had been a barmaid ere she came to Virginia in search of a husband, where she had found one Richard Longman afraid not to do her bidding and wed her, since he was as small and mild a man as ever was, joined in. "I say with Mistress Allgood!" she shrieked out and flung her own buxom arms aloft with such disclosures that a roar of laughter spread through the hall, and her husband blushed purple, and a protest gurgled in his throat. But at that his wife, who verily was a shrew, seized upon him by both of his little shoulders and shook him until his face wagged like a rag baby, with an utter limpness of helplessness, and shouted out, amid peals of laughter that seemed to shake the roof, that here was a pretty man; here, forsooth, was a pretty man.

Here was her own husband, who let his own lawful wife go clad in such wise and lifted not a finger! Yes, lifted not a finger, and had to be dragged into the present doings by the very hair of his head by his wife, and that was not all. Yes, that was not all. Then, with that, up she flung one stout foot, and, lo, a great hole was in the heel of her stocking, and the other, and then she flirted the hem of her petticoat into sight, and that was all of a fringe with rags. "Look, look!" she shrieked out. "I tell ye, Richard Longman, I will have them look, and see to what a pass that cursed navigation act and the selling of the tobacco for naught hath brought a decent woman. How long is it since I had a new petticoat? How long, I pray? Oh, Lord, had the men of this colony but the spirit of the women! Had but brave Nat Bacon lived!"

QUINCY MUSIC HALL.

The Location is the best of any hall in the city. The street cars pass the door with a turnout right in front of the Hall.

The Floor is of selected maple laid with the greatest care, and is kept in perfect condition, being covered with canvas when not used for dancing.

The Ventilation—a most important consideration—is such as to keep the air pure with even a crowded hall and without causing any drafts.

The Hall is Lighted by electricity, brilliantly and pleasantly, and with a switchboard arranged so that all desired effects can be obtained in the Hall proper or on the stage. Gas is used as an auxiliary light.

The Heating is direct—indirect, ample, and giving the most healthful results.

The Stage has been designed with care, and is furnished with a particularly generous supply of attractive and appropriate scenery.

For Advertising, the Music Hall Billboards throughout the City are of very great value.

To Darken the Hall, there are special window fitings so that at noonday the Hall can be made as dark as at midnight.

In case of fire there are pails of water and chemical fire extinguishers throughout the Hall. There is an asbestos fire curtain by which the Stage can be instantly cut off from the Hall proper. There are nine (9) doors opening from the Hall and five (5) separate exits.

As a whole, Quincy Music Hall has been carefully planned to meet the requirements of those who wish a large and really first class Hall.

CITY COUNCIL

Receive Veto of the School Appropriation.

It Is Laid Upon the Table.

Futile Debate on the Ward Three School Lot.

The expected veto from the Mayor of the additional school appropriation was read in the City Council Monday evening, but many being absent no attempt was made to pass the order over the veto. Again it was shown that the Council is too evenly divided to accomplish anything on High school accommodations.

Councilmen Adams, Hadlock, Holmes, Polk and Reardon were the absentees.

STREET RAILWAY SERVICE.

The Mayor forwarded a reply from the Old Colony street railway in relation to the matter of better car service and the reissuing of the eight-cent transfers.

The reply stated that the company had no knowledge of poor car service and that the superintendent had been instructed to consult with him in relation to the matter. As to the transfers they were discontinued by order of the directors and could not be restored without their approval. At present the president could not recommend that they be restored. To special committee.

GARBAGE PLANT.

The Mayor forwarded a letter received from the American Extractor company calling attention to the erection at New Bedford of a garbage reduction plant. To Committee on Health.

A VETO.

The Mayor returned without his approval the order for $3,000 for the School department. His reasons were that the order called for the paying of the note in 1905. Under the law current expenses must come from the taxes of this year and it was neither just nor legal to charge it to taxpayers of next year. He was heartily in sympathy with giving school children the best possible, but as the order as passed was plainly an evasion of the law he could not give it his approval.

The order was laid on the table.

PETITIONS.

Several petitions for minor licenses were received and referred.

A petition was received asking that Hunt street be accepted as a public way. To Committee on Streets.

Mary F. Milne petitioned to be refunded $25.45, one-half cost of curbing at corner of Independence avenue and Goddard streets. To Finance Committee.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

The Committee on Licenses reported an order granting Colonial hall a license for a fee of $15. Adopted.

The Committee on Ordinances reported an ordinance relative to issuing of licenses to junk shops. The ordinance provided that no license for a junk shop or junk wagon should be issued to other than residents of Quincy. Ordered to a second reading.

The Committee on Public Buildings reported an order for $600 for erecting public scales in City Square. To Finance Committee.

The Committee on Ordinances reported on the order laying out Channing street. Rules suspended and order passed.

MOTIONS, ORDERS, ETC.

Councilman Bass offered an order for $500 for extending the paved gutter on Goffe street to Saville street. To Committee on Streets.

The petition of William Cashman, for permission to cross Furnace avenue at grade with a private railroad was taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Streets.

Councilman Hughes offered an order for the State election of Nov. 8. Passed.

Councilman Hughes offered an order designating the polling places for the caucuses of Nov. 15. Passed.

Councilman Hughes offered an order designating the polling places for the election of December 6. Passed.

Councilman Bass offered an order refunding Salvatir Puppuria $2 poll tax paid twice in 1903. To Finance Committee.

Councilman Bass offered order refunding Willard Walsh $33.80 and $4.72 on tax titles. To Finance Committee.

WARD THREE SCHOOL LOT.

Upon motion of Councilman Hardwick the order for $6000 for purchase of land for a school lot in Ward Three was taken from the table.

Councilman Hardwick said it seemed to him that this matter should have immediate attention. The time had come for action.

Councilman Stone thought they should be voted on tonight. There were many reasons why it should not pass. He read a letter he had written to several superintendents asking as to the desirability of two schools where there were from 700 to 1000 children, as to which cost the most to maintain.

He also read replies received, which in brief were as follows:

Somerville—One high school can be maintained at less than two. Less for salaries and less for heat. Two sessions were unsatisfactory.

Cambridge—A central high school was most desirable. The cost was less for one large than two small buildings.

The Secretary of the Massachusetts Educational department at Worlds Fair believed in one building up to 900 pupils. One school cost 15 to 20 percent less than two.

Councilman Piper could not see anything detrimental to the purchase of a second lot. He could not see that those letters had any influence.

Councilman Whiton these letters seem to overthrow every argument for two buildings. He could not see any redeeming feature to vote for a second lot.

Councilman Hughes did not know of any pet scheme in Wards Three and Four. The order for enlargement was the one that should have been taken up, not this order. The present building was not anywhere near the High school centre.

Councilman Nickerson was called to the chair and President Nichols, taking the floor, said the time had come to take some action. It was up to the Council to provide suitable accommodations for the High school. The question had been given ample consideration and there seemed to be no new light. There was an opportunity for honest difference of opinion but it had reached the point where it should be decided. He questioned if it was wise to buy another lot at the present time. He could not see the occasion for two buildings today. It cost more to run any two institutions than one. He could not see how Council could pass this order. He hoped they would put themselves on record in the matter. Sentiment in Wards Three and Four is divided. The general sentiment is not in line of building two High schools.

Councilman Piper moved to lay on the table. Motion lost.

On verification the Councilmen voted as follows:

Yeas—Bass, Gassett, Hughes, Johnson, Loud, Piper, Spargo, Stewart and Walsh—9.

Nays—Gearwar, Hardwick, Langelier, McFarland, Nickerson, Stone, Thompson, Whiton and Nichols—9.

Absent—Adams, Hadlock, Holmes, Polk and Reardon—5.

The motion was lost on a tie vote.

Councilman Whiton moved to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was a tie vote, nine voting each way the President voting in favor of reconsideration.

SEWER APPROPRIATION.

The order appropriating $12,000 for sewer extension took its second reading and was passed under suspension of the rules.

QUINCY NECK PARK.

Upon motion of Councilman Stone the City Solicitor was asked to render his opinion on the matter of making a park of the old school lot at Quincy Neck.

WARD ONE PARK.

The Committee on Public Grounds was requested to report on the matter of the petition for a playground in Ward One.

The Committee on Ordinances was requested to report on the order relative to persons soliciting subscriptions.

Adjourned at 8.57 to meet Monday Nov. 7.

A Good Imitation.

He—That isn't a scarecrow.

She—It must be. See how motionless it is.

TWO FATALITIES

One the Result of a Runaway.

The Other Was from Burns.

Atlantic Man Accidentally Shot at 2 A. M.

Norfolk Downs and Atlantic are having an unusually large number of causalties this week, as will be seen below:

Runaway Accident.

Clarence Litchfield, a driver of Turner's produce wagon, died at the City Hospital this morniag from injuries received by being thrown from his wagon on Beach street, Norfolk Downs, Monday afternoon. Litchfield was returning from Boston, and on account of the Atlantic bridge being closed was returning through Norfolk Downs. It was there that his horse ran away and the team capsized throwing Litchfield to the ground.

When found he was unconscious. He was removed to the City Hospital where he died this morning. He was about 31 years of age.

His injuries consisted of a dislocated shoulder and internal injuries. Litchfield was employed by John F. Turner of Cohasset.

Mysterious Burning.

Mary Mellett, the 5-year-old daughter of Robert Mellette, was so seriously burned at her home on Bayfield road and Squantum street on Monday that she died this morning. Just how the accident happened is not known. It was about 5.30 A. M., when the little girl got up. Whether she undertook to light the lamp or was playing with matches is not known, but in some way her night gown took fire, and before the flames could be extinguished by her parents who had been alarmed by the child's screams, she was badly burned.

Dr. Maria Drew, who was called, found that the child's right side was burned from her feet to her chin. Her right hand being very severe. This is thought to have been due to her trying to extinguish the flames. Dr. Drew did not consider her burns to be necessarily fatal, but it is thought that she must have inhaled some of the flames.

The child lived until this morning. Meanwhile the parents were unable to obtain from her any explanation as to how the accident happened.

Taken for Hen Thief.

William L. Sullivan of Botolph street is nursing a sore limb today as the result of being taken for a hen thief at 2 o'clock this morning, in the yard of Frank E. Badger.

There has been some complaint of petty thievery at Atlantic and this morning men seen in a hen yard were taken for thieves. The party who saw them rushed into the house to secure his gun and came out and opened fire. The bird shot found Mr. Sullivan and a physician later removed a dozen or more shot.

It appears however, that it was an innocent man who received the gun charge. Mr. Sullivan and a friend say they were returning from a fishing trip when they saw men in the hen yard.

Thinking to catch the parties they entered the yard. As they did so the two supposed thieves made a hasty departure.

This was while the man of the house was getting his gun, and it appears that when he came out with his firearm the first men had gone and Mr. Sullivan and his friend had taken their places, and they received the charge of bird shot.

Bitten By Horse.

Miss Olive Morrill of East Elm avenue met with a painful accident in Boston last Saturday. In crossing Sudbury street she passed very near to an express team owned by Chase & Dodge. The horse which at the time was eating his noonday-meal, snapped at the young woman, biting her very seriously in the back. She was taken to the Emergency Hospital and later to her home in Wollaston. Dr. Jones was called and found that the sciatic nerve was injured, and it will probably be several weeks before she will be able to walk.

Thinks the City Blind.

Editor of Quincy Daily Ledger:

I think it was in the year 1886 that I was a sub-contractor for part of the work in the construction of the John Hancock school building in your beautiful city (then town.) I well remember how surprised we mechanics were that the good people of Quincy should put up such a valuable building with its front close on the back yards of some small dwelling houses. But it was explained by some of the wise ones that the town would soon have all the land between the new building and Granite street, thus making a beautiful spot in front.

The other day, when passing that way, I was more surprised than ever, to see the same back yards, and other things not very desirable nor pleasant to look at, still there, just the same as they were eighteen years ago. It is wonderful how blind to these things the city has been.

Respectfully,
A Well Wisher.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ A Boston banking firm has been sending out letters to their business correspondents throughout the country asking for business and political prospects, and two instalments of replies have been published covering a number of states. The replies are absolutely unanimous in expressing a confidence in an improving business situation and in declaring that Roosevelt and Fairbanks will be elected. Personal desires were not asked for, but rather the result of general observation, and the report is probably as reliable as any canvass that will be made.—Haverhill Gazette.

☞ Normal youth must go up against something. There's a fight in every young, robust man. And the average instinct is for a free fight and no odds. Football affords an open field and a fair chance. If it is not to be football it will be something else and may be something worse. The forces of life gather and there must be vent. Moreover—The qualities required in football are the manly qualities—fairness, quick obedience, patience, alertness, forceful energy. These qualities will enable the young man who tackles his adversary to tackle the more serious rush line of life's great football game.—Beverly Times.

☞ The Japanese themselves attribute their high average of physical strength to a plain and frugal diet and the system of gymnastics called jujutsu, which includes a knowledge of anatomy and of the external and internal use of water. Although during the period of their ascendency the samurai kept the secret that their great physical superiority was due in a great measure to the internal and external use of water, the belief that if used liberally and intelligently water is an infallible weapon against disease is now generally held. By those who go in for jujutsu an average of a gallon a day is drunk. It is noteworthy that rheumatism is almost unknown in Japan. It is probable that the absence of meat from the diet, combined with the use of plenty of water, accounts for this immunity.—Gloucester Times.

☞ Henry Cabot Lodge has now become the senior Senator from Massachusetts in the Senate of the United States. By the action of Governor Bates he has been given a colleague with whom for many years he has had pleasant and intimate relations, so that there need be no fear of those differences which in some states are so much to be deplored. Mr. Lodge will appear before the Legislature of 1905 for re-election. He has served two terms, and that he will continue to represent the Commonwealth in the highest legislative body of the nation does not admit of any doubt. His familiarity with national legislation and the important committees to which he is assigned place him in the position of the highest trust, and few Senators exert a greater influence on the affairs of the country in their relation to foreign powers than our senior Senator, and he will continue to rank among the first of American statesmen.—Lynn Item.

ADVANCE OF KUROPATKIN

Once More In Possession of the Town of Shakhe

HIS WEST WING BEATEN

Displays Great Tenacity In Protecting His Retreat, but Is Expected to Accomplish Nothing More Than Retarding Slightly the Japanese Advance--Uncertainty as to Disposition of His Left Column--Hope of Relief of Port Arthur Given Up

London, Oct. 18.—The greatest admiration is expressed by the London newspapers for the tenacity displayed by General Kuropatkin in protecting his retreat, but nowhere is any idea entertained that the Russians' first decided success on the Shakhe river can change the broad character of their defeat or have any effect beyond retarding slightly the eventual Japanese advance to Mukden and probably to Harbin, since the Japanese appear to be fully prepared for a winter campaign.

General Kuropatkin has reoccupied and holds the town of Shakhe, the possession of which for several days was first with one and then with the other of the contending armies. Reports from the Russian left wing, for the safety of which there had been much anxiety, are no later than the night of Oct. 13. It had been fighting for two days for possession of Tumin and Siatchoun passes, important strategic points, but up to the time of the sending of the last dispatch the Japanese were still in possession of the passes. In order that this column may be able to rejoin the main Russian army, it is necessary that General Kuropatkin should hold the bridges over the Hun river and the position he now occupies on the Shakhe river.

There is no indication that the end of the great battle is at hand. Estimates of the losses show a wide divergence, but are as a rule lower than those given in Sunday's dispatches.

The question of intervention is hardly discussed at all, because it is believed that the Russian government is not in any mood to accept it.

The Standard's correspondent with General Kuroki, telegraphing under date of Oct. 15, says:

"Kuroki as usual has borne the brunt of the struggle and sustained a majority of the casualties. We are now occupying the line of the Shahke with outposts near Mukden. The Russians lost the initiative on the second day of the battle, when the Japanese repelled their infantry and assumed a vigorous offensive. For a time the situation at Bensihu was extremely critical, the Japanese being practically surrounded. Eventually, however, the Russians fled, leaving 1800 dead on the field. We are now pressing the enemy away from the railway into the mountains."

A dispatch from the headquarters of the Russian flanking column on the left, by courier, via Mukden, Oct. 17, says:

On the morning of Oct 12 the Russian fighting line consisted of four regiments of the East Siberian rifles on the right flank, and the Third, Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth on the left. The right was supported by two batteries of the 18th East Siberian brigade and one of the Ninth East Siberian brigade. One battery occupied the centre and three more were on the left.

The fight began at 5:30 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 11. The batteries on the right flank opened on three Japanese batteries situated to the right of the pass. Saitchoun pass is a double pass, the main defile being to the left, overtopped by high, rocky mountains, while to the right are rocky ridges. General Gerngross' corps was assigned to capture the passes by frontal attack, and the remainder of the Russian troops were to turn the Japanese position and take them on the flank and rear.

The first assault was set for noon, and the Russian batteries pounded the Japanese position, searching out their guns. Wherever possible the Russian artillery was rapidly followed up by the infantry advance, the cannon fire being concentrated first on one and then on another of the eminences which were seamed with Japanese trenches from base to summit.

The roar and crash of artillery and the rattle of volley firing were deafening. The Japanese defended desperately. Their positions were so steep that the attacking Russians could make no progress in the face of a murderous fire from the Japanese. Whole advance companies lay down, hugging the ground till evening and repulsing sallies by the Japanese from their trenches.

At night an order came to renew the attack. General Kondravotich led his advance to the front and again the Russians began to scale the rugged heights. The Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth regiments fell under a withering fire. The men were scarcely able to breathe as they clambered up the steep slopes, but they hung to the rocks and returned the fire that was poured down on them. Then they scrambled forward again.

The Thirty-Fourth regiment first reached the trenches, going with the bayonet at the Japanese, who fought like demons with clubbed guns, swords, bayonets and revolvers. It was an indescribable melee. The Russian reserves were ordered to support the gallant Thirty-Fourth and, aided by the Thirty-Sixth regiment and parts of three other regiments, the Russians carried two lines of trenches, after which the men lay down, dead tired, in the Japanese shelters till dawn. Then it was discovered that while the attacking force was about on a level with the passes themselves, they were only half way up the heights, which were commanded by Japanese positions. In these circumstances the Russians were forced to withdraw.

On the morning of Oct. 12 the Russian batteries again signalled the beginning of another day's fighting. One battery silenced some Japanese mountain guns and then another Japanese battery opened on the Russians, but a concentrated fire smothered that battery also. Then the Russian infantry advanced to the attack and the fight became general. The left was heavily engaged. Tumin pass was turned by detachments of the Third, Thirty-Third and Second regiments.

The whole day passed without making much headway, and the Russian troops were again forced to seek the shelter of the rocky slopes, there to wait until nightfall, when a fresh assault was planned.

The order came to advance at midnight, but the Japanese themselves attacked at 10 o'clock. They fought stubbornly, but were driven back. The Russians followed up the advantage and occupied the pass.

The morning of Oct. 13 Colonel Martineff, chief of artillery, inspected all the Russian batteries and the command moved forward. After severe fighting the Russians, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, occupied the passes as the Japanese withdrew. Then, just as the task had been accomplished, came the order to retire, which the columns accomplished safely, but thoroughly exhausted by the long fight.

KUROPATKIN'S ADVANCE

It Encourages St Petersburg, but Will Not Help Port Arthur

St. Petersburg, Oct. 18.—The news from the front is more reassuring from the Russian standpoint. The situation is still regarded as being critical, but General Kuropatkin is apparently holding the Japanese firmly on his centre and right wing. The situation at this date may be described as follows:

General Kuropatkin has slightly advanced his centre, reoccupying Shakhe, south of the Shakhe river. Directly behind him, at a distance of nine miles, lies the Hun river, and across the bridges spanning this stream the Russians must retire in case they retreat on Mukden. General Kuropatkin must continue to firmly hold his centre and right flank in order to prevent the Japanese getting possession of the Hun river bridges. Thus he will cover the withdrawal of his apparently beaten west wing.

There is still considerable uncertainty as to the disposition of his left column. Certainly it has not returned to Mukden; whether it is again advancing after its first withdrawal is not known. All hope of relieving Port Arthur must apparently be abandoned. Little hope is expressed that Kuropatkin will be able to continue to advance.

Can Be No Intervention

Washington, Oct. 18.—Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, in a conversation with a press correspondent last night, reiterated with great emphasis that there is "absolutely no opportunity for intervention to stop the war. Russia proposes to prosecute the war to the end, and all offers of peace at this time must be rejected."

Englishman Won on Points

London, Oct. 18.—Joe Bowker of England beat Frank Neil of San Francisco on points in a 20-round contest here last night for the bantam championship of the world and $2500. The early rounds were rather in the American's favor, and in the ninth he almost had Bowker beaten. From that time forward Bowker greatly improved and administered a lot of punishment.

Melons and Snuff.

Of that great lady, Charlotte of Bavaria, the Marquise of Crequy in her memoirs says: "The diet of this illustrious person was largely composed of salt beef and soup made of beer; also a certain horrible ragout of fermented cabbage which made the whole castle stink when she partook of it. She called it 'schaucraout,' and she used to compel her guests to eat it. Indeed she made a sort of patriotic persecution of it, so that every one tried to evade her dinners. She would eat the most horrible messes—prunes and pears cooked with lard and onions, salads made of raw herrings and apples soaked in oil and mustard, pasties of otters' flesh and snails. She powdered her melon with Scotch snuff."

A Strict Old Lady.

A certain noble family in Scotland adopted the Episcopalian faith and carried out its ideas regardless of expense. On the first introduction of the full choir service into the local church the great lady, who had been active in the work, was anxious that a favorite woman servant of hers—a Presbyterian of the old school—should have an opportunity of hearing the service. Accordingly she took her down to church in the carriage and on returning asked the old woman what she thought of the music. "Ou, it's verra bonny. But, oh, my lady, it's an awfu' way of spending the Sabbath!"

Queer Snuffboxes.

In the days when a snuffbox was considered a necessary attribute to the perquisites of a beau or a belle much ingenuity was brought to bear upon the manufacture of these dainty trifles. The results were often very novel. Those with a taste for the morbid could buy boxes made from the wood of scaffolds, chairs that murderers had sat upon or parts of their houses.

Encouraging Him.

"Do you know," remarked the pessimist, "I think that I have experienced every kind of misfortune except hanging."

"Well, you shouldn't be discouraged," rejoined the optimist. "It is always desirable, you know, to remember the old adage, 'While there's life there's hope.'"

CRAZED BY LIQUOR

Harry Boles Instantly Killed His Wife With One Shot

TOOK A POLICEMAN'S LIFE

Latter Had Exceptionally Fine Record For Heroism and Faithful Performance of Duty--Murderer Arrested by a Squad

Brookline, Mass., Oct. 18.—Crazed, the police say, by drink, Harry Boles, a city laborer, last night shot and killed his wife at their home at 81 Boylston street, and a few moments later killed Patrolman Joseph McMurray, who attempted his arrest.

Patrolman McMurray was 45 years of age, married and has seven children. He was recently presented with a gold watch for heroic services when, in imminent danger of his own life, he stopped a runaway team and probably saved the lives of two women. Last winter he rescued a party of skaters who had broken through the ice in the parkway. Not long ago he distinguished himself by capturing singlehanded a gang of taree burglars. Only four hours before he was killed, McMurray had arrested five men who were alleged to have stolen copper from an express office. Three years ago the officer rescued from drowning the man who killed him last night.

The police have not yet learned what led up to the killing of Mrs. Boles, as Boles can not tell a coherent story and there were no witnesses to the trouble. Boles came home shortly after 5 o'clock, and less than half an hour afterward other tenants in the house heard the sounds of a quarrel, followed by a revolver shot. A little girl who lived in the house ran down the street and told Police Sergeant O'Connell and Patrolman McMurray that Harry Boles was murdering somebody.

The officers hastened to the house and found that Boles had locked the doors and he refused to admit them. McMurray then broke in one of the door panels, and at the same instant Boles fired, the bullet entering McMurray's breast just below the collar bone, severing either the jugular vein or carotid artery. The wounded officer died in less than 10 minutes after receiving the wound. A squad of police was detailed to the Boylston street house, and after a struggle Boles was arrested. The police say that he was crazed by liquor.

The search of the house resulted in the discovery of Mrs. Boles' lifeless body on the floor of the kitchen. Only one wound was found, a bullet hole in the top of the skull. Medical Examiner Cutts said that she was instantly killed.

The interior of the tenement did not show that there had been any struggle between Boles and his wife. In the kitchen, where the woman's body was found, everything was in place, and even the dishes on the table were not disturbed.

Boles was 35 years of age and had been employed by the Brookline water department. He was married about six years ago to the woman he killed, but no children were born to them.

Famous Woman Meets Roosevelt

Washington, Oct. 18.—Baroness Von Suffner of Vienna was presented to the president by an attache of the Austrian embassy. In Europe she is an important influence in the movement to promote the peace of the world, being a writer of distinction and a notable figure in many reform movements. She had an extended chat with the president.

A Lamp-Throwing Tragedy

New York, Oct. 18.—Nellie McCarthy, 35 years old, was burned to death in the hallway on the second floor of an apartment house here last night and Mrs. Annie Martin is under arrest, charged with homicide. The police allege she made a voluntary statement, in which she says that during a quarrel she threw a lighted lamp at the other woman.

Anti-Trust Tickets Barred

Helena, Mont., Oct. 18.—The state supreme court has decided that the anti-trust Democratic and anti-trust Republican state tickets shall be excluded from the official ballot, since their candidates were not nominated in a regular manner. The anti-trust tickets represent the so-called Heinze factions in both parties.

New York, Oct. 18.—The armored cruiser Colorado has arrived at the navy yard to have her guns mounted and will go to Boston Friday. Under easy draught the Colorado made 24 knots coming here from Philadelphia, and she is expecting to do 22 knots or better on her trial.

Bryan Talking to Hoosiers

Trenton, Oct. 18.—Albert C. Twining, an official of the wrecked First National bank of Asbury Park, was sentenced to six years' imprisonment in the state prison for making false entries in the books of the bank.

ADVICE TO WORKMEN

Powderly Urges a Combination For Cornering of Labor

Boston, Oct. 18.—Terence V. Powderly, formerly a grand master workman of the Knights of Labor, spoke at Faneuil hall last night before an audience which filled the place. He advocated the incorporation of labor organizations, deplored strikes, said that there was a great deal of good in the trusts and declared that it was easier for the workmen to get what they wanted from combinations in the present day than it was for them to secure reforms years ago from many individual employers. He strongly advocated the closed shop and said that, as all products were being cornered at the present day, it was necessary for the laboring man to corner the only thing he had, which was labor.

Wound In Breast Caused Death

Boston, Oct. 18.—Fred Watson and Eugene Sennett, the two soldiers of the United States army, who were held on suspicion of having been connected with the death of Larkin W. Hall, the milliner, were arraigned in the municipal court, charged with murder. The court set Oct. 25 as the date for a hearing, and both were held without bail. Medical Examiner Draper held an autopsy on Hall's body, after which he said that the man died from a wound in his left breast. He said Hall's jugular vein was not severed as was at first reported, and added that if Hall had received medical treatment immediately after he received the wound his life could have been saved.

Took Great Chances and Won

Pawtucket, R. I., Oct. 18.—Risking his own life and the lives of several members of his company, William F. Perrin, driver of a fire truck, while responding to an alarm of fire last night, sent his team of horses crashing into the rear of a chemical wagon in order to avoid running down two women who were crossing a street and who, had it not been for Perrin's daring act, would have been run down and trampled by the horses. Fortunately no one was injured, the man on the chemical engine hastily scrambling to the front of the vehicle before the smash. Both truck horses were thrown to the ground and were cut and bruised.

Pugilist Walcott Kills a Man

Boston, Oct. 18.—Nelson C. Hall, a negro, was killed, and Joe Walcott, the negro pugilist, was shot through the right hand by the accidental discharge of a revolver in the hands of Walcott early this morning in the ante-room of Union Park hall, where a dance was in progress. Walcott was placed under arrest and later removed to the city hospital. In explaining the shooting, Walcott says that he was exhibiting a magazine revolver to Hall when from some unknown cause it was discharged. The bullet entered Walcott's hand and continued on and entered Hall's heart, killing him instantly.

Far Apart on Divorce Canon

Boston, Oct. 18.—The house of bishops, at the Episcopal general convention, adopted an amendment to the canon on marriage and divorce, forbidding the remarriage of any divorced person. The amendment was substantially the same as that which was rejected by the house of deputies on Friday last. A conference will be held to consider the disagreement, but leading clergymen do not anticipate that the deputies will recede from their vote of last week.

Alleged Misuse of Mails

Manchester, N. H., Oct. 18.—Edward B. Pettingill, 25 years old, was arrested at West Derry, charged with violating United States postal laws. He is alleged to have conducted a matrimonial bureau and, representing himself as a young woman, secured money for the ostensible purpose of defraying the expenses of the supposed correspondent to the home of his patron. He is said to have operated in the middle west.

Thanks From Booth Tucker

Boston, Oct. 18.—Commander Booth Tucker of the Salvation Army received an ovation from a large gathering here last night, which had gathered to hear his farewell address in New England before leaving for his new post in London. Tucker heartily thanked the public, pulpit and press for the support which, he said, they had always given him.

Looking For Shooting Ground

Newport, R. I., Oct. 18.—The torpedo boat Tingy has sailed in the direction of Nantucket with a naval board which is endeavoring to find a strip of land, with a view of buying it, where the crews of American warships can land and indulge in small arms practice without danger of flying shells and bullets doing damage.

Fatality In Stable Fire

THE BELGIAN SIDE

British Seeking Sovereignty In the Congo Free State

MISSIONARIES AT FAULT

Baseless Charges of Atrocities by Those Who Were Turned Down In Seeking Material Advantages at Expense of Others

Washington, Oct. 18.—At the request of the King of Belgium, Colonel Henry I. Kowalsky of the San Francisco bar, and a personal friend of King Leopold, called at the White House by appointment and presented the reply of the Federation for the Defense of Belgian Interests Abroad to attacks made on the government of the Congo Free State. Colonel Kowalsky presented to the president an autograph picture of King Leopold, framed in silver. In the course of an extended audience with the president, Kowalsky said:

"Interested Britishers are endeavoring, under the guise of benefactors of the Congo natives, to open the question of sovereignty over those regions by calling a conference of the powers, at which it is hoped by the Britishers that England may establish the contention that Belgium is impotent to maintain an effective government in the Congo."

In an interview, Kowalsky said: "I presented to the president a letter from King Leopold in reply to the baseless charges of the British 'humanitarians' and also other documents stating the Belgian side of this controversy. The testimony of travelers from the days of Sir Henry Stanley to the present time is unanimous and emphatic in praise of the Congo Free State government.

"I also called to the president's attention the fact that all this uproar in England over the fearful atrocities in the Congo is fathered by missionaries whose applications for big concessions were turned down by the Belgian authorities. Not a single charge of cruelty, as I said to the president, has been made except by those who have been seekking material advantage in that region and who have not been permitted to exploit it at the expense of others."

Colonel Kowalsky was cordially received by the president, who expressed his pleasure that King Leopold had thus honored an American. After the matter has been carefully considered by the president and Secretary Hay a reply will be made to the Congo Reform association.

After his visit to the White House Kowalsky sent a cablegram to King Leopold assuring him of the president's appreciation of the king's thoughtful consideration.

King Leopold, in his letter to Kowalsky, a copy of which was left with the president, enclosed a statement about the Congo from the Federation for the Defense of Belgian Interests Abroad and says: "You will, in delivering this communication to President Roosevelt, reiterate to him on my behalf the feelings of high esteem I have for him and the unshaken confidence I place in his spirit of justice and impartiality."

Uncomplimentary to Missionaries

Washington, Oct. 18.—Ernest Lyon, American minister to Liberia, has made a report to the state department severely criticising missionaries resident in the republic. Mr. Lyon is himself an ordained clergyman. These criticisms touch the moral character of the missionaries, who also are accused of being unduly thrifty at the expense of the natives whom they are sent to help.

King Alfonso's Sister Dead

Madrid, Oct. 18.—Infanta Maria de las Mercedes de Bourbon of Hapsburg, Princess of the Austrias, sister of King Alfonso and wife of Prince Charles of Bourbon, gave birth to a daughter Sunday and died yesterday. During the six months intervening between the death of her father and the birth of her brother, Alfonso, in May, 1886, Mercedes was queen of Spain. In November, 1901, she gave birth to a son, and in February, 1903, to a second son.

Downfall of Portuguese Cabinet

Lisbon, Oct. 18.—King Charles declined to adjourn parliament at the request of Premier Ribeiro, who requested that action be taken in order that the government might consider plans for a punitive expedition against the Cuanhamas and other matters of moment. When the king refused Ribeiro notified him of the collective resignation of the cabinet.

Heavy Day In Stock Market

New York, Oct. 18.—After scoring new high records for the year in many issues, the entire stock market gave way in the last hour yesterday under efforts to press stock for sale. Recessions of one to two points from top prices occurred in a considerable number of issues. Total sales for the day were by far the largest of the year, being 1,974,200 shares.

EXPRESSMEN CULPABLE

Inquest Report Filed In Relation to the Melrose Disaster

Malden, Mass., Oct. 18.—Driver Roy E. Fenton and Foreman Percy C. Hawkins of Eastman's express of Melrose are held criminally responsible for the explosion of dynamite in Melrose on Sept. 21, by which nine persons were killed and nearly two score injured, by Judge Sweetser of the district court in the report of the inquest held by him. His report was filed with the superior court at Cambridge.

Fenton was the man who drove the express team from Boston to Melrose on the night of the explosion. Upon his team were four boxes, each containing 50 pounds of dynamite, and one of the boxes dropped off the wagon in Melrose. A street car from Boston, loaded with passengers, came along a few minutes after the dynamite fell off and struck the box, causing the explosion. Fenton is now under bonds on a charge of manslaughter.

Judge Sweetser's finding was communicated to the Boston police and Hawkins was placed under arrest at his office at 15 Devonshire street.

English Presentation of "Parsifal"

Boston, Oct. 18.—Bardner's sacred fastival play, "Parsifal," was rendered in English here last night for the first time on any stage under the auspices of Henry W. Savage. All the beauties of Wagner were brought out by the artists of the cast and orchestra of 70 pieces. While the grand strains at times enchanted the listeners, it was apparent that the attention of a large majority of those present was centered upon the English of the rendition. At the close of the performance critics who had been to Bayreuth admitted that the text had not suffered by the bold attempt to convert it into another language.

Mysterious Fire on the Hancock

New York, Oct. 18.—Fire was detected early in the morning on the United States receiving ship Hancock at the New York navy yard. It is not known how long the fire in the Hancock had been burning when discovered, but, judging by the progress it had made it must have been several hours. By shifting large quantities of coal from the bunkers, the firemen got to the seat of the trouble, but it was several hours before the fire was completely put out. The Hancock is the most important receiving ship in the navy. The cause of the flames is shrouded in mystery.

Practiced Naturalization Frauds

St. Paul, Oct. 18.—The United States court of appeals has affirmed the verdict finding J. P. Dolan, Frank Garrett and T. E. Barrett guilty of aiding and abetting in securing fraudulent naturalization papers for Italians. The sentence of a fine of $1000 each and five years' imprisonment at hard labor is also affirmed. Barrett was marshal of the St. Louis court of appeals, Garrett was a police officer, and Dolan was chairman of the St. Louis Democratic city central committee.

Inspector Rodie Removed

Washington, Oct. 18.—President Roosevelt has removed Robert S. Rodie, supervising inspector of the steamboat inspection service, located at New York, on account of the disclosures regarding the General Slocum disaster. Secretary Metcalf has taken preliminary steps towards the removal of J. A. Dumont, inspector of hulls, and T. H. Barrett, inspector of boilers.

Baseball Cracks May Meet

New York, Oct. 18.—President Brush of the New York National League Baseball club has signified conditional willingness to have his team, the winner of the National league pennant, meet the Boston team, champions in the American league, in a series of games next spring for the baseball championship of the world.

C. A. R. FAIR.

Promises to be a Great Success.

Department Officials at Opening.

Many Interested and Numerous Attractions.

The six days' fair of Paul Revere Post 88, was very successfully opened last evening. It was ideal weather and there was a large attendance. These facts together with Quincy's interest in the Civil war veterans, the hearty support of the Woman's Relief Corps, the Ladies' Aid Society, Camp Boyd, L. S. W. V., and the Boys' Brigade of Atlantic, and the numerous attractions offered, should accomplish the object desired, which is to raise a large sum of money to replenish the charity fund.

Paul Revere Post and guests assembled at Grand Army hall and at 7 P. M. paraded with music and fireworks to the Coliseum. In the line were the City Band of Quincy, which played popular airs; the Boys' Brigade of Atlantic, whose marching is always admired; Camp Boyd of Spanish War Veterans, and in the place of honor the veterans of Paul Revere Post in goodly numbers.

The program in the hall opened with selections by the City Band. After reveille was sounded, Commander Warner explained the object of the fair which was to replenish the charity fund. He pledged his word of honor that every cent would be expended for needy comrades, or widows and orphans of soldiers, whether members of Paul Revere Post or not.

Dept. Com. Lucius W. Field was then introduced. He said he had a personal interest in the success of this fair because of an acquaintance with Mrs. Paul J. Revere, for whose husband the Post is named. He told of different ways of opening grand fairs but thought a liberal use of printer's ink the best, as the people attending did not care for speeches. The earning capacity of the veterans was now limited, and they are not among the wealthy, therefore they need help. That noble auxiliary, the Woman's Relief Corps, is also interested. Last year they expended $20,000 in relief, and one Post expended $40,000. He hoped the fair would be a great success.

Dept. Adjt. Prebble was pleased at the interest manifested in the old veterans. He congratulated Paul Revere Post on a fair which promised so well, saying his post had not had the courage for twelve years to hold a fair. He appealed to all to support the fair liberally, and was sure every dollar netted would be economically and wisely expended.

The Star Spangled Banner was sung by a choir from St. John's church to accompaniment of the band.

Dept. Com. Field then declared the fair opened.

THE DECORATIONS.

The decorations of the hall were in charge of Comrade H. H. Russell of Everett, who has certainly outdone himself. The thousands who visit the fair will miss the score or more furniture signs with which the walls have been covered. They have disappeared and in their place are hundreds of yards of bunting of the national colors—red white and blue. On the front of the hall outside the building is a large shield, on which are the words—"Grand G. A. R. Fair Now Open."

On either side of this, bunting has been draped. As one mounts the stairs leading to the hall the eye meets another large shield reading "Welcome to our Friends." A few minutes can then be profitably spent in examining the decorations of the interior. On the sides of the hall hundreds of yards of red white and blue bunting have been hung. This has been caught up at intervals, and at these places one of the army corps badges appears.

In the center back of the platform is a large picture of Col. Paul J. Revere, for whom the post was named. Two large flags are draped on either side of this picture. At the other end of the hall are other American flags, while from the ceiling streamers of red, white and blue are festooned to the sides and end of the hall. The effect when the hall is lighted is very pretty.

THE ATTRACTIONS.

On either side of the hall are prettily decorated tables presided over by accommodating ladies. On these tables are useful and fancy articles without number, also confectionery, refreshments, etc.

In the center are two wheels of fortune. On the south side is a cabinet where eighty-four war pictures taken on the field of battle by U. S. photographers may be seen. There is also a cane ring, African dodger, and other things to please.

Back of the main hall there is a smaller hall where dancing will be in order every evening during the week.

Besides the articles on the sales tables there are numerous valuable gifts which will be disposed of by books, and then every holder of a season ticket is given a present and may be fortunate enough to draw a cash prize of $100, $50, $25, $10 or $5.

AT THE TABLES.

The following ladies and gentlemen were in charge of the tables and other attractions:

Seventy or More Ladies Attend Y. M. C. A. Auxiliary Meeting.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. met Monday afternoon with Mrs. Theodore Hardwick. In harmony with the delightful day, was the atmosphere of the whole meeting. There was an attendence of 70 or more. Mrs. W. E. Blanchard had charge of the devotional exercises and opened them with Dr. Everett's hymn, "Thy gentleness hath made me great."

Mrs. Alden read most acceptably a poem by Thackeray.

Mrs. Moore's singing of two solos was greatly appreciated; it means so much to hear the words clearly, as well as to listen to her lovely voice.

Mrs. Jennie Hocking Hunt was accompanist, and will assist to make the music successful in this way, throughout the winter.

Brief reports were given by the delegates to the convention at Cambridge last week by Mrs. Sheppard Mrs. Pollard, Mrs. Guy and Mrs. Gay.

In the business meeting it was voted to hold a "Fair Fete" for the benefit of the new building, April 19 and all ladies interested are asked to join and work for it.

Miss Elizabeth Johnson read a most thoughtful and helpful paper.

CITY CHARTER AT FAULT

Lawyer McAnarney Believes Many Changes Are Necessary.

Some Plain Words Relative to the Department of Public Works.

Recommends Permanent Heads for the Police and Fire Departments and Other Things.

John W. McAnarney, Esq., has been very favorably mentioned as a Mayoralty candidate, but there is considerable doubt about his becoming the candidate of either party. He informs the Daily Ledger that he does not propose to be the candidate of any clique, or to have his hands tied so that, if elected, he would be Mayor in name only. He says both parties have made overtures to him, but that they demand too much.

Under certain circumstances he would enter the field, and he is not adverse to submitting his views on public affairs. He would like to see this year a campaign of ideas, which would result in some permanent good, not a scramble for office. He would not favor a clean sweep of officials at City Hall, but the retention of those whose duties are performed meritoriously.

Mr. McAnarney submits his views, at length, as follows:

REVISION OF CITY CHARTER.

It is generally admitted that the present City Charter, after 15 years' trial, has not proved a success. Valuations in Quincy have by annual increases reached a point where property is assessed in most instances far in excess of its market value. Yet notwithstanding this forced valuation, and the high tax rate that has been steadily maintained, the city has not made the showing, considering the large amount of money raised by taxation, the people have had a right to expect.

The fault in my opinion has been in part with the city charter. The charter should be so amended as to reduce the number of councilmen; increasing the number of councilmen at large and decreasing the number from each ward.

Instead of having weekly meetings, as has been in vogue in the past, after the annual budget has been past, the Council should have but few meetings. The actual and important business of the City of Quincy can be properly attended to by a small body of councilmen in a very few meetings.

Where an appropriating body in any town or city meets too frequently, too great an opportunity is afforded for the councilmen, even with the best of intentions, to be over-zealous in looking out for their constituents and districts, and as a result, they very often indulge in needless and extravagant appropriations involving unnecessary expenditures of the city money.

The secret of the success of the old New England town form of government should be attributed not to anything mysterious about that system of government, but to the fact that the appropriating body, to wit, the voters, met on only one occasion during the year and after that the affairs of the town were left in the hands of a few conservative citizens.

Under the changes above suggested, in the legislative department of the city, the temptation for the departments to exceed their appropriations, borrowing between departments, and the juggling of appropriations would be greatly diminished.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The charter vests in the Mayor the power to appoint the Commissioner of Public Works, and then gives to the Commissioner such absolute, and almost unlimited authority, and places upon him such responsibility that it is no wonder Quincy has been unable to secure a Commissioner of Public Works who has succeeded in giving satisfaction for more than one or two terms. I feel that the provisions of the charter creating the office of Commissioner of Public Works, investing his department with the authority it does are fundamentally wrong, and opposed to sound public policy.

When an official holding an appointive office has the expenditure of so much of the public money that this official has, entire control of the purchasing of all the city supplies, the employment of practically all the city laborers, the repairing of the public buildings, as well as the approval of contracts concerning them, and the erection of the same,—thus having the distribution of the larger portion of the city patronage,—to my mind, the instrument creating that office at the same time extends an invitation to the building up within the city of a political machine.

If the man filling this office is a man of character and capacity, and discharges his duties in a proper manner, he must have of necessity in course of time, made many enemies, and become unpopular, and there is danger that notwithstanding his worth as a public official that unpopularity will degenerate into public distrust, and then his usefulness, as a public official, must be seriously impaired.

On the other hand, there is always a practical danger that this office may pass into the hands of a man who will manage its affairs for political purposes. I believe that the city's interest will be better cared for if this office is abolished, and in place thereof a Board of Commissioners of Public Works created.

This Board should consist of three members to be appointed in the first instance, and thereafter one to be elected annually for a term of three years. They to have the power to appoint the superintendent of streets, etc., and practically the authority that now vests in the Commissioner of Public Works. If deemed advisable the Mayor might be made a member of the board. It seems only proper that where the office is so closely connected with the vital affairs of the city, that the people ought to have the right to pass upon the question of the fitness of the applicant for the office, and should not be obliged to do that by proxy, that is to say, by electing a Mayor, and entrusting to his making a proper selection; they should make their own selection on election day at the polls.

POLICE DEPARTMENT.

The ordinance governing the Police Department seems to me to be radically wrong. In most instances the members of the present Police Force have entered the department after one or two years of waiting and preparation. When a man is enrolled upon the permanent police force, he immediately becomes subject to civil service rules, and can only be removed except for cause. He knows that until he is guilty of some overt act, amounting to a breach of duty that can be proven against him, his position is practically secure for life.

Once he has secured his appointment, he can safely become a mere machine, automatically, as it were, performing only just such duties and rendering such service as are necessary to entitle him to his weekly stipend. The ordinance holds out to him no hope of advancement or reward.

It does not seem to me that this is a healthy condition of affairs. The department should be placed upon such a system that a patrolman would have a right to feel that if he is conscientious and alert in preforming his duties, and in maintaining perfect public order his services will be recognized, and his efficiency rewarded.

I believe this ordinance should be changed so as to encourage the patrolman to be faithful and zealous, and promising him in return, in course of time promotion and advancement.

The head of this department is now held responsible for the conduct of all his subordinates, but the peculiarity of the present condition of affairs is that his subordinates are civil service men, who owe him only a perfunctory obedience, while he himself is a creature of an annual appointment, subservient to the orders of the Mayor, who can make or unmake him just as it pleases his fancy.

The head of this department ought to occupy a permanent position or at least he should not be subject to annual appointment. He ought to feel that the political complexion of the Mayor or the party in control of the city affairs, so far as the administration of his office is concerned, should make no difference to him. He should never have his attention diverted from preserving order and maintaining the law within the city, to the upbuilding of the political fortunes of any man or party.

Just so long as this department follows the fortunes of the political party for the time being in power, just so long must the people put up with impaired public service. These changes can be effected without incurring any substantial additional expenditure of money, and proper provision could easily be arranged for removing the head of the department if he did not properly perform the duties of his office.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The present ordinance and provisions of the charter governing the Fire Department should be so changed as to take this department completely out of politics, and not leave it subject to the vicissitudes of political parties. All that I have stated concerning the Police department applies with equal force to this department.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The Public Library system should be so extended and improved that all the children in Quincy, so far as practical, should have equal access thereto. To that end, I would advocate the establishment of branches of the Public Library in different sections of the city.

EDUCATIONAL.

Our public schools and the amount of money annually expended in maintaining the same, presents a very serious matter for consideration, and one well worthy of most serious thought on the part of our citizens.

We have in Quincy, under the care of the city, in addition to the public schools, the Adams Academy and Woodward Institute.

I share the opinion common among many of our citizens that considering the amount of money expended we are not obtaining the best results. There seems to be something wrong with our educational system.

I would recommend that immediate attention be given to this branch of the public service.

Consideration should be given to the question of whether or not it cannot be improved, and at the same time a much needed economy obtained by making the Academy and Institute, and our High and grammar schools work more in harmony, and one serve as a complement to the other. It might be necessary to invoke legislative action to do this, but I can not help feeling that the legal obligation can be overcome.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

Rigid economy must for sometime be practised in all the departments, and one of the means to be employed in producing that economy is for the public to be as moderate as possible in its demands for improvements, and to be content with necessities until it can afford luxuries.

TWO WEDDINGS

Dedham Man Comes to Quincy for Bride.

Quincy Man Goes to Weymouth.

Congratulations of Many Friends. Rich Presents.

The social event of the season in Weymouth was the wedding Tuesday evening of Miss M. Nellie Hart, the well known pianist, and Councilman John J. Reardon of Quincy, travelling salesman for the large tea house of Bower & Bartlett of Boston. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. B. Holland of the church of the Sacred Heart.

The bride was charmingly attired in a gown of white crepe de chine over taffeta silk, cut en traine and trimmed with point Venise lace chiffon. The tulle veil was caught back with orange blossoms and she carried a shower bouquet of Bride roses and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaids were Miss Adelaide Coleman of Boston and Miss Hannah C. Whelan of Weymouth, and their dresses were pink silk mull over silk, trimmed with pink satin girdles and they carried bouquets of pink roses.

The maid of honor was Miss Gertrude Reardon of Quincy, sister of the groom, and she was charmingly attired in a gown of white silk muslin with lace and ribbon trimmings.

The best man was Dr. Daniel B. Reardon, a brother of the groom, and senior house surgeon at the City hospital of Boston.

A reception followed the marriage ceremony at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. M. A. Hart, 45 Hunt street, and the interior of the house was handsomely trimmed with autumn leaves, flowers and potted plants, and the spacious grounds were prettily decorated with Japanese lanterns. The ushers were John B. Hart, brother of the bride, John B. Whelan of Weymouth, and Frank and Vincent Reardon of Quincy.

The receiving party stood under a large floral arch, and Mr. and Mrs. Reardon were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Bartholemew Reardon of Quincy and Mrs. M. A. Hart.

Danford's orchestra of Boston furnished the music for the occasion, and the lunch was served by Weber of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Reardon were the recipients of many handsome and costly gifts. The grooms gift to the bride was a gold chain and locket with diamond setting. The best man and ushers were presented with gold scarf pins, and the bridesmaid and maid of honor with gold monogram brooches.

Mr. and Mrs. Reardon left on a late evening train for a two weeks' trip, and on their return will reside at 45 Hunt street, Weymouth.

Among the guests present from out of town were: Mrs. John Brassell, Mrs. Fred Kingsley and Miss Mary A. Brassell of Norwich, Conn., Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Bower of Braintree; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Young of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hanley of Somerville; Miss Sarah Enwright of Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. John B. Donovan of Boston; Miss Isabelle Holland of Boston.

From Quincy were noticed: Mr. and Mrs. William Reardon, Rev. Father Roche, Mr. and Mrs. Bizzozero. Mr. and Mrs. John Ballou, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Teasdale, William P. Hughes, John Mahoney, Miss Ella Mahoney, Miss Annie Walsh, Miss Minnie Cashman, Thomas Keating, Thomas Dumphy, John Welsh, James Burke, William Shea.

Barrett---Brown.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in St. John's church at nuptial high mass at 9.30 this morning, when Miss Rose Louise Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Brown of Mechanic street, was united in marriage to Mr. Edward Darcy Barrett, a well known young man of Dedham.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. John J. Coan, in the presence of a large gathering of friends. The interior of the church was prettily decorated, the altar being resplendent with candles and white and pink chrysanthemums. Miss Hughes presided at the organ and Lohengrin's wedding march was sung by friends of the bride at the mass which followed the ceremony.

She wore a crescent of diamonds a gift of the groom, and in her hand she carried a white pearl prayer book.

Mr. Joseph Sweeney of Hyde Park was best man, and Miss Margaret Patricia Brown and Miss Clara Beatrice Brown, sisters of the bride, were bridesmaids, and Miss Stella Catherine Brown, flower girl.

The bridesmaids wore white Brussels net over white silk with picture hats of net with pink trimmings. The flower girl wore a gown of pink tulle with hat to match and carried a basket of pink roses.

The bride wore a renaissance lace over white chiffon and silk, the veil being caught up with lilies of the valley. She also wore an ivory comb which was the one worn by her mother on her wedding day.

The ceremony was followed by a wedding breakfast to the immediate families at the home of the bride's parents, the bridal party being assisted in receiving by the parents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Brown.

The decorations at the house, which were very pretty, were of autumn leaves and asparagus vine.

Upon returning from a wedding trip to Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Barrett will reside on Allen street, East Braintree, where they will be at home to friends on Thursdays after January 1, 1905.

FOUND IN WOODS.

The Body of a Shipyard Man--- Was in Court Yesterday.

The body of Hugh F. Quinn was found this morning in the woods off South street in the rear of the Alex. Nash estate. The body was found by J. Oliver, who was going through the woods looking for a hat which he had lost. The police were notified and the body was removed to Hall's undertaking rooms.

Quinn, who is a single man, was employed at the Fore River works. He was in court on Monday for drunkenness, and his case was continued until Oct. 24 to pay a fine. He was about 29 years of age. He boarded at 582 South street although his home is said to have been in South Boston.

Medical Examiner Jones, who viewed the body, gives the cause of death as alcoholism and suffocation. It is thought that Quinn, while under the influence of liquor, lay down in such a position that he suffocated.

Drift of Opinion.

☞"The best friend of labor is not the executive who assents to everything advocated in the name of labor, but rather the one who is willing to oppose a demand made in labor's name when he conscientiously believes that it is not in labor's interest."—Gov. Bates.

☞With the Russian bureaucracy Americans can have no sympathy, but it is only human to utter a sigh for the poor devils, lying dead on the field of battle, who gave up their lives for as unworthy a cause as ever prompted a civilized nation to take up the sword.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

☞The political rush is on. Business is booming. Thoughts are sizzling in many heads. Schemes are being planned that are calculated if carried out to make a Massachusetts campaign as hot as tabasco and about as harmful to all overusing it. All sorts of businesslike plans are laid that will "assist the common people" to know how to vote. Old sores are being opened, old scandals and old records looked over for campaign material, old and forgotten issues and statements and youthful happenings are being inquired into. In a word, there is a desire for officeholding on in Massachusetts in many sections, and the desire to gratify that longing is causing a rumpus and a row in many places, and is causing all kinds of methods, good, bad and indifferent, to be used to push along the causes of candidates or to spoil them.—Brockton Enterprise.

FAIRBANKS' TOUR

Candidate Spends a Day Talking to New Englanders

THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF

Says Its Adoption Has Brought Prosperity--Republicans Are Ready to Make Revisions, When Thought Necessary

Providence, Oct. 19.—With a speech in this city last night, Senator Fairbanks ended a very busy day in New England, having made brief addresses at Pittsfield, Mass., Woonsocket and Pawtucket, where his special train stopped during the trip to this city. At each stop he was accorded a cordial reception. As his train pulled out of Pittsfield, the first stop, the employes of the Stanley Manufacturing company turned out in a body and cheered the candidate, who acknowledged the greeting from the rear platform.

At Woonsocket he was greeted by a large crowd at the railroad station and a salute of 21 guns and at Pawtucket he was met by a delegation from the local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution and presented with a large basket of flowers so arranged that the bouquet represented the national colors. This present was made by the daughters as a compliment to the senator's wife, who is the national president of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Upon his arrival in this city shortly after 4 o'clock Senator Fairbanks was driven to Warwick, where he was the guest at dinner at the home of Senator Aldrich. After dinner the senator, accompanied by Senator Aldrich and Congressman Capron, drove to Infantry hall, where he made the principal speech of the evening.

The meeting was preceded by a torchlight parade, in which the Republican candidate for vice president participated. Senator Aldrich presided, and Lieutenant Governor Utter and Frederick H. Jackson, candidates on the Republican ticket for governor and lieutenant governor respectively, were the first speakers of the evening, and they dealt almost entirely with state issues.

Senator Fairbanks, in his opening remarks, impressed upon his audience the necessity of electing not only the Republican state ticket, but also of sending to Washington Republican congressmen. He then turned his attention to strictly national issues, and called attention to the prosperity which, he said, had been induced by the adoption of the protective tariff. Regarding revisions in the law which might be needed as it stands today, Fairbanks said that the Republican party stands ready to make such revisions. The Democratic party, the speaker asserted, would, if given the power, make changes along free trade lines, while the policy of the Republican party would be along protective lines, a policy which the Democrats wished to destroy.

As to Indiana and New Jersey

New York, Oct. 19.—The political situations in Indiana and New Jersey were the most important affairs of the Democratic campaign considered by Judge Parker after he arrived here on his sixth visit since he was nominated for president. The announcement was made by Indianans that the prospects of carrying the state, as shown by a fourth canvass, are encouraging. In New Jersey the situation is reported to be far more complex than in any other of the doubtful states and the result more dependent upon the work done in the remaining time of the campaign. This was the judgment of former Senator Smith, who predicted that the Democratic national ticket will win.

Assails Protection System

Cleveland, Oct. 19.—A large crowd heard W. Bourke Cockran speak here last night. Cockran reviewed the fundamental principles of the two great parties and said that the return to Democratic principles would mean the betterment of the condition of the workingman in shorter hours of labor and an increase of wages, such a condition being brought about by increased production, which is a fundamental of Democracy. Speaking of the trusts, he said that they were a natural outcome of the protective tariff system, as were disputes between capital and labor.

Davis Not Yet "Tuckered"

Welch, W. Va., Oct. 19.—Henry G. Davis wound up a busy day of campaigning with a rally here last night. Davis is maintaining his reputation as a continuous performance campaigner and shows no ill effects of the many speeches he has delivered and miles travelled during the past 10 days. The whirlwind campaign will end today at Kenova. The itinerary or the day has been rearranged so that instead of four speeches there will be a dozen.

Strain Telling on Bryan's Voice

Bedford, Ind., Oct. 19.—The special train carrying W. J. Bryan on his tour of Indiana was more than two hours late arriving in this city for the mass meeting last night. RE-ELECTED SENATOR

Proctor Retains Confidence of the People of Vermont

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 19.—Senator Redfield Proctor was re-elected to the United States senate by the Vermont legislature yesterday. His selection as the senior senator was officially confirmed today, when both branches of the legislature met in joint session.

In the upper branch of the legislature every vote cast was for Proctor, but in the house the Democrats supported their candidate, John H. Senter. Out of the 236 votes cast, 205 were for Proctor and 31 for Senter. Ten members were not present when the vote was taken.

Senator Proctor was present at the joint session of the legislature today when the vote was formally announced and he addressed the legislators.

Discussed Divorce Canon

Boston, Oct. 19.—The divorce issue again came before the Episcopal general convention yesterday, but no final action was taken on several resolutions referring to the subject, which were presented. Boles Confesses to Murders

Brookline, Mass., Oct. 19.—Henry F. Captain Paige, who has charge of the case, intimates that the police will assume that the prisoner is insane.

Plumbing, Heating and Gas Fitting.

Next to Washing Dishes

the most despised drudgery of house keeping is the care of the several fires and the sweeping up of the ashes and dust they produce. Unless, of course, you own a Hot-Water or Steam System—only one fire then needed and no dust or ashes in the living rooms.

IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators

Do not delay too long. Did not your experience last winter with the Old Hot Air Furnace teach you it was time to change. Compare the Cost of the Fuel saved in years to come, not the First Cost of the Heating job. Speaking of Plumbing, that's our stronghold. Try us and be convinced.

JAPANESE DRIVEN BACK

Yamada's Command Met With Terrible Slaughter

LONE TREE HILL IS TAKEN

Dearly Bought by Russians, Who Hold Key to Important Positions--Awful Expenditure of Men and Munitions In Battle Which Shows No Sign of Immediate Ending, Though Limit of Endurance In Troops Must Have Been Nearly Reached

Mukden, Oct. 19.—It is reported that the Russian army is advancing. Rain is hindering everything. The rivers are bank full and the fords are impassable. There are no bridges. Supplies of all sorts are delayed.

News has just been received that the Japanese left flank has been driven back with heavy loss.

Lone Tree hill, won by the Russians after a desperate struggle, was the object of a gallant but unsuccessful attempt at recapture by the Japanese, under the command of General Yamada. In spite of the awful slaughter with which they had been driven from the hill, the Japanese returned to the charge during the night of Oct. 17, recognizing that the hill was the key to the position on the southwest fronts. Nine regiments participated, creeping up through the night and delivering a furious assault at dawn. But the hill had been bought too dearly by the Russians to relinquish it, and the Japanese were driven back with terrible slaughter.

The fighting of Oct. 17 was confined to the Russian centre at Shakhe river and was mostly artillery fire, the Japanese using big guns and high explosive shells. During nine days of continuous fighting the losses were never less than 2000 a day. The hospitals are hardly able to handle the wounded. Nevertheless, they have performed wonders.

It is reported that General Mistchenko's Cossacks, under command of Adjutant Gavriloff, were engaged in a hot fight on Oct. 17 towards the southeast. A Cossack horse battery silenced the Japanese guns and drove back several infantry battalions, but were unable to capture the guns, which the Japanese succeeded in carrying off.

Shakhe station, or what is left of it, has been recaptured by the Russians, who will shortly reopen it for railway traffic with Mukden.

The continual vigilance of the combatants, and especially the serious acceptance by the Japanese army of the Russian advance, promises further fighting, although there has been already 10 days of unprecedented and exhaustive conflict. The Japanese have alternately tested the Russian centre and right flank, holding the Russians in a monotonous and bitter day-to-day resistance on the line of contact. The Japanese apparently feared that the Russian advance would develop a superior force of reserves.

The duration of the contest already exceeds by several days the common prophecies, as it was believed that neither side was capable of such expenditure of men and munitions, which already is in excess of all the previous fighting within 25 miles of Liaoyang.

The roads south and southwest of Mukden are filled with refugees, native families trailing homeless towards the sorry streets of Mukden. The army is so near that the environs of the city have been re-populated. All the roads are crowded with army traffic.

The fighting on Oct. 16 was most severe. Fifty wounded were counted in one hour passing a point on one country pathway. Already the casualties reported are so great as to confirm the declaration of the leaders that the present conflict would be the bloodiest in history. It is not possible to make any close estimate of the Russian casualties.

The Russians appear to hold positions in the plain along the Shakhe river, extending from the railway to Da pass, beginning at the mountains, but the bitterness and tenacity of the fight indicates an intimate relation with the situation of the eastern army, about which little is obtainable.

After a threatening day the Japanese at 11 o'clock on the night of Oct. 16 rushed the village of Linchenpo, on the north bank of the Shakhe river and west of the railway, precipitating a thunderous cannonade and fusillade, which continued until midnight, the rifle fire continuing until dawn. The Japanese now occupy the raised temple quadrangle near Linchenpo, the only eminence for miles around, and which affords an unusual advantage for observation and artillery fire against the Russian right. Several attempts to dislodge them have failed.

Japanese shells are falling at Chanchiapo, near Paitapo, showing that the heavy and continuous Russian cannonade has been ineffective.

The Chinese have deserted all the villages and the troops are using the woodwork of their houses for fuel. The country south is desolated. The Japanese still seem to be exerting themselves to force the Russians out of Mukden. A battle is assured in the positions surrounding the town.

It becomes more and more evident that the resources of the country cannot support a large army. This season's crops are spoiled.

General Kuropatkin remains with the troops, having abandoned his headquarters at Mukden.

As this dispatch is filed, Tuesday evening, the Russians are retaining the ground gained at the Shakhe river. Several maxims have been captured. The firing ceased after dark yesterday.

Russia's Big Order For Coal

Cardiff, Oct. 19.—It is stated on good authority that upwards of 500,000 tons of Welsh coal will be shipped for Russian account to points on the Mediterranean and Red seas and Atlantic ocean during October, November and December. The orders come principally through the Hamburg-American Steamship company.

Reported Sinking of Cruiser

London, Oct. 19.—A dispatch from Shanghai to The Morning Post says it is reported there that Japanese shells have sunk the Russian cruiser Bayan in the harbor of Port Arthur.

Retract Pleas of Not Guilty

Trenton, Oct. 19.—J. H. Stone, H. B. Quintard, C. W. Russ and James Russ, of the Nonpareil Cork Works company, who were indicted on the charge of conspiring against the United States government because of selling life preservers inside of which were pieces of iron, retracted their pleas of not guilty. They claimed that their goods were sold in the open market and were not made directly for the government, and that therefore there was no conspiracy against the government, as charged in the indictment.

Wandered Off In Night Robe

New York, Oct. 19.—Mrs. Grace Singer, 18 years old, of Brownsville, left her bed Saturday night, clad only in her sleeping gown and stockings, and has not been seen since. Her absence is puzzling the police and her relatives. Her absence was reported to the police by her husband, who is distracted over the disappearance. She had acted strangely since the birth of her child, now 7 days old, which she has deserted.

Can't Agree to Railroad Scheme

St. John, Oct. 19.—Chairman Blair has announced his resignation from the Canadian government railway commission almost on the eve of the general elections, in which the Grand Trunk Pacific railway project will be an issue. Blair has notified the premier that, beyond reaffirming his strong objection to the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, he has no present intention of re-entering political life.

Negro Students a Menace

Des Moines, Oct. 19.—Professor Dubois of Atlanta university created a sensation at the Congregational national council by a statement in his address that the rise and education of the ambitious young negro student is a menace to the security and class superiority of the rich, the well born and the white. He said the negro problem is only a phase of the greater problem of class distinction.

In Favor of Insurance Companies

Albany, Oct. 19.—The court of appeals has decided that the franchise tax of 1 percent upon insurance company premiums can be collected upon premiums from new policies only. This decision reverses decisions of State Comptroller Miller and the appellate division, who held that the tax should be assessed every year upon premiums from all policies then in force.

Crooked Election Officials

Havana, Oct. 19.—All five members of the Santiago provincial election returning board have been sentenced to 14 years and 8 months' imprisonment for falsifying returns in order to seat several congressmen belonging to the Moderate coalition. Leaders of the Moderates in congress say that they will appeal against the sentence of the supreme court.

WHY MOTHERS WORRY

Did you ever hear a mother worry over a plump child? There is no better bank of health for a child to draw from than a good supply of healthy flesh.

Scott's Emulsion not only gives a child weight and plumpness, but it feeds the brain, bones and nerves with strength and active power.

Fewer mothers would worry if they knew more about Scott's Emulsion.

Scott's Emulsion is substituted by cheap emulsions and so-called wines, cordials and extracts of cod-liver oil. They can do you no good and are dear at any price. Why buy them? Scott's Emulsion has been the one reliable preparation of cod-liver oil for nearly thirty years.

We'll send you a sample free upon request.

JUDGE SCORED POLICE

Big Squad Clubbed Sympathizers With Eviction Rioters

Cork, Oct. 19.—A serious conflict between sympathizers with those who were arrested for participation in the eviction riots at Fellsport on Oct. 12 and the police occurred at the hearing of the case at the Rivertown courthouse. Over 20 people were injured in the disturbance, some of them being seriously hurt.

When the Fellsport defendants were arraigned, the crowd in attendance, unable to secure admission to the courtroom, attacked the police. Over 100 of the latter formed up to maintain order and charged with their batons, striking right and left and dispersing the crowd.

The judge summoned the officer commanding the police, who said his men had been first attacked. W. M. O'Brien, one of the court attendants, who charged excessive brutality on the part of the police, brought in one of the injured men, who was covered with blood. The magistrate denounced the action of the police and as a protest adjourned the hearing for six weeks, bailing the defendants until that time.

Eased Up on Youngsters

Lynn, Mass., Oct. 19.—Albert Sturtevant, Paul Reitzel, Charles Marshall and Harry M. Corsen, charged with breaking and entering and larceny from houses in Lynn and Swampscott, pleaded guilty to three counts charged against them. Judge Berry stated that the parents of the boys would make full restitution for all things stolen, and he would continue all cases four weeks. At the end of that time the boys must report to the court, and the cases would be continued again until the sitting of the grand jury next January, when he would make a final decision.

"Black Demon" Must Retire

Boston, Oct. 19.—Joe Walcott, for years the recognized welterweight champion of the world, in many ways the most remarkable fighter the game has ever known, will be forced to retire from the ring. The shooting accident of Monday night, in which Walcott killed his friend, Nelson Hall, resulted in the complete ruining of the right hand which has won battle after battle for the negro boxer. Two bullets went through the palm of the hand, shattering bones, muscles and cords.

To Study Pulmonary Diseases

New York, Oct. 19.—The newly formed commission for the investigation of acute respiratory diseases met for the first time last night. The commission will endeavor to find means to prevent the growing infection from acute respiratory diseases, particularly pneumonia. There has been a steady increase in the death rate from pulmonary diseases since 1886. Of 42,700 deaths in the first six months of the present year, 43 percent were due to pulmonary diseases.

Roosevelt and Crane Confer

Washington, Oct. 19.—W. M. Crane, the newly appointed senator from Massachusetts, was in conference with President Roosevelt for some time last night. Mr. Crane was averse to talking about his visit further than to say that it was made at the invitation of the president. He returned to Boston on a late train.

"Social Democratic" Ticket

Albany, Oct. 19.—"Social Democratic" is the party name that will head the third column of the official ballot at the coming state election, unless the courts reverse the decision of Secretary of State O'Brien, who decided that objections to the nominating certificate filed under this name were not well taken.

Food Supplies Lost In Wreck

Halifax, Oct. 19.—Steamer Havana, from Halifax, towing a barge to Hamilton inlet, Labrador, heavily laden with food supplies and other merchandise, was struck by a gale in the Straits of Belle Isle and the cable parted. The barge became a wreck, breaking in two parts. Everything was lost.

No Word of Virginia Lake

St. Johns, Oct. 19.—Apprehensions respecting the overdue Labrador mail steamship Virginia Lake are increasing. It is feared that some mishap has befallen her. Besides her crew the Virginia Lake has on board several hundred men from the fishing fleets, the season having closed.

Registration Below Expectations

Chicago, Oct. 19.—The result of the second day of registration was disappointing to the party managers, as the total registration for the city was only 7814 greater than the registration for the last national campaign. The total registration is 407,579 for the two days.

New York, Oct. 19.—The syndicate headed by Speyer & Co. and the Deutshe bank of Berlin has been awarded the new $40,000,000 loan to be made by the Mexican government. The bonds run for 50 years and carry interest at 4 percent.

OUR HOSPITAL.

Quincy Without it Would Be Cruel.

The Work is Not Done.

Citizens Should Come into Closer Touch and Aid it.

It is an inborn habit of people to forget, and neglect matters of vital and perpetual concern, simply because those matters are not touching their personal comforts. Let us not forget that a score (more or less) of men, women and children patients, and several scores of their friends, have a daily and anxious concern in the welfare of that haven on the hill.

It is related that in a sister city, on a cheerless night, a doctor and a clergyman were hunting for some person to take care of a poor sick woman. During their anxious search they vowed that steps should be taken for the establishment of a hospital. Out of that resolution has grown a fine plant for the beneficent work of caring for the sick and maimed.

Here in Quincy, as the fruit of some germinal thought, we have a hospital, ever open as a refuge to victims of disease or mishaps,—without prejudice by reason of race, religion or station. A basis surely broad enough for every heart with sympathy and generosity towards humanity at large.

One of the unique and lovable characters in all generations has been that "good old grandma or auntie" who, with instinct of Good Samaritan, hurried to the home where the tossing or bleeding sufferer lay. What comfort and blessing her experienced head and practised hand had provided for the patient, in the place of ignorant awkward and agitated service.

Notwithstanding the existence of many such heroines in society, the growth of communities demands the Hospital, where concentrated effort, trained skill, facilities, comforts and medical learning may be suitably applied. Quincy without a hospital would be cruel and out of line with cities the world over, and its citizens would lack a most important stimulus to that thoughtful concern for the unfortunate which should have a place in the heart of everyone.

If we are favored with comfortable homes let us not forget other abodes where there is not one solitary comfort or help for a sufferer.

The donor, contributors to endowment fund, physicians, trustees, Hospital Aid Association, nurses and friends of the Hospital, have thus far accomplished good beyond estimate, but the work is not done.

There is always something doing on the hill. Cast your thought, heart and help up there. On the little cots there are always some sufferers who are thinking of a land where there shall be no more pain. Let not commercial or social life dim our vision of duty and privilege. When considering the ultimate disposal of property, there are few more worthy objects for bequests than the Hospital. Don't forget it.

There may be debatable policies of management, and reported cases of dissatisfied patients, but the institution stands for the good of humanity.

Let our citizens come into closer touch with it and aid by their counsel, sympathy and means. An over-critical temper and forgetfulness of others' needs may make a bad combination lock on a heart or pocketbook. Our Hospital is our beneficiary; it may some day be our welcome benefactor.

A SOCIETY EVENT.

The Reception of Mrs. J. Henry Emery Largely Attended.

In response to cards sent out by Mrs. J. Henry Emery of Adams street, announcing that she would receive friends on Tuesday afternoon, October eighteenth, from three to five o'clock, there was a large and continuous stream of callers.

The house was beautifully decorated with large vases of cut flowers, roses and chrysanthemums predominating. Mrs. Emery received in the parlor. She wore an exquisite gown of gray crepe de chine. Miss Florence R. Emery, the daughter of the house, was gowned in a beautiful ecru gauze over blue.

In the dining room at an exquisitely appointed table, tea, chocolate and refreshments were served by daintily gowned young ladies, who also presided at the punch bowl in the hall. They were: Miss Emery, Miss Fay Hitchcock, Miss Sarah Whicher, Miss Alice Prescott, Miss Helen Claflin, Miss Grace Burke, Miss Jane Reed, Miss Helen Sibley, Mrs. Walter E. Burke, Mrs. Jesse I. Lichfield, Mrs. Harry E. Russell, Mrs. Arthur W. Hall and Mrs. Joseph Hall.

Mrs. Emery's intimate friends knew that the day was her birthday, and she received many congratulations. The gathering was also in the nature of a house-warming, as it was the first time since the Emerys moved into their beautiful house that they have entertained so many guests.

Several hundred were present not only from Quincy but from neighboring towns and Boston. It was a reunion of many old friends who do not meet as frequently as in days of yore as well as a social time for kindred spirits who meet often. It was a delightful occasion and opened most auspiciously the social season of 1904-05.

Collapsed at Terminal.

A story in a morning paper tells of a pathetic little drama of Essie Dyer, who with her husband it is alleged have been living in Quincy.

The story is that the husband lost his situation and the couple have been trying to find work in Boston. Last night while waiting for her husband at the Terminal she collapsed and was taken to the City Hospital. The cause of her illness is reported to be lack of proper food and proper nourishment. But little is known of the couple in Quincy.

TODAY'S COURT.

Harry Doucett was fined $3 for drunkenness and $10 for assault on Officer Lyons at Quincy.

Daniel Black was fined $3 for drunkenness at Quincy.

George Atherton was arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy. Case continued until Oct. 20.

Arthur G. Milton was fined $15, and Charles S. Flanders $5, for speeding automobiles at the Blue Hills reservation.

SMILE DEPARTED

Jury Finds Weinseimer Guilty of Extortion

HE GOT $2700 FROM FSSIG

Threatened to Tie Up Work on Apartment House Unless the Money Was Paid--Expected a Disagreement of Jury

New York, Oct. 19.—The jury in the case of Philip Weinseimer, former president of the Building Trades Alliance, on trial for extortion, returned a verdict of guilty shortly before midnight last night. He was at once remanded to the Tombs until Oct. 28, when sentence will be pronounced.

PHILIP WEINSEIMER.

Weinseimer has been on trial for more than a week in the court of special sessions. He was charged by George J. Essig, a master plumber, with extorting $2700 from him under a threat not to permit work to continue on the Chatsworth apartment house here unless the money was paid.

The jury retired late in the afternoon and after taking one ballot, went to supper and remained away from the court building nearly two hours.

The long wait after the jury's return had caused Weinseimer and his counsel to expect a disagreement or acquittal, and Weinseimer was smiling and eager when the jury entered the courtroom.

When the verdict was pronounced, Weinseimer trembled and grasped the railing to steady himself. His counsel said that he would at once appeal the case on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence.

Lou Dillon Has the Thumps

Memphis, Oct. 19.—C. K. G. Billings' Lou Dillon, the champion trotting mare, went down to defeat before Major Delmar, owned by E. E. Smathers, in the third and last contest for the Memphis gold cup. Veterinary surgeons pronounced the mare affected by an ailment known to horsemen as the "thumps." Smathers, representing the New York Driving club, becomes the permanent owner of the cup.

Grand Army Fair.

There was a large attendance Tuesday night at the Grand Army fair at the Coliseum, and the table were well patronized. There were quite a lot of young people present who participated in the dancing.

The entertainment consisted of an exhibition drill by the Boys' Brigade of Atlantic, and singing by the junior choir of St. Johns church.

Tonight the entertainment will be in charge of the Woman's Relief corps, who have arranged an interesting program.

Monday evening Henry H. Faxon was present and made the children happy by presenting them with tickets good for various sums at any of the tables. At his request the children assembled in the smaller hall, and the tickets were presented as they returned to the main hall, so that he made a thorough job of it, and 200 to 300 tickets were required. The fair thereby netted a large sum.

IN LARGE SENSE

Y. M. C. A. Work is Improvement Work.

Grand and Far Reaching Achievements.

Will Supply a Pressing Need in Quincy Says a Unitarian.

The title of the paper by Miss Elizabeth Johnson of Quincy avenue, East Braintree, presented at the Y. M. C. A. Auxiliary meeting on Monday afternoon of this week at the house of Mrs. C. T. Hardwick, was "Service, from a Unitarian point of view," Miss Johnson being a member of the Quincy Unitarian church.

The subject was treated in an informal way. The end in life which makes life best worth living, the speaker affirmed, is service—service to man, the child of God, and so to God Himself—the doing for others in ways small or great. The joys in service are many and sure. The joy that comes with the doing and in final achievement—in coming into touch with others who serve, and gaining friends through mutual interest in some good work—and the joy of putting one's self in line with the great hearted and great souled men and women who have worked and thought and suffered for others, in every age and every nation.

Various kinds of service were mentioned. Home service and that without the home, for country or community—and the increasing amount of such service rendered. Crime and injustice, war and industrial strife, mark this age, but it is also marked by a wide spread altruistic spirit and its active expression. Frequent contributions of thousands and millions of dollars in addition to countless smaller sums are given each year for religious and philanthropic enterprise, ($128,000,000 was the estimate of last year's benefactions.) While personal service equally valuable with financial service is rendered by an army of devoted men and women,—such militarism as even the Peace Conference must approve.

The scope and variety of modern charities suggested by a single number of the Charities Review, where there are items with regard to some 25 or 30 different philanthropic enterprises, most of them representing a number of organizations and each organization its own large number of workers and supporters.

Quincy people seem to have been absorbed in their own family and special church and charity interests, and Quincy can hardly be called educationally or philanthropically a really active community.

The present day spirit of altruism however, is making itself felt in Quincy as elsewhere. We are all digging deeper into things. Ideas of service are enlarging. Especially the connection between the home and the community recognized, and the fact that the welfare of the one is identified with the welfare of the other.

It is coming to be more and more clearly apprehended that no home, more than any man, can live to itself, and the busiest home mother and hardest worked father of a family can not afford to forget that the safety and health of his or her home are largely dependent on surrounding conditions.

Service for the community is often as much a matter of self interest as of public spirit. Bad sanitary conditions, an impure water supply, or Board of Health laws not enforced, may bring disease into the individual home, however well cared for. The general attractions or unsightliness of Quincy, the appearance of the railroad station, of the streets, public buildings, parks and their surroundings, must affect the aesthetic and money value of the home, property and business of the individual, the pleasure and comfort of his every day life—and whatever his home conditions and the educational and other advantages given his family, the atmosphere of his home, the characters and careers of his children must eventually and inevitably be influenced by the physical, intellectual and spiritual elevation, or degradation, of the people in this community.

Conditions in Quincy are peculiarly favorable for community improvement. It is in a transition state, its outward appearance, the make-up of its population, its institutions, educational and philanthropic, are in the formative period. It is for present day citizens of Quincy to determine its future—satisfactory or the reverse.

Y. M. C. A. work in Quincy would, Miss Johnson felt, be Quincy improvement work in the large sense—although bearing a denominational name—and she was glad of the opportunity to say a good word in its favor and to wish it God speed. While not familiar with it in detail she knew in general of its grand and far-reaching achievements in the regeneration of young manhood, and felt that work of this kind, with the facilities for recreation, physical development and special education to be provided, would supply a pressing need in Quincy.

After an appreciation, at some length, of the very important share in the good work of the world today played by women, an earnest plea for systematic training for religious and philanthropic service, and for the training of young in doing for others and sharing with the older people the burdens of church and charitable work, the speaker propounded the following "Unitarian Heresies"—with which, however, the audience tho' for the most part non-Unitarian, seemed in sympathy.

Charles Wagner, the great French preacher, writer and reformer, while in Boston recently to take part in the Peace Conference, spoke on one of his favorite themes, "la Concentration Humaine"—eloquently advocating the concentration of all humanitarian effort. With so much to be done for the regeneration of the world, "Trusts" or "Corners" in good work could alone make headway against the powerful and wide spread forces of evil.

While not a Unitarian, when he said, "I would have all creeds and professions work along their own lines in accordance with their own doctrines and even their own prejudices, (if must be) but to a common end," he stated one of the cardinal points of Unitarian belief. Unitarians believe that God speaks in many languages. No individual should dare assume that he speaks but in one, and that the language be (the individual) knows.

And so there are many ways of serving God, and it is presumption to assume that our way of service is the only one or the most acceptable. All who serve should be honored, if their service is in the right spirit, and while working each for his own church at the same time, religious workers of every denomination should stand and work together for the general good—presenting a united front to oppose evil conditions and influences.

Unitarians also believe the old issue between Faith and Works to be dead—works taken in the Unitarian sense—not one or two good acts performed in a spirit of ostentation or to make up for wrong ones committed, but the everyday life and conduct. If this be righteous it implies a genuinely religious and spiritualizing faith as the impelling force within. Works in this sense can not exist without faith. The immoral and unspiritual man can not, and will not, live this kind of a life.

Some people strengthen their faith and their works increase. Others begin at the other end with works and through those their faith increases. "Service" in its large sense, from the point of view from which the present paper had been written, necessarily implies both the sustaining and impelling faith and the active works.

Miss Johnson closed with a few words as to the Unitarian definition of the word "Christian."

"We believe that those may bear the name of Christian who are followers of Christ—not merely those who agree upon some special form of belief as to His nature. As Paul said, "great is the mystery of Godliness"—and although we each may hold our own cherished beliefs and hopes with reference to it, "the mystery of Godliness" must remain a mystery for us all, until perhaps it is permitted to understand more of it in another world.

Jesus Himself said, "he who does my will shall know of the doctrine." You see He put the following Him, the doing His will, the service in His name, as the first step toward the attainment of religious truth.

We can all take at least this first step together—if we will. Here indeed, in Christian service, is the common ground where all religious people without disloyalty to their own religious denomination may meet—if they will. Here we of the Unitarian faith feel we may stand with you of the so-called Evangelical bodies as followers of Christ, as "christians"—believing Him to be in the words of our great spiritual leader, Theodore Parker, "the life, the truth, the way."

May we not, shall we not, work earnestly through our chosen churches with their forms of worship—which we have chosen as to us the most helpful—and yet hold ourselves ready, nay eager, to give proof of our larger religious outlook,—not as Episcopalians, Catholics, Orthodox, Unitarians,—but as Christians, by joining in Christian service?

Wards One and Three lead in gain over Nov., 1903, each having 60 more voters. Ward Five came next and Wards Two and Six followed. The smallest gain was in Ward Four.

The bride was most daintily gowned in white muslin, with lace insertion. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and maiden hair fern. There were many beautiful presents, including silver ware, cut glass, and pictures.

Mr. and Mrs. Wellington left for an extended trip to Washington, and the south, and will be at home at their future residence on Prospect avenue, after December twelfth.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

Success to the movement to revive the Quincy Historical Society. In a city like Quincy with national renown for its part in Revolutionary times and the country's early history, there is a great field for a wide awake society.

The appeal in yesterday's Ledger in behalf of the Quincy Hospital was an admirable one, and should be productive of great good at the meeting of the corporators of the Hospital at Colonial hall tomorrow evening. Subscriptions are needed annually if Quincy desires a hospital, and it certainly does.

Now is the time to prepare papers placing candidates in nomination for Councilmen and for ward committeemen. Duly prepared blanks must be used, but only five names are required for Councilmen from ward or for Ward Committee. For Councilmen-at-large thirty names are required. It is well to secure a few more names than specified. All voters should interest themselves in making nominations for the caucuses. If there are three or more candidates for each position so much the better, the voters will then have a chance to make a choice.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ Hardly any class of animals suffer so much from ignorance, carelessness and cruelty on the part of drivers as the horse. Many of the people who hire horses know nothing about driving or caring for them; many others, since they do not own the horse, care nothing about any injury to him provided they do not have to pay for it, and still another class takes pleasure in driving him at the top of his speed as long as he can go, regardless of his distress. Then there are the drunken drivers, reckless of everything, the drivers who want to race with everybody who comes along, and the people who are for a "good time," and whose idea is to "let 'er go." There are the people who over drive, who do not water, who water when the horse is overheated, who do not blanket, and others who commit all remaining kinds of offences against horse-flesh—the one idea being that since the horse is not their own it don't make much difference. The only remedy is to educate public opinion up to the point where people will treat horses well for horses' sakes, and see to it that others do so also.—Our Dumb Animals.

☞ War is the argument of the savage. Once justify it, and we justify the results of it.

Once accept it as a proper policy and we no longer have the right to do anything but applaud the oppression, the slaughter, the poverty, the seizure of territory, the outrage of women, the murder of babes and the general "hell" which a state of war always brings to pass.

War's central idea is that might makes right; hence it follows, logically, that whatever a nation is able to do becomes right when it has done it.

What an outrage upon human intelligence!

There is only one way to settle any dispute, national or individual; that way is the moral way.

The question to be answered every day by every nation and by every man and woman is not, "What am I powerful enough to do?" but "What is it fair for me to do?"

Against the miserable sophistries of the human clods whom accident has placed upon the thrones of the world we put the Sermon on the Mount.

Let us all thank God that though man may deny the moral law he never can abolish it.

Only the right can possibly win, at the last, despite all the carnage that may redden the soil of earth.

Let us take courage, therefore, and go on.—Fibre and Fabric.

"SWELL DRESSERS"

Kind of Men Wanted In Alleged Colonization Scheme

POLITICIANS ARRAIGNED

Man Said to Have Worked Up the Job Testifies Against Van Cott, Candidate For New York Assembly, and His Friend

New York, Oct. 20.—Richard Van Cott, son of the postmaster of New York and Republican candidate for the assembly in the Fifth district, and Bankson McAvoy, cashier in the general postoffice and a Republican worker in that district, were arraigned before Justice Wyatt on a charge of having colonized in the district non-resident citizens, with the purpose of their registering and voting at the coming election.

Benjamin D. Levy, who is said to have made a confession relative to the case, was a witness in the proceedings. He was an employe in the New York postoffice for several years and testified that, in pursuance of an agreement entered into with McAvoy, he had a conversation with VanCott in a private office in the general postoffice in which he referred to McAvoy's having asked him to get "seven or eight boys." VanCott, he said, told him to meet him again. Later, at McAvoy's request, he testified, he got seven men from the Mills hotel. Levy picked out three men in the courtroom as having been engaged by him at the hotel. These men, it was stated, have made affidavits corroborating Levy's statement.

He then said he went with McAvoy to several houses and claimed McAvoy rented rooms for several of the men. Soon after he met McAvoy and VanCott in a political club and complained to the latter that McAvoy had not treated him right because he spoke of having wanted 100 men and he had provided rooms for only seven. VanCott, he declared, replied that he had a list of 15 rooms and he wanted them filled. VanCott instructed him to see him again and at their next meeting Levy said he told VanCott he had 100 men in a nearby park.

Slips bearing the addresses of houses where the men were alleged to have been lodged were identified by Levy as papers given him by VanCott, and were put in evidence. He and another man, Ralph Jones, at once placed 13 men in houses, he testified, and subsequently he was paid by Jones for his share of the work. Soon after this VanCott and McAvoy told him they washed their hands of him.

Levy said that the bargain made between him and McAvoy about procuring men was: "One dollar for registration, six weeks' board and a couple of dollars for the vote on election day." He also said that he was directed by Jones to get "swell dressers." This, he said, he did, but the bargain remained the same. The examination was adjourned until next Monday, with Levy still on the stand.

Parker's "Connecticut Day"

New York, Oct. 20.—Judge Parker was the guest of honor last night at a dinner given by State Senator Dowling at the Democratic club. The candidate considered the prospects of the Democratic party in Connecticut and went over the various reports he has received concerning the canvass in that state.

IN AMENDED FORM

New Remarriage Canon Appears In Episcopal Convention

Boston, Oct. 20.—An attempt was made by the committees on canons of the Episcopal house of deputies to arrange a compromise between that body and the house of bishops. The bishops had adopted an amendment forbidding the remarriage of divorced persons, while the deputies had declined to adopt so rigid a provision, notwithstanding the fact that a majority of them took a stand similar to that of the house of bishops.

The committee on canons finally offered a resolution compelling divorced persons seeking remarriage to wait one year after the decree of the court has been issued before the solemnization of the ceremony. By this resolution, which referred to the innocent person in a divorce for infidelity only, it was hoped to arrange an agreement, at least temporary, between the two forces. After some debate, the divorce issue was made a special order for later consideration.

Will Strictly Enforce Law

Boston, Oct. 20.—Steps are to be taken immediately by the Boston police board to prosecute all parties, other than those under bail, who in any way failed to obey the laws and ordinances in connection with the handling of the dynamite which caused the Melrose explosion. Judge Emmons has instructed the counsel of the board to apply at the municipal court for summonses for everybody who his investigations have led him to believe is guilty of not obeying the laws relative to the transportation of explosives.

All hallows eve a week from next Monday.

Republican rally tomorrow night at Quincy Music hall.

How did you like the views of Candidate McAnarney on city affairs?

C. H. Tower's residence looks about right in its new coat of paint.

The State election this year comes on the latest possible date in November.

The afternoons will reach their shortest Dec. 2, six weeks from Friday.

Chubbuck street is being torn up once more. Sewer pipes are to be laid.

Tomorrow afternoon the Revere High football team will be here to play Quincy High.

It is always a treat to attend the lectures of Mr. Leon H. Vincent, and that is why he has good audiences in Quincy.

Registration for the State election has closed and Quincy for the first time in its history has over 5100 voters. We are growing.

The condition of the fence on South street near the Fore River house is growing steadily worse instead of better. The pickets are mysteriously disappearing.

Foot Ball and Flag Rush.

Charles H. Clare of this city is manager of the sophomore foot ball team at Tufts college. The annual class foot ball game and flag rush will take place on Saturday afternoon of this week. The efforts of the sophomores to gain possession of the flags before the rush and the methods which the freshmen employ to get them safe on to the hill, have always caused considerable excitement. The night before, however will be robbed of none of its interest, and members of both classes will probably be patroling the hill all night.

A PIRATE AMONG PLANTS.

Wild Fig of Mexico Choked to Death the Peaceful Palm.

Among all the forms of vegetable life in the Mexican tropics the wild fig trees are the most remarkable. Some of them show such apparent intelligence in their readiness to meet emergencies that it is difficult not to credit them with powers of volition.

In the tropics, where the wild figs flourish, there is a constant struggle for life among numberless species of plants. Certain of the wild figs appear to have learned this and provide a fruit which is a favorite food for many birds. Then an occasional seed is dropped by a bird where it finds lodgment in the axil of a palm frond high in the air.

There the seed takes root and is nourished by the little accumulation of dust and vegetable matter. It sends forth an aerial root, which creeps down the palm, sometimes coiling about the trunk on its way. When this slender, cordlike rootlet reaches the ground it secures foothold and becomes the future trunk of the fig tree.

After the descending rootlet has secured itself in the ground a branch bearing a few leaves springs from the seed in the palm top, and a vigorous growth begins. Then the fig gradually enlarges and incloses the supporting palm trunk until the latter is completely shut in the heart of its foster child and eventually strangled.—Geographic Magazine.

QUINCY MUSIC HALL.

The Location is the best of any hall in the city. The street cars pass the door with a turnout right in front of the Hall.

The Floor is of selected maple laid with the greatest care, and is kept in perfect condition, being covered with canvas when not used for dancing.

The Ventilation—a most important consideration—is such as to keep the air pure with even a crowded hall and without causing any drafts.

The Hall is Lighted by electricity, brilliantly and pleasantly, and with a switchboard arranged so that all desired effects can be obtained in the Hall proper or on the stage. Gas is used as an auxiliary light.

The Heating is direct—indirect, ample, and giving the most healthful results.

The Stage has been designed with care, and is furnished with a particularly generous supply of attractive and appropriate scenery.

For Advertising, the Music Hall Billboards throughout the City are of very great value.

To Darken the Hall, there are special window fittings so that at noonday the Hall can be made as dark as at midnight.

In case of fire there are pails of water and chemical fire extinguishers throughout the Hall. There is an asbestos fire curtain by which the Stage can be instantly cut off from the Hall proper. There are nine (9) doors opening from the Hall and five (5) separate exits.

As a whole, Quincy Music Hall has been carefully planned to meet the requirements of those who wish a large and really first class Hall.

GET NEEDED REST

Both Armies Have Suspended Fighting In Manchuria

BAD WEATHER PREVAILS

Resumption of Conflict Unlikely Until Roads Become Passable --Long Battle Goes Into History as a Russian Defeat--Revival of Rumors of Deal Between Czar and the Kaiser

St. Petersburg, Oct. 20.—For the moment heavy rains and impassable roads have compelled a suspension of operations in Manchuria. There was practically no fighting yesterday and none whatever last night.

There is evidence of a new disposition of the forces on both sides. General Kuropatkin is extending his right, whether with a view to a turning movement for the safety of Lone Tree hill, the importance of which point is fully realized by the Japanese, who have attempted to retake it in two night attacks, or whether to meet and thwart a Japanese turning movement from the west, has not yet developed. The Japanese also appear to be shifting weight to the westward.

Veiled hints continue to arrive that the Russians have recovered from the blow inflicted last week by Field Marshal Oyama, and that Kuropatkin is preparing to renew the struggle as soon as the roads become dry. Two press dispatches from Mukden mention reports that the Japanese already are preparing to retire and the war office admits that Kuropatkin's left has again moved sughtly forward, but there is no light upon the movements of the Japanese. There is, indeed, an utter lack of late news from Tokio, and an enemy so resourceful may really be preparing a surprise movement instead of a retreat, relieving the pressure on the front with a view to accomplishing something on the flank.

Many critics here continue to believe that Kuropatkin intends to return to the line of the Hun river.

The enforced cessation of operations by the bad weather, if the Japanese offensive has really exhausted itself, gives both armies a chance to breathe and pull themselves together, and would seem to ensure as much benefit to one side as to the other. When operations recommence they will assume an entirely new phase, with new dispositions and objectives. Practically last week's battle has ended and it goes into history as a Russian defeat. When operations are resumed a new battle will begin.

A Tokio dispatch states that the Japanese government will seek to make representations to St. Petersburg through the American embassy against the alleged use of Chinese uniforms by Russian troops, in violation of the usuages of war.

The reappearance of Viceroy Alexieff at Mukden yesterday for a conference is not particularly reassuring, as such conferences in the past have not been fruitful of success.

The movement of troops on the Russian western frontier and the preparations to further reduce garrisons in this region revive talk of a complete understanding with Germany, under which the frontier will be protected so as to permit of the dispatch to Manchuria of troops stationed in Poland. There are about 600,000 soldiers in Poland, comprising some of the best troops in the empire.

In the best informed diplomatic circles it is believed that nothing in the shape of a treaty between Russia and Germany has been committed to writing, but that there is a simply personal understanding between the two sovereigns covering this point and, some believe, going much further.

So far as the present war is concerned there is no evidence that the supposed agreement covers active aid, as such an agreement would render operative the Anglo-Japanese alliance. It is thought, however, in diplomatic quarters, that there is something in the nature of a pledge on the part of the Emperor of Germany to protect Russia's western frontier. It is now recalled as significant of the deep personal friendship of the two emperors that when Emperor William was about to undergo an operation last year he commended his eldest son to the hands of Emperor Nicholas. This fact was mentioned at the time in The Official Messenger, but did not attract as much attention as it is now receiving.

TO COVER RETREAT

British Experts' Opinion of Kuropatkin's Action

London, Oct. 20.—English newspapers and military critics find it difficult to apportion the exact strategic significance attaching to General Kuropatkin's action on the Shahke river. It is supposed his success here was due to having kept three divisions of troops in reserve, and it is admitted that the attack on Lone Tree hill may have been an intentional counter stroke after drawing out the Japanese from strong positions.

The balance of opinion, however, favors the idea that it was a desperate endeavor to cover the retreat of his forces from the Benshu district, and that the battle of Shakhe may be considered to have ended in a victory, but not a decisive one, for the Japanese, who were too exhausted to follow up their success.

Special dispatches from St. Petersburg make mention of a crushing defeat of two Japanese divisions. There is no confirmation, however, in any reliable quarter, of such a report.

According to The Standard's correspondent with General Kuroki, who telegraphs under date of Oct. 18, a Russian battalion which crossed the Taitse river has been almost annihilated. While retiring over a pontoon bridge, the correspondent says, the battalion was overtaken by a regiment of Japanese cavalry, which got its machine guns into position and swept the bridge from end to end.

Enough Jews In America

New York, Oct. 20.—Israel Zangwill, the author and playwright, accompanied by his bride, arrived here last night on the Teutonic from Liverpool. He said: "I want to enlist the sympathy of the leading Jews of America in the Zionist movement. We must stem the tide of Jewish immigration that is pouring into this country and the Jews must have a place in which to locate. America is already saturated. If many more Jews come here an anti-Semitic feeling may be aroused."

Funeral of King of Saxony

Dresden, Oct. 20.—With cannon booming and with volleys of musketry and in the presence of Emperor William, King Frederick August, Archduke Franz Ferdinand and other royal personages, courtiers and dignitaries, the catafalque bearing the remains of the late King George of Saoxny was last night lowered into the vault of the Catholic court church. When the casket was no longer visible a mighty choir brust forth with the "Salve Regina."

Display of Good Judgment

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 20.—An audience that crowded the Bastable theatre to the doors sat through a performance last night unconscious of the fact that half the city's fire department was fighting what promised to be a stubborn blaze in an office in the same building, two floors above. Eighty policemen and a large detail of firemen were hidden beyond curtains and doors and in the wings ready to stop any panic that might develop.

Terrible Fall of Two Women

New York, Oct. 20.—Tripping on a stair landing by the French heel of her slipper, Mrs. Emma Latassa fell over a fifth-story balustrade in an apartment house here last night and was instantly killed. Mrs. Latassa and Mrs. Osa Gauvey were walking arm-in-arm in the hall and when the former fell she carried her companion with her. Mrs. Gauvey suffered injuries from which it is believed she will die.

No Policy Writing In Chicago

Chicago, Oct. 20.—One notable achievement, the suppression of policy, is recorded in the annual report made to the Citizens' association. Progress also is said to have been made in the efforts to improve the efficiency of the police department and to secure the punishment of bookmakers. When the association began its efforts in May, 1903, there were about 1500 policy writers operating in the city.

Begging For Church Endorsed

Middletown, N. Y., Oct. 20.—Rev. Dr. Daniel Russell, in an address before the Presbyterian synod here, said the Presbyterians would do well to follow the lead of the Methodists in collecting funds for church purposes. Secretary Taft Will Visit Panama and See Authorities

THE CANAL ZONE DISPUTE

Independent Colony Is Not Our Purpose--Rights Given Us by Treaty to Be Exercised With Honor--Roosevelt's Orders

Washington, Oct. 20.—A letter has been sent by the president to Secretary of War Taft, after a conference with the secretary of state and the secretary of war with respect to the conditions in Panama. It says in part:

"By executive order of May 9, 1904, I placed under your immediate supervision the work of the isthmian canal commission. There is ground for believing that in the execution of the rights conferred by the treaty the people of Panama have been unduly alarmed at the effect of the establishment of a government in the canal strip by the commission.

"The United States is about to confer upon the people of the State of Panama a very great benefit by the expenditure of millions of dollars in the construction of the canal. But this fact must not blind us to the importance of so exercising the authority given us by the treaty with Panama as to avoid creating any suspicion, however unfounded, of our intentions of establishing an independent colony in the middle of the State of Panama, or of exercising any greater governmental functions than are necessary to enable us to conveniently and safely construct, maintain and operate the canal, under the rights given us by the treaty. Least of all do we desire to interfere with the business and prosperity of the people of Panama.

"It is of the utmost importance that those who are ultimately responsible for the policy pursued should have at first hand as trustworthy information as can be obtained in respect to the conditions existing in Panama and the attitude and real interest of the people of that state. I have concluded that it will be of great advantage if you can visit the Isthmus of Panama in person and hold a conference with the president and other governmental authorities of the republic of Panama. You are authorized in doing this to take with you such persons as you desire, familiar with the conditions in the isthmus, who may aid you with their counsel.

"You will advise the president of the republic what the policy of this government is to be and assure him that it is not the purpose of the United States to take advantage of the rights conferred upon it by the treaty to interfere with the welfare and prosperity of the State of Panama, or of the cities of Colon and Panama. You will make due report of the result of your visit on your return."

While definite arrangements have not yet been made for Secretary Taft's trip, it is his purpose to go to Panama on the army transport Sumner from New York. Secretary Taft is authorized by the president to take with him whomever he pleases in connection with the work at hand and, while the personnel of the party has not yet been arranged, it is certain to be a large one.

Representing Panama will be Minister Obaldia. Admiral Walker will go as a representative of the canal commission. Judge Magoon, the law officer of the commission, and of the bureau of insular affairs, also will be of the party. The members of the senate and house committees dealing with isthmian affairs will be invited, and the entire trip, it is expected, can be made inside of a month.

One reason why Secretary Taft desires the committee's attendance is because he feels that, as they must legislate for the next 10 years concerning the canal strip, they will be better qualified for this important work by a personal knowledge of conditions on the isthmus. The American minister to Panama is expected to precede the party on the Sumner and make all necessary preparations for a becoming reception.

There were rumors immediately on the publication of the president's letter to the effect that Taft's trip was caused by friction between the three controlling elements on the isthmus, the Panama government, the American minister and the canal commission, but Taft explicitly denied this.

CARNEGIE HERO MEDALS

There Will Be No Distribution Before Next January

Pittsburg, Oct. 20.—At a meeting here of the Carnegie hero fund commission, it was decided that no awards of medals or benefits will be made by the Carnegie hero fund commission before the next meeting of the commission, which has been fixed for Jan. 18, 1905. The report of the organization committee follows:

"The scope of the fund shall be confined within the following limitations:

"First—To acts on which conclusive evidence may be obtained showing that the person performing the act voluntarily risked his own life in saving or attempting to save the life of a fellow-being, or who voluntarily has sacrificed himself in an heroic manner for the benefit of others.

"Second—Such acts must have been performed by persons, the nature of whose duties in following their regular vocation does not necessarily require them to perform such acts.

"Third—Such acts must have been performed in the United States of America, the Dominion of Canada, the colony of Newfoundland and the waters thereof.

"Fourth—Such acts must have been perrformed on or after April 15, 1904.

"Fifth—Heroic acts may be brought to the attention of the commission by direct application or through the public press."

"Civil Conscience" Criticised

Rome, Oct. 20.—The Socialist party last night published a controversial manifesto to the electors, combatting the program set forth by the government yesterday. The manifesto says the government was compelled to decide upon a general election owing to the situation brought about by the recent general strike in Italy, which, the manifesto adds, "was a marvelous exhibition of humanitarian and proletarian solidarity, and a sure index that the civil conscience was ripe for a strike."

Bad Sanitary Conditions In Cuba

Havana, Oct. 20.—The minority members of the senate special committee on the question of resumption of government aid for the sanitation of cities yesterday submitted a bill appropriating $2,000,000 for that purpose. The majority of the committee opposed the granting of so much assistance. The sanitary conditions of the cities in eastern Cuba are becoming worse.

Labor Scarce In Louisiana

New Orleans, Oct. 20.—A great scarcity of labor exists in Louisiana and the effect is being felt not only on the planfations, but on extensive levee work now in progress. On the steamer Liguria, about to arrive, are expected 1500 Italian immigrants. Agents of the planters have come to make terms with them as soon as they leave the ship.

Lipton Wants Another Race

London, Oct. 20.—Sir Thomas Lipton says that it is incorrect to assume that he has abandoned the idea of challenging for the America's cup. He has, he said, faced great difficulties in securing a designer, but he has not given up. He has given George L. Watson carte blanche in the matter of securing a boat and is still hopeful of success.

The Fort Banks Accident

Washington, Oct. 20.—The war department has appointed Colonel Ennis, Major Weaver and Major Greble, all of the artillery corps, as a board of officers to meet at Fort Banks, Mass., to report on the cause of the accident at mortar practice at that post, in which three men were killed.

NOTES ABOUT TOWN.

The Misses Lewis of Bridgewater are visiting Mrs. James Lewis of Farrington street.

A whist party was held Wednesday evening at the old Masonic hall by the Order of the Eastern Star.

A reunion of the Swedish Lutheran Young People's society will be held this evening at the church on Granite street.

The loving cup and the prize cue to be voted upon at the fair of the Wollaston Yacht club next week are on exhibition at Copeland's pharmacy.

Miss Bertha Trepanier returns today from New York where she went to attend the marriage of Mrs. Florentine Rizzie, which took place in that city Oct. 19.

An opportunity will be offered at the W. Y. C. fair to get a gas engine of two and one horse power for your motor boat for little money. It is a two cycle engine.

Mr. and Mrs. Jessie F. Curtis celebrated the eighteenth anniversary of their marriage in quite an informal manner at their home on Miller Stile road on Wednesday,

Dr. C. A. Evald of Chicago will lecture at the Swedish Lutheran church Friday evening. Dr. Evald is one of the leading clergymen of the Lutheran church in this country.

Congressman Lawrence is in great demand during this campaign and will be unable to speak at the Quincy rally, but his place will be taken by Guy A. Ham, Esq., of Boston.

Mr. Parlin's talk at the Young People's Religous Union at Wollaston Sunday evening was listened to with much pleasure and profit by all present. His subject was "What I would do if I were a boy."

Joseph F. O'Connell of Dorchester, who contested with the Hon. William S. McNary in the recent primaries for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 10th district, has addressed a letter to his successful competitor, promising him his unqualified support at the polls.

Maple lodge, K. and L. of H., at its regular meeting in Wilson's hall Wednesday evening entertained D. D. Nellie E. Hallett of Charlestown, S. D. D. Viles of Boston, and members of Waverly lodge, Charlestown. A fine collation was served at the close of the meeting. One application was received.

All the gravel teams that cart dirt from the hill off Faxon road to the Atlantic boulevard, have been restricted to travel on Walker street only. The cutting up of all streets for that purpose was considered unnessary, and as Walker street laid no claims to excellence, it was selected to bear the burden of travel. A policeman is stationed near by to see that this new rule is not violated. Later probably Walker street will be resurfaced.

WHY WITHDRAW?

Mr. McAnarney is Wanted as a Candidate Against Machine.

A very meaty interview with views I can heartily endorse, were the comments of a City Square business man on the position of Lawyer McAnarney in Wednesday's Ledger, but, he added, Mr. McAnarney makes one great mistake. He assumes because the Republican City Committee do not want him as a candidate, that he should retire. Why so accommodating? It should not be necessary for a candidate at a caucus to have the endorsement of the City Committee. And the committee should not require that a candidate at a caucus shall make promises either to appoint or remove certain officials.

It is for the Republican City Committee to carry out the wishes of the Republicans of the city. Their work for candidates comes after the nominations, and it should be their duty to work for the election of the Republican nominees.

The same gentleman informs the Ledger that the committee leaders have declared that they will withhold support from Mr. McAnarney unless he will promise to reappoint Charles F. Knowlton, if elected, as Commissioner of Public Works.

Several Republicans have expressed the hope that Mr. McAnarney will consent to become a candidate in the caucus without the endorsement of the Republican committee. They would like to make an issue on that point, and are sanguine of success.

It has come to a pretty pass, they say, when the Commissioner of Public Works shall dictate whom we shall nominate for Mayor, for City Auditor, and for other offices. It is for these reasons a change seems very desirable, and all that Mr. McAnarney says relative to the Department of Public Works is to the point.

Another reason why Quincy needs a Board of Commissioners of Public Works is because the City Council shirks its duty. The Council should determine where water extensions should be made, but it delegates this duty to the Commissioner of Public Works. It should not be for one man to determine where extensions shall be made, larger pipes laid, etc.

Mr. McAnarney's idea to reduce the number of Councilmen does not meet with favor. Quincy has only one legislative body and it should be a representative one. His idea, however, to reduce the ward representation and increase the number elected at-large, is a good one, and also his suggestion of fewer meetings.

The election of two Councilmen from ward, and eleven at-large would leave the number as at present, and might result beneficially to the city.

It is evident, says a large taxpayer, that Mr. McAnarney does not desire to be Mayor of Quincy because of the patronage, for he recommends permanent heads for the Police department and the Fire department. I am also pleased with his views relative to economy.

BAXTER IN FIELD.

His Papers for Representative Filed at State House Today.

Arthur E. Baxter filed at the State House today nomination papers signed by the required number of voters of the city giving him an independent nomination for Representative to the General Court.

The district elects two and there are now seven candidates in the field. Tomorrow is the last day for filing nomination papers for State election candidates.

Drinkwater Declines.

Representative Horace R. Drinkwater of Braintree has declined the nomination for senator in this district, which was tendered to him unanimously by the Democrats.

The committee have selected Frank Farrell of Hyde Park as the candidate of the party in place of Mr. Drinkwater.

Home Missionary Convention.

The twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Associa- will be held in the Park street church, Boston, next Wednesday. Among the speakers will be President Hazard of Wellesley Colledge, President Charles Cuthbert Hall of Union Theological Seminary, Miss L. D. White, Mrs. A. G. West, and two former presidents of the association, Mrs. J. W. Danielson and Mrs. C. L. Goodell. A reception will be held at the noon hour, followed by a basket luncheon, at which tea and coffee will be served as usual.

A reply has been received by the Daily Ledger to the question—"Is it an honest statement?"—relative to Y. M. C. A., which appeared in Mondays Ledger. It is a signed letter about a column in length and will appear in the Ledger tomorrow.

The barn of David Ford at North Weymouth was destroyed by fire early Wednesday evening. Loss $600.

A RICH PROGRAM.

For the Annual Convention of Norfolk County Teachers.

The Norfolk County Teachers' convention will be held Friday, Nov. 4, in the Rogers building, Boston. T. B. Pollard of the Washington school, Quincy, is the president.

The morning session will open at 8.30 with devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Leon H. Austin of Quincy with singing by the teachers under the direction of Samuel M. Cole, director of music at Brookline and Dedham, with Miss Edith H. Snow, supervisor of music at Brookline as accompanist.

Appointment of committees will follow and at 9.45 Miss Julia Richman, district superintendent of schools, New York City, will speak on "The practical value of parents meetings in connection with school work."

At 10.30 department meetings will be held. The elementary school section at Huntington hall and the High school section at room 26, Rogers building.

This will be followed by a discussion to be opened by Professor Arlo Bates of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. There will also be an address by Dr. William Gallagher of Thayer Academy on "The teacher as an ethical factor in school life." A discussion will follow.

The afternoon session will open at 2 o'clock. The program for this meeting includes singing by Weber Male quartette, report of committees, election of officers, an address on "Trade, art and profession" by George H. Martin, secretary of the State Board of Education, and on "The rich teacher," by Dr. C. Hanford Henderson of Marienfeld.

HAVE YOU A HOBBY?

An Especial Fad Is Said to Be Good For Mind and Body.

The best thing in the world for nerves is sleep, the next proper food, the third proper dress. But as good as any one of these is a hobby.

How often does one hear the expression, "Oh, that is So-and-So's hobby," spoken rather disparagingly. It is the tendency of the average mind to regard a person who has a pronounced enthusiasm as a species of harmless lunatic rather to be pitied. The truth of the matter is that any one who has any especial fad is greatly to be envied, as it probably provides more interest and amusement for its possessor than anything else. Any decided interest in life, whether it is dignified by the name of an occupation or is simply an enthusiasm or even mentioned slightingly as a fad, is eminently desirable.

"I have never seen a genuine collector that is not happy when he is allowed by circumstances to gratify his tastes," remarked a student of human nature, "and a bent in that direction should always be encouraged. It is a curious phase of our humanity that we will work diligently to make provision for our material needs when we are old and quite neglect to store up mental resources that will interest and amuse us until we are called hence."

Hobbies help one to forget sorrow and give us pleasure in the present. They are among the best things in life—promoters of health, peace and happiness.—Detroit News-Tribune.

BOTH ARTISTS.

But Sculptor Kitson is Also a Good Detective.

Samuel J. Kitson, the Quincy sculptor was the victim of one of the light fingered gentry on an elevated train one night recently, but succeeded in capturing the fellow and turning him over to an officer. A morning paper in recounting the affair says:

They met in an elevated train the other night; both were artists, both had a trained hand and a delicate touch that had earned for them large sums of money and played upon the emotions of the public with their skill.

Both were strangers, however. One did not know, as he was jostled against the other in the crowd, the man had the temperament of a true artist in his finger tips, that his work had visibly affected many. Neither did the other realize, as he bumped against this man, that his nimble and skilled fingers were also clever, that at their touch flabby masses of clay were wrought into almos. speaking likenesses of the human formst

But the sculptor soon realized the other man was also an expert with his fingers, for he caught him picking his pocket. Then the sculptor had the other artist arrested. Samuel J. Kitson is the sculptor and George Moore the other artist. As a result of the meeting of these artists, one lost a purse and the other four months of liberty, being sentenced to the house of correction yesterday.

Former Resident Missing.

Harry Messer, who mysteriously disappeared from the New England house, Boston, since Oct. 10 and whom diligent search has failed to locate, lived in Quincy at one time. Shortly after his marriage to Zetta E. Moody of Stoneham he moved to Quincy locating at Norfolk Downs.

He resided in Quincy until after the death of his wife Nov. 28, 1900, since which time he has been knocking around as a travelling man.

Messer is a man of 35 years of age, about 5 feet 10 or 11 inches tall, rather spare in build, would weigh about 145 to 150 pounds. His complexion is of the pronounced blond type; hair sandy, with light and rather thin mustache which he was in the habit of wearing with the ends twisted upward. He had an abrupt style of speaking, which gave the impression of some impediment in his speech, although he did not stammer, but he had a habit of talking through the side of his mouth.

His customary dress was a dark business sack suit with square cornered short coat. The police had information that Messer had said prior to his disappearance that he would go and jump off the docks; but this was not the testimony of the hotel people or of his friends. He was well supplied with railroad passes.

Subject to Fainting.

Friends of Hugh Quinn, the man found dead in the woods off South street, on Wednesday, were in town this morning and arranged to have the body removed to East Boston for burial. His friends while admitting that he was a drinking man, do not think that his death was due to alcoholism. They say that he served all through the Spanish war and while stationed at Porto Rico contracted malaria and had to be sent to New York. He remained in a hospital there seven months. The malaria brought on a weakness of the heart and he was subject to fainting spells. He has been known to drop suddenly and remain unconscious for some time when he had an attack of his trouble, and had been told by physicians that he would die suddenly that way sometime. His friends therefore believe that he had an attack of malaria Tuesday night, which with his weak heart caused his death.

Art and Mystery.

The second entertainment in the Brotherhood course at Bethany chapel on Wednesday evening came up to expectations. As a crayon artist George C. Darling has few equals. His caricatures were quickly sketched and faithful representations. He converted a demijohn into an Irishman, a beer mug into a German, and made other lightning changes and evolutions. He was also clever as a modeler in clay, and he recited poems and told stories which made his part replete with interest.

Bennett Springer pleased and mystified with his magic and sleight of hand tricks. Several boys in the audience assisted him, but were unable to catch on to his methods. There was a large attendance.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition.

CHAPTER XIV—(Continued).

With that this woman, who had been perchance drinking too much beer for her head, though she was well used to it, burst into a storm of tears and sprang to her feet and cried out in a wild voice like a furious cat's: "Up with ye, I say! And why do ye stop and parley? And why do ye wait for my Lord Culpeper to sail? I trow the women be not afraid of the governor, if the men be! Up with ye, and this very night cut down the young tobacco plants and cheat the king of England, who reigns but to rob his subjects. Who cares for the governor of Virginia? Who cares for the king? Up with ye, I say!"

With that she snatched a sword from a peg on the wall and swung it in a circle of flame around her head, and what with her glowing eyes and streaming black locks and burning beauty of cheeks and catlike shriek of voice, she was enough to have made the governor and even the king himself quail had he been there, and all the time that mild husband of hers was plucking vainly at her gown. But the men only shouted with laughter, and presently the woman, with a savage glare at them, sank into her chair again and Mistress Allgood went up to her and the two whispered with handsome, fiercely wagging heads. Then entered another woman, after a clatter of horse's hoofs in the drive, and she had a presence that compelled all the men except one to their feet, though there was about her that foolishness which, in my mind, doth always hamper the extreme of enthusiasm.

This woman, Madam Tabitha Story, was a widow of considerable property, owning a plantation and slaves, and one had, as was well known, gone mad with zeal in the cause of Nathaniel Bacon and had furnished him with money, and would herself have fought for him had she been allowed. But Bacon, though no doubt with gratitude for her help, had, as I believe is the usual case with brave men when set about with adoring women, but little liking for her. It was, in faith, a curious sight she presented as she entered that hall of Barry Upper Branch with the men rising and bowing low and the other women eying her, half with defiant glares as of respectability on the defense and half with admiration and comradeship, for she was to the far front in this rebellion as in the other. Madam Story was a woman so tall that she exceeded the height of many a man, and she was clad in black and crowned with a great hat feathered with sable like a hearse, and her skin was of a whiteness more dazzling against the black than any color. Her face had been handsome had it not been so elongated and strained out of its proper lines of beauty, and her forehead was of a wonderful height, a smooth expanse between bunches of black curls, and in the midst was set that curious patch which she had worn ever since Bacon's untimely death, it being, as I live, nothing more nor less than a mourning coach and four horses, cut so cunningly out of black paper that it was a marvel of skill.

She stared with scorn at the one black woman approaching her with the silver tray, then she turned and stared at Nick Barry, sitting half overcome with drink, lolling against the other. He cast a look of utter sheepishness at her and then straightened himself and rose like the other men, and Dick Barry motioned to both of the black women to withdraw, which they did, slinking out darkly, both with a fine rustle of silks.

Then Madam Story saluted the other women, though somewhat stiffly, and Dick Barry, who was never lacking in a certain gloomy dignity, though they said him to be the worse of the two brothers, stepped forward. "Madam," he said, "I pray you to be seated." With that he led her with a courtly air to a great carved chair in which his father had been used to sit, and she therein, somewhat mollified, her black length doubled on itself, and that mourning coach on her forehead, was a wonderful sight.

Then arrived Major Robert Beverly and another notable man, one of the burgesses, whose name I do to this day conceal in consequence of a vow to that effect, and then two more. Then Major Beverly, who was in fact running greater risks than almost any, inasmuch as he was clerk of the assembly and was betraying more of trust, after he had saluted Madam Story conferred privately with Dick Barry and my Lord Estes and Parson Downs, with this effect.

Dick Barry, with such a show of gallantry and seriousness as never was, prevailed upon the three ladies to forgive him his discourtesy, but hinted broadly that in an enterprise fraught with so much danger it were best that none but the ruder sex should confer together, and they departed, Mistress Longman enjoining upon her husband to remain and deport himself like a man of spirit, and Mistress Allgood whispering with a sharp hiss into her good man's alarmed ear, he nodding the while in token of assent.

But Madam Tabitha Story paused on the threshold ere she departed, standing back on her heels with a marvelous dignity and waving one long, black draped arm. "Gentlemen of Virginia," said she in a voice of such solemnity as I had never heard excelled, "I beseech you to remember the example which that hero who has departed set you. I beseech you to form your proceedings after the fashion of those of the immortal Bacon, and remember that if the time comes when a woman's arm is needed to strike for freedom, here is one at your service, while the heart which moves it beats true to liberty and the great dead."

Nick Barry was chuckling in a maudlin fashion when the door closed behind her, and Parson Downs' great face was curving upward with smiles like a wet new moon, but the rest were sober enough in spite of some overindulgence, for in truth it was a grave matter which they had met to decide and might mean the loss of life and liberty to one and all.

Major Robert Beverly turned sharply upon me as soon as the women were gone and accosted me civilly enough, though the memory of my convict estate was in his tone. "Master Wingfield," said he, "may I inquire"—"Sir," I replied, for I had so made up my mind, "I am with you in the cause, and will so swear if my oath be considered of sufficient moment."

I know not how proudly and bitterly I said that last, but Major Beverly looked at me, and a kindly look came into his eyes. "Master Wingfield," he said, "the word of any English gentleman is sufficient." And I could have blessed him for it and have ever since had remorse for my taking advantage of his dark closet of an old love for the hiding of the secret of the ammunition.

Then as we sat there in a blue cloud of tobacco smoke, through which the green bayberry candles gleamed faintly and which they could not overcome with their aromatic breath of burning, the plot for the rooting up of the young crop was discussed in all its bearings.

I wondered somewhat to see Major Beverly and still others of the burgesses who presently arrived placing their lives in jeopardy with men of such standing as some present. But a common cause makes common confidence, and it might well have been, hang one, hang all. Major Robert Beverly spoke at some length, and his speech was, according to my mind, both wise and discreet, though probably somewhat inflamed by his own circumstances.

The greatest store of tobacco of any one in the colony had Major Robert Beverly, and a fair young wife who loved that which the proceeds could buy. And as he spoke there was a great uproar outside and the tramp of horses and jingle of swords and spurs, and a whole troop of horse came riding into the grounds of Barry Upper Branch. And some of those in the hall turned pale and looked about for an exit and some grasped their swords and some laughed knowingly, and Major Beverly strode to the door and behind him Parson Downs and Captain Noel Jaynes and the Barry brothers and some others, and I, pressing close, and there was a half whispered conference between Major Beverly and the leader of the horse. Then Major Beverly turned to us.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I am assured that in case of a rising we have naught

Drinking treason to the king and success to the rebels to fear from the militia, who are, in like case with the other sufferers from the proceedings of the government, being about to be disbanded in arrears of their pay. Gentlemen, I am assured by Captain Thomas Marvyn that his men are with us in heart and purpose, and though they may not help unless the worse come to the worse, they will not hinder."

Then such a cheer went up from the conspirators in the hall of Barry Upper Branch, and the troop of horse outside, as it seemed, might have been heard across the sea which divided us from that tyranny which ruled us, and Nick Barry shouted to some of his black slaves, and presently every man of the soldiers was drinking cider made from the apples of Virginia, and with it treason to the king and success to the rebels.

PERFECTLY HONEST.

Benefits of Y. M. C. A. Open to All.

A Membership Admits to All.

Is Developing a Religious Unity Not Always Recognized.

Editors of the Ledger:

In the Ledger of October 13 you kindly gave some space to the Young Men's Christian Association. You said, quoting from their educational prospectus:

"Any man above 16 years of age, without regard to nationality, color, religious belief or creed, is eligible to membership in the Association and to these classes" and you added "and that is the reason why the Y. M. C. A. deserves the support of all people of Quincy."

In the Ledger of Monday, Oct. 17, a correspondent questions the above statement and claims that the Association is a sectarian organization in that it puts a religious test on its membership, and therefore it is an insult to ask persons to give money to an organization whose constitution discriminates against those asked.

Without entering any controversy I merely want to try to set your readers right on two questions.

Is the Y. M. C. A. membership open to all?

To this question I answer yes! and no! There are as in most all other organizations, two classes of memberships—active and associate. Active members must belong to Evangelical churches; they have the privilege of voting and from them is elected the governing board. Associate membership is made of all men of good moral character, over 16 years of age, without regard to nationality, color, religous belief or creed. Associate membership entitles one to the use of all privileges of the building, admission to all educational classes, lectures and entertainments, use of gymnasium and its equipment.

Therefore, I believe it is correct to say that there is in the Young Men's Christian Association a membership test which is not religious and in which membership are enrolled, Protestant, Catholic, Jew and Infidel, and because of this membership thousands of dollars flow annually into the associations treasury from Protestants, Catholics, Jews and infidels.

(2)—Is it reasonable to ask support for the Young Men's Christian Association from those whose religious convictions prevent them from becoming active members?

Some think it reasonable, others think it an insult. The Boston and Maine Railroad, the New York Central, and all trunk lines of the country think it reasonable. They erect buildings maintain workers and support general expenses to the extent of thousands of dollars annually.

Why has the United States government sent the Y. M. C. A. to establish work is Panama? Why has the Japanese government permitted Y. M. C. A. tents and workers in its army in Manchuria? In short because this work is effective.

I feel, Mr. Editor, that the answer to the main question must always be according to the temperament and disposition of the person answering. It is true that, again and again, religous convictions have interfered with good works. Men have stood so upright that they have fallen backwards.

Personally, I regret that the religious test for active membership in the Young Men's Christian Association exists in its present form; but when it comes to the question—shall I support the work?—it does not take me long to decide.

I recognize that the Association had its origin in the so called evangelical denominations, and its management has naturally remained with them. I recognize that the Association has won results that make it respected the world around.

I also recognize that it is a religious work, and like all religious work existing in an age of transition it is subject to change in methods. In these days, under the pressure of social economic and political conditions, there is coming to the front a religious unity that is only imperfectly understood and therefore not always recognized.

It is because the Young Men's Christian Association is aiding the development of this unity and aiding it in this task is growing itself, that I believe it has the right to appeal to every citizen, regardless of his religious convictions, who is dissatisfied with the present, and is anxious to work with the best means at hand for the future.

I maintain, Mr. Editor, that your statement was perfectly honest. The benefits of the Association are open to all and because they are open to all, there is a membership that admits all, and therefore the Association has the right to appeal to the public.

Basket Ball League.

H. H. Healy of Cambridge, secretary of the New England Basket Ball league, has been in town this week in the interests of the sport in this city. He has organized a Quincy team to play at the Coliseum, and would like to organize a local league. With this in view he invites managers of basket ball teams to meet him at Hotel Greenleaf next Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

TINY ENGINE FOR JAPAN.

Built to Replace Coolies on Narrow Gauge Roads.

A locomotive of diminutive proportions which was recently completed at Philadelphia has been shipped to Japan. It will be used as a substitute for coolie labor on narrow gauge roads along the coast, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The locomotives will be used on the Atami light railway, a pleasure resort road about sixteen miles long running from a point near Yokohama up into the mountains. Cars carrying four passengers have been in use for years, and three coolies are required to push each car up the grade. This work requires great physical exertion, causing the men to become overheated. They are accustomed to ride down in the cars, and by cooling off too rapidly many have contracted consumption and died.

As there are a large number of such roads in operation along the coast of Japan, the deaths of the coolies became alarming, and the matter was brought to the attention of the emperor. He ordered the railroad owners to get other means of power. The construction of a diminutive locomotive was suggested, and plans for one were offered by a company in Philadelphia. They were accepted.

The locomotive weighs 5,500 pounds. It has a tank of fifty gallons capacity and burns soft coal. The diameter of the drivers is twenty inches, and the cylinder has a diameter of four and one-half inches, with a ten inch stroke. The track upon which it will run is two feet wide, and the rails used weigh from eight to ten pounds to the yard. One man is required to operate the little locomotive, and from his seat in the rear he can reach every part of the starting and stopping gear without getting up. A canopy, open at the sides, covers the cab and engine, and the side plates almost hide the little drivers. The locomotive is intended to draw from four to six cars containing four passengers each.

LIGHT ON LAMA MYSTERY.

Australian Journalist Believes Tibet's High Priests Are Poisoned.

Here is a description from an Australian journalist's pen of that mysterious personage, the talai lama of Tibet, says a special cable dispatch from London to the New York American and Journal:

"It is significant," he says, "that the being who holds this peculiar priestly position always dies just as he is about to attain his majority, which means eighteen years. The fairy tale told to the people is that the grand lama, who has spent nine-tenths of his life in holy meditation, has become so thoroughly disgusted with the sinful state of this world that he has decided to fly to the realms of lotus lived bliss. Personally I believe he retires on account of 'something in the soup,' for if the lama lived to be eighteen years old he would hold supreme power, which the instant he dies goes back to the 'boss' lamas, or monks, called gyalpos, or regents.

"The grand lama having 'gone aloft' to see his previous brother, the lamas scoot around and note how many baby boys were born in Tibet the day the talai lama died. These are watched until they are four years of age, and then they are shown a job lot of old clothes, trinkets, etc., and the boy who picks out an article that once belonged to the dead grand lama is adjudged to be his successor and removed to the most holy monastery of Potala, where he spends the rest of his life. He has an easy but dreadfully dull life for a boy."

MILTON WEDDING

Miss Margaret E. Gannett of Milton Hill and Mr. Harold W. French.

The wedding of Miss Margaret Emerson Gannett and Mr. Harold Waldo French took place Monday evening at the residence of the bride's father. Mr. Samuel Gannett on Milton Hill, it being the anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Gannett's wedding day and birthday of the groom's father. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Theodore I. Reese, rector of St. Michael's church, Milton, at eight o'clock.

The parlors were thrown together, making one long room. A quantity of white chrysanthemums being effectively used as the simple scheme of decoration. The whole affair, indeed, was planned along lines of simplicity and as far as it could be was informal, only about one hundred near relatives and intimate friends being present.

The bride's only attendant was her sister, Miss Mary Gannett, who acted as maid of honor and preceded the bride down the long aisle formed through the center of the rooms by bands of white ribbon. The maid of honor wore white crepe de chene and carried a bouquet of pink carnations.

The bride followed, escorted by her father. Her gown was of ivory Liberty satin, made up with Duchess lace, and the bouquet was of lilies of the valley. Rev. Mr. Reece awaited the bride at the head of the drawing room and at the simple altar was met by the groom who was attended by Mr. Fred Palmer, best man, and Mr. Asa Churchill and Mr. Frank Wright, ushers.

An orchestra, which played the Mendelssohn wedding march furnished a delightful program during the reception and supper which immediately followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. French were assisted in receiving their guests by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gannett and Mr. and Mrs. French.

A SECOND TIME.

Mischievous Boys Enter Public Library in the Night.

The Thomas Crane Public Library was entered again sometime during last night. Entrance was made through a window. As far as known nothing was taken although the parties opened the desk of Miss Bumpus and scattered the contents about. This is the second time that the library has been entered this year. The first time some small change that had been received for fines was taken. Since then no money has been left in the library over night. The work is thought to have been that of boys. The police have taken the matter up and will try and bring the parties to justice.

The annual dinner of the Norfolk Club will be held at the American House, Boston, Saturday at 1 P. M. The following are the speakers: U. S. Senator Dillingham of Vermont, Gov. Bates, Col. A. E. AN OFFICIAL JUDGE.

Proposed by the Yacht Racing Association.

The fall meeting of the Yacht Racing association of Massachusetts was held at Young's hotel Thursday evening, says the Globe, President Charles Francis Adams 2d in the chair. A number of amendments were voted to be presented at the spring meeting of the association, probably the most important being one which will make it part of the duties of the executive committee to appoint an official judge to attend all races given under the rules of the association.

It was proposed to amend rule 20, section 2, as follows: "If, after the preparatory signal, a yacht crosses the starting line, she shall be considered to have started. If any part of the hull or spars of a yacht is on or over the line when the starting signal is given, she must return and recross the line. It shall be the duty of the judges to hail a yacht which is on or over the line before the starting signal, but their failure to do so shall not relieve the yacht from recrossing the line."

It was proposed to amend rule 20, section 1, by adding: "And not less than two guns shall be fired before the first class starts. The object of this rule is to allow a skipper, who may not have heard one gun, to get his official time from the other."

DYNAMITE FOUND.

Wood Chopper Had a Close Call off Bates Avenue.

Thursday Inspector Bradley recovered 61 sticks of dynamite, a lot of percussion caps and a fuse in the woods off Bates avenue. This is probably part of the dynamite stolen from the quarry of Maguire & O'Heron just before the Fourth of July. The recovery of the dynamite Thursday was a matter of accident, and it was by the merest chance that it was not exploded. Thomas Foley was clearing out a space in the woods off Bates avenue and in thrashing about with an axe he uncovered the dynamite which was covered with a lot of undergrowth. Had he struck the dynamite with the axe it probably would have been all over with Mr. Foley. He reported the find to Inspector Bradley who took charge of it.

Swedish Lutheran Reunion.

About one hundred were present Thursday evening at the reunion of the young people's societies of the Swedish Lutheran church. The evening proved most enjoyable. There was a short entertainment consisting of a recitation by Karl Samuelson, dialogue by the Misses Magnison, declamation by Miss Caroline Carlson and songs by the choir. There was also an address by the pastor, Rev. John A. Bernhard. Coffee was served by Masters Erickson and Jacobson. A social time followed.

TODAY'S COURT.

Uncle Sam: "What's the matter with your doll, little girl?"

WHO FOR MAYOR?

The Republicans Are All at Sea.

Hints That Dark Horse Will Run.

George H. Wilson May Contest Democratic Nomination.

There seem to be a feeling that there is considerable underhand work in the Mayoralty contest this year. In spite of all that has been printed the voters at large do not know where to place either Mr. Thompson or Mr. McAnarney. For this reason many who would like to support one or the other are lukewarm over both.

The voters fear that the City Hall machine is back of both gentlemen, and whichever wins they will not secure the reform which most everybody admits is needed.

It is probable that another candidate will appear in the field for the Republican nomination before the caucuses, and if the one now being urged to stand will only say the word there is no doubt about his nomination and election.

Within two weeks nominations for the caucuses must be filed so that the time is short, and the voters will soon know how many are entered.

Little has been heard of George H. Wilson in this campaign, the general impression being that he had stepped aside so as not to stand in the way of the ambitions of Representative Fallon.

But it is the wish of many that Mr. Wilson again become the candidate of the Democrats. They say he could secure the nomination if a contest was made, and the fact that he carried seven of the eleven precincts of the city last year is evidence that he has a large following.

Too many, however, are underestimating the strength of Representative Peter T. Fallon as a candidate. They say he has no ghost of a chance, but that was what they said when he was first nominated for Representative. Yet he was the leading candidate both in 1902 and 1903.

TISDALE STABLE.

Loss of $30,000 at Fire at South Boston Last Night.

Two alarms at midnight Thursday night called the fire department to a stubborn fire in the Old Colony boarding stables of Wilson Tisdale & Co. on Dorchester avenue, South Boston.

The eighty horses in the stable were rescued. Several firemen and employes of the South Boston Gas Co. had a narrow escape. They were hemmed in by the third floor falling in on top of them, and were for a time cut off from escape. They were rescued just before the entire rear roof of the building fell in. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

G. A. R. Fair.

There was another large attendance at the Grand Army fair Thursday evening and the ladies in charge of the tables report good sales. The attendance this year has been much larger than on previous years, and it is believed that a good sum will be netted for the relief fund.

Brockton Figures.

Brockton has nearly twice as many voters as Quincy. The total at the close of registration this week was 9,992 against 9 153 a year ago.

Out of a total population of 45,000, Brockton assessors found only 5,565 individuals having taxable property in the city this year. They assessed 10,947 for a poll tax only.

Brockton has 6,651 houses, 1,865 horses, 871 cows, 1,315 fowl, and 13,771 acres of land.

Quincy has more voters than any of the following cities—Melrose, Medford, Beverly, and Chicopee—and about the same number as Everett and Gloucester, with several cities to bear from.

—Passengers are now carried by motor-car between Chiromo and Blantyre, Central Africa.

—Nova Scotia's export of apples to Europe is expected to exceed that of last year by 100,000 barrels.

What It Costs

... AND ...

What It Pays

are two values of newspaper advertising that the merchant has to consider. But the most important thing is

WHAT IT PAYS.

The merchant can get space in papers of small circulation and little influence for a little less money than the same size space would cost in the DAILY LEDGER and the QUINCY PATRIOT.

DOES IT PAY

to throw away the certainty of the profitable returns which are sure to LEDGER and PATRIOT advertisers, because it costs less to advertise in a cheaper paper?

LABOR'S SHARE OF PROSPERITY.

Savings of Labor Increase Faster Than General Savings.

Our foreign born citizens are sometimes told that the protective policy of the Republican party is for the benefit of manufacturers and employers and not for the benefit of labor. They hear it said that the "rich are growing richer and the poor are growing poorer."

That is not true. Every sensible workingman knows that it is the protective policy which keeps up wages. He knows that if protection were defeated, as the Democratic party proposes, wages in the United States would go down toward the level of wages in Europe. Protection benefits labor more than any other interests.

This can be plainly shown. Everybody knows that when labor prospers it puts its savings in savings banks and in life insurance benefit associations. The savings banks represent the savings of labor. In 1880 the total amount of deposits in savings banks in the United States was $819,000,000, in 1890 it was $1,525,000,000 and in 1903 it was $2,935,000,000. In other words, in 1903 it was nearly twice as much as it was in 1890 and three and a half times as much as it was in 1880.

Now, the whole wealth of the United States in 1903 was only a little over half as much again as it was in 1890 and only a little over twice what it was in 1880—that is to say, while the savings of labor increased three and a half times the general wealth only doubled.

This shows that the growth of labor savings was faster than the general growth of wealth. It shows that the workingmen were steadily increasing their share in the general prosperity. It completely answers the untrue statement that "the rich are growing richer and the poor are growing poorer." What is true is that the whole body of the people are growing better off, and the working people with the rest.

This can be shown in another way. England is a free trade country. The United States under Republican rule is a protection country. Take the same eight leading industries in both, such as iron and steel, cotton, woolen, boots and shoes, earthenware and glass, etc. In England from 1880 to 1900 the number of workers in these industries increased only 6 per cent, while the population during the same time increased 25 per cent. In the United States in the same period the number of workers increased 56 per cent and the population 52 per cent—that is to say, in free trade England the number of workers in the leading industries increased only one-quarter as fast as the population, while in protection United States they increased just as fast as population.

The Democratic party seeks to establish here through the election of Parker the policy of free trade England. The Republican party through the election of Roosevelt would maintain the policy of protection United States. The naturalized citizens who have come here to enjoy the benefits of the United States cannot fail to stand with Roosevelt.

MARINES WILL STAY

Presence Considered Necessary on Isthmus of Panama

READY TO MEET TROUBLE

Disgruntled Elements Not Unlikely to Foment Revolution--Taft Arranging For Trips For Himself and Committee

Washington, Oct. 21.—American marines will be retained on the Isthmus of Panama for the present, prepared to meet any emergency which may arise. This decision has just been reached and orders have been issued for a new battalion of marines, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Wood, to go to the isthmus about Nov. 15 to relieve the battalion which has been there for a year.

The exact number of men in this battalion has not been decided on, but it probably will be of about the same size as the battalion now on the isthmus, whose members are to be distributed among the marine barracks in the northern part of the United States.

That the situation on the isthmus is still not all that could be desired is the news which came to Washington yesterday in a personal letter from an official now in Panama. While the Panama government is entirely loyal, it seems that there are certain disgruntled elements in the isthmus, and in view of the ease with which revolutions are started in Central and South America, it is the official opinion here that marines should remain there for the present.

It is hoped that the mission of Secretary Taft will have a far-reaching effect in bringing all elements on the isthmus into harmonious accord with this government's policy.

It is probable that because of his desire to hasten his work on the isthmus as much as possible and to leave the congressional committees about to visit Panama more leisure in their movements and more accommodations for their party on the army transport Sumner, Secretary Taft will proceed directly with a small party from Tampa, Fla., on the Dolphin to Colon. He expects to have a conference with Chairman Hepburn of the house committee on interstate commerce regarding the trip, but has no idea what conclusions may be reached.

The visit of the committee to Panama, for which preliminary arrangements have been made, is for an object entirely different from that on which Secretary Taft will go. Many of the congressional committee plan to take their wives and other members of their families. Both parties will go at about the same time so as to be back here for the opening of congress.

THE TEXTILE WORKERS

Adoption of Resolutions Looking Toward Benefit of the Craft

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 21.—Thursday's sessions of the United Textile Workers of America were marked by the adoption of resolutions favoring the restriction of immigration from Europe, one asking the American Federation of Labor to appoint a permanent organizer to work among the textile workers, and another looking to another assessment upon the 2,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor in aid of the Fall River strikers.

The resolution regarding immigration says that the great and increasing immigration of people to our country from the continent of Europe will, unless restricted, tend to lower the standard of living of the American worker. It is therefore urged upon congress to enact laws that will restrict the indiscriminate and wholesale immigration to our shores.

A resolution to the effect that every officer of the United Textile Workers pledge himself that he will accept no political office within one year from the date of taking office in the United Textile Workers was adversely reported by the committee on resolutions and defeated in the convention. The New Bedford weavers' request that the organization pay the expense of a committee from their union was refused. Action was taken looking towards organizing Lawrence weavers and to advertise the United Textile Workers' label.

It reached the steps of St. Peter's this morning and will be put in place 65 feet above the pavement on Oct. 26.

The king chatted with each member of the party and ended by saying that he was always pleased to see American war vessels in England.

WORE ITSELF OUT

Battle of Shakhe River Now a Matter of History

FOG STOPS OPERATIONS

Lull In Contest In Which Positions Were Taken and Retaken Many Times and Slaughter Was Frightful--Russians Still In Possession of Lone Tree Hill

Mukden, Oct. 21.—The big battle has practically worn itself out, leaving the two armies facing each other, with the Shakhe river as the dividing line. An exchange of artillery fire continued all day on Oct. 18 and 19, the Russian centre advancing slightly each day under a heavy shell fire.

On the left the Russians are in a good position on a high hill overlooking the Shakhe river, which they have held since Oct. 16, despite an almost continuous bombardment and frequent infantry attacks. On the right the Russians are using mortars in an endeavor to dislodge the Japanese from a small hill in the last plain.

The hostile armies were yesterday concealed from view of each other by a dense fog, in which it was impossible to make out objects at a distance of 100 paces. Under such conditions only unimportant operations are possible, such as surprises and ambushes. Possibly were the roads in better condition the fog might favor movements of troops and concentrations at unexpected points, but without question operations on a large scale would be too dangerous, and so everything was quiet on the front. Neither cannonading nor musketry firing was audible.

London, Oct. 21.—The lull in the fighting in Manchuria seems an appropriate moment to consider just what has been done since Kuropatkin started the movement which precipitated what is likely to be known in history as "the battle of Shakhe." On Oct 2 Kuropatkin issued his "order of the day," in which he intimated that the day of retreats was over, and from that time on the Russian army would fight its way southward to effect the relief of Port Arthur. By Oct. 5 the operation was well under way.

Starting from the line of the Hun in three columns, one moving south along the Mandarin road toward Yantai; another along the wagon road to the Yentai mines, and the third along the road to Bentsiaputze, the first rush carried the Japanese out of all of their advanced positions, including places that they occupied immediately after the battle of Liaoyang and some that were in their possession before that fight. The town of Shakhe, 15 miles south of Mukden, which had been dismantled by the Japanese, was seized and the bridge across the railroad repaired. The centre column moving south along the road drove in the Japanese outposts, covering the Yentai mines on Oct. 6. At the same time the Russian left secured possession of a hill commanding Bentsiaputze, which the Japanese had strongly fortified. By some oversight the Japanese had failed to occupy this hill, and as a result were forced to evacuate Bentsiaputze and later Bensihu pass, still further to the south.

Quickly recovering from the unexpected weight of the Russian advance, and before the units of the Russian forces had established communication with each other, the Japanese generals concentrated their forces, and by a masterly counter-advance began to force the Russians northward again. For 10 days the Japanese continued to push the Russians back. Owing to the length of the front the actions were rather a series of battles than one great battle.

The fighting at every point of contact was of the fiercest nature. Positions were taken and retaken many times, and the slaughter has been frightful. It seemed probable at one time that the Japanese might win a decisive victory, but on the 10th day of the battle Kuropatkin rallied his forces on the Shakhe river and stemmed the Japanese advance. The Russians even recrossed the river and in a desperate fight recaptured Lone Tree hill, a precipitous height which was fortified and held by a whole division of Japanese troops. This position being the key to the Russian southwest front, the Japanese made strenuous efforts to recapture it, but without success. On Monday night last the Russians made an attack on the entire Japanese front, but it was repulsed.

The situation now is that the Russians occupy the line of the Shakhe from the town of Shakhe on their right to a little south of Bentsiaputze on their left. As the Russian starting point was the Hun it will be seen that at the present moment the Russians are in possession of a line 10 miles south of that occupied when the movement began.

On the other hand, this has been accomplished at tremendous cost, and the Russian strategy involved in the operation has been completely frustrated. The conclusions to be drawn from this great battle is that any attempt for the present at least to relieve Port Arthur from the north is futile, that the rank and file of the two armies are among the bravest soldiers of any time, that the Japanese artillery is better served, and that as strategists and tacticians the Japanese commanders are rather better han the Russian generals.

But the close character of the fighting does not warrant the Japanese cry of "on to Harbin" until Oyama is very heavily reinforced. Both the Russian and Japanese commanders now are resting their battle worn troops and making redispositions and in Russian military circles it is hinted that the next developments may be looked for eastward. No official estimates of the losses in the recent fighting have been received and the fragmentary and unofficial reports are contradictory.

SEVERE SUFFERING

Port Arthur Garrison Reported to Be In Desperate Straits

Chefoo, Oct. 21.—It is asserted that the Russian force at Port Arthur now numbers only 5000 men, excluding the militia, which is not engaged in the fighting, but patrols the streets, doing provost duty, and guards the arsenals.

Winter clothing is very scarce at Port Arthur, shoes particularly. The Russian soldiers are wearing Chinese shoes and some of them are unable to obtain even these and wrap rags about their feet.

The garrison is greatly worn out by the many months of exhaustion, anxious labor and fighting. The town is full of wounded. Flour is plentiful and the slaughter of horses, mules and donkeys continues.

Chinese who have reached Chefoo from Port Dalny say that reinforcements continue to arrive daily. The Japanese have practically completed immense warehouses between Port Dalny and Port Arthur and have therein supplies sufficient to last them until spring.

Similar preparations have been made at Newchwang and therefore the Japanese expect the release of 60 transports next month.

MARX IS UNMOVED

Jury Finds Him Guilty of Murder In the First Degree

CUT UP VICTIM'S BODY

Aged Hebrew Supposed to Have Killed Other Men Employed by Him Rather Than Pay Wages Which Were Due Them

New London, Conn., Oct. 21.—Guilty of murder in the first degree was the verdict found by the jury which for almost two weeks had listened to evidence produced by the state against Gershon Marx, who was charged with killing his farmhand, Pavol Dodecki, last spring. Last night he was back in his cell in the county jail awaiting the sentence of death which, undoubtedly, will be passed upon him as provided by state law. This will be the first time in 60 years that the death sentence has been passed in this county and the first time it has ever been pronounced on a Hebrew in Connecticut.

The jury was out exactly four hours, after listening to the charge of Judge Case. It is understood that the delay in returning a verdict was due entirely to the desire of the jurors to go over the evidence and when the ballot was finally taken it was unanimous. After returning to the courtroom the usual formalities were gone through and at the request of counsel imposition of sentence was delayed. Marx showed no great concern when he heard the verdict pronounced, for all day he had held steadfast to the belief that he would have what he called justice. The courtroom was thronged to suffocation, while outside the building were many more people anxious to hear the verdict.

Marx is 73 years of age, with every appearance of being much older. He has been married several times, marrying his present wife, who is held as an accessory to the crime, about 20 years ago. He bought a farm in Colchester seven years ago, but had lived on the farm on which the murder, or murders, occurred about three years. The house was in a dilapitated condition and showed that the family had only the bare necessaries of life.

Not much is known about the old man, as his neighbors in Colchester seldom had dealings with him. The state, in prosecuting Marx for murder, claimed that he killed Rodecki rather than pay him six months' wages which were due and that he afterwards cut up the body, sewed it in a sack and buried it in an old cellar. The same manner of disposing of the body of a second farmhand was followed and the county officers are firmly of the opinion that other murders were committed on the same farm.

REMARRIAGE CANON

Episcopal House of Deputies Acts In the Affirmative

Boston, Oct. 21.—By an overwhelming majority a compromise canon on the remarriage of divorced persons was adopted by the house of deputies of the Episcopal general convention yesterday, and if it is concurred in by the house of bishops the most impotant issue that has come before the present convention will be disposed of for at least three years. The compromise measure, like the old law, permits the remarriage of the innocent person in a divorce for the cause of infidelity, but further provides that no remarriage shall be allowed within one year after the divorce is granted by a civil court.

Satisfactory proof of the innocence of the innocence of the applicant for remarriage must be furnished in the shape of court records and after the consent of the bishop is obtained, a clergyman may refuse to perform such a ceremony without subjecting himself to censure or discipline.

According to Francis A. Lewis of Philadelphia, a member of the committee on canons, who favored no remarriage of any divorced person, but who accepted the compromise, the canon adopted yesterday is so strict that if endorsed by the bishops it will practically put the church, as he expressed it, "out of the divorce business." Others, however, claimed that they saw "loop-holes" in it.

A Moth Pest Crusade

Reading, Mass., Oct. 21.—A mammoth crusade against the prevailing pests of the suburbs north of Boston, the brawntail and gypsy moths, is being planned by the Civic league of Reading. Under the auspices of this league a public meeting is to be held on the evening of Oct. 25. Invitations have been sent to all of the towns and cities in the infested district, asking them to send delegates to the meeting at Reading, in order that a defensive campaign may be started at once. It is planned to form a mammoth organization comprising members from every town and city within the district wherein the moths have gained a foothold.

Motorman's Presence of Mind

Malden, Mass., Oct. 21.—Frank Geary, a motorman, demonstrated his presence of mind at a railroad crossing and extricated his passengers from a position of danger. Leaves on the track had rendered the brakes useless to stop the car, and it ran through the first gate onto the tracks of the Boston and Maine. A train was close at hand and realizing the danger in a moment, Geary turned on the power and at full speed ran his car through the second gate, breaking off both sides. Geary was not injured, and the car was only slightly damaged.

Real Estate Men's Complaint

Boston, Oct. 21.—Winthrop real estate men are complaining about the din and jar from the artillery practice at Fort Banks, and declare tenants are hard to get and harder to keep. Some claim that part of the district realty is deteriorating in value rapidly. Householders, too, say they cannot see why it is necessary for the constant practice when there is no seeming likelihood of war.

Good Season For Lobsters

Bangor, Me., Oct. 21.—While the lobster catch on the Maine coast thus far in 1904 is less than for the corresponding period of 1903, shipments from Rockland, one of the largest fishing ports, continue heavy. The weekly shipments to the large cities aggregate about 30 tons. The season of big catches is now on, and the total for the year may equal that of 1903.

Deer Hunters Must Pay Tax

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 21.—The bill requiring non-resident hunters of deer to pay licenses of $15 to hunt in Vermont was passed by the legislature yesterday and was signed by Governor McCullough today. The law goes into effect at once. The deer season in Vermont opens Oct. 22 for a period of 10 days. The non-resident hunters are restricted to killing one deer.

Sixty Horses Saved From Death

Boston, Oct. 21.—Stables owned by Wilson Tisdale were gutted by fire late last night, causing an estimated loss of $20,000. Of the 60 horses in the building at the time of the fire, all were removed without injury. The cause of the fire is believed to have been spontaneous combustion originating in the hay loft.

Killed by Gas

New Haven, Oct. 21.—Miss Fannie B. Pardee, 45 years of age, was found dead at her home here, having been asphyxiated from a gas jet which apparently had been accidentally turned on.

NOTES ABOUT TOWN.

Rainy and windy.

Wonder if this will pass as the Indian summer?

Very few leaves will be left on the trees after this storm.

The City Council Committee on Streets met Thursday evening.

Mrs. Charles Trumbull of Beverly has been the guest of Mrs. E. C. Butler this week.

A regular meeting of the School Committee will be held next Tuesday evening.

The Copeland club is anxious to arrange a foot ball match for tomorrow at West Quincy.

No news has yet been received of Harry W. Messer and suicide is feared. He is said to have brooded over the death of his wife.

F. J. Howard's moving pictures will be the attraction for the children at the Grand Army fair at the Coliseum on Saturday afternoon.

Miss Ethel Frances Silva and Mr. Joseph McKinnona were united in marriage Wednesday evening by Rev. Mr. Ellis of Brockton.

How about the city scales; are the people of Quincy going to permit them to disfigure the square? Between the First church and the fountain hardly seems the proper place for them.

The weather promises to be unfavorable for the meeting of the Hospital corporators this evening, so that everyone interested in the haven on the hill should make a special effort to be present.

There was a rough and tumble fistic encounter in the field off Revere road about 6 o'clock Thursday evening. The yells of one of the men indicated that he was either hurt or frightened and alarmed the neighborhood.

A steam heating plant is being installed in the First church to replace the four furnaces with which the church has been heated in the past. It was necessary to remove part of the cellar wall to get the boiler in.

Senator Lodge and ex-Representative Guy A. Ham will address the Republican rally at Quincy Music hall this evening. Few can discuss the issues of the Presidential election as ably as the senior senator from Massachusetts.

The case of Seth Perkins et al of Brookline and Quincy vs. the Union Casualty & Surety Company of St Louis is on trial in the Norfolk Superior Civil court. It is an action to recover $10,000 as an indemnity or a casualty policy.

The front portion of the old Post Office store at Quincy Point occupied for many years by Miss E. M. Freeman, and previously by her father, was the first schoolhouse at Quincy Point. Without doubt it is over 100 years old.

Several Quincy Masons will visit Randolph this evening to attend the visitation of Rt. Wor. E. Francis Pope of Brockton to Norfolk Union lodge, of which E. J. Dexter, formerly of Quincy is master. The third degree will be worked on a well known resident of Holbrook.

The new Y. M. C. A. building looms up more lofty than many anticipated. But the front part has five floors 45 by 65 and naturally it makes a show. It is now boarded in. The size of the building is 45 feet on the street by 130 feet deep, but the gymnasium in the rear is only two stories.

Massachusetts lodge of Masons, of which J. C. Bates of Wollaston is secretary, and Rev. E. A. Chase chaplain, had a very largely attended meeting at the Temple on Monday evening. Five candidates were raised and five more elected. This lodge adds about thirty members a year and is flourishing.

No school this afternoon, because of the storm.

Mrs. Austin, the wife of Rev. Leon H. Austin, is critically ill.

Several members of the Wollaston club entered the Brookline County club golf tournament on Thursday. L. O. Crane was tied for third place in net score. W. E. Geer of the Merrymount club was tied for fifth place.

Senator Lodge and Guy A. Ham addressed an enthusiastic gathering of Republicans at Amesbury last night, Both are in demand as speakers in this campaign and Quincy is fortunate in securing them for this evening at Music hall.

MILTON.

Ernest Choate, who has been seriously ill with typhoid fever, is convalescent.

E. J. Tinker is enlarging his store in the Ellsworth block by taking in the small room formerly used as the post office.

A chafing dish party and entertainment will be held tonight in the vestry of the East Milton Congregational church.

Enthusiasts are trying to organize a foot ball team in East Milton.

The Thursday Evening club held a business meeting this week.

Adams street at East Milton is being resurfaced.

A meeting of the Republican Town Committee was held Wednesday evening to compile a list of the Republican voters of the town.

George White has enlisted in the navy.

John E. Erwin has reopened his barber shop.

"THE BRIDES' LIMITED."

Novelty In Trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

"The Brides' Limited" is the latest in railway trains, says a Philadelphia special to the New York World. It is being run daily from Philadelphia to New York by the Pennsylvania railroad. It gets its name from the fact that not a day since the 1st of October has it failed to carry at least one couple on their honeymoon.

The gatemen at the Broad street station were the first to notice that No. 000 was being patronized by newly married people. They exchanged experiences with the train crew, who promptly decided to rechristen their train. The yardmen were told of the discovery, and now the Pullman making up "The Brides' Limited" are selected by name, the cars of Cupid and Hymen being used whenever available.

Then the porter was let into the secret. He is rapidly growing rich in consequence. He says he has only to walk through the car, pick out the bride and bridegroom and begin to sweep up the rice certain to be found on the floor near them.

A Korean Minister's Plight.

The Korean minister at St. Petersburg is in sore straits, says the New York Tribune. His government, or what is left of it, has recalled him, but he has not money enough to get home. Since the outbreak of the war in the far east his salary has failed to reach him for some reason or other, and now he is in debt for $23,000. No government seems willing to pay his salary, and he cannot jump St. Petersburg without paying his bills, so he must stay there until some one or something goes to his rescue.

SOUTHERN OLIGARCHY

Spirit of the Constitution Violated—Voters' Rights Destroyed In Centralized Power.

John Sharp Williams In Congress on 1,433 Votes — Speaker Cannon Has 22,941—Some Facts.

It has been asserted that the Republican platform in demanding that representation in congress and in the electoral colleges be reduced in states where the elective franchise has been limited by special discriminations is raising the race question. This is not true. The platform does not touch the race question. The clause in question has to do with a more vital and important matter, the equality of voters.

The constitution of the United States, Article I, Section II, 3, defines the basis of representation as follows:

"Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons."

According to the fourteenth amendment:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state, excluding Indians not taxed."

Now, obviously if by some such plan as the wholesale disfranchisement of a certain class of the population the entire population of a state, voting and nonvoting, can be made to count in the representation of that state in congress, while other states are there represented in proportion to their number of voters, there is an inequality which tends toward the establishment of just such an oligarchy as existed in the antebellum congress, only instead of counting three-fifths of a large nonvoting population certain southern states now count the whole. Moreover, their representation is vested in men who are committed to a policy not only Democratic, but essentially local and in many respects directly antagonistic to the interests not only of northern Republicans, but of northern Democrats as well. The perception of a similar condition of things made the "war Democrat" of forty years ago. Under the present Mississippi constitution one voter in Mississippi equals ten in Connecticut, ten in Ohio, twelve in Massachusetts, sixteen in California, seventeen in Iowa and twenty-nine in New York. How do you like that, citizens?

Let us look at the matter in detail. John Sharp Williams, the Democratic leader of the house, was asked some time ago whether he would accept the nomination for president. He said:

"My nomination would no sooner be announced than it would be heralded far and wide that my platform consisted of the constitution of Mississippi and the amendments thereto."

Mr. Williams knew he could never win on that platform. He was elected to the Fifty-eighth congress without opposition, receiving 1,433 votes, his district, the Eighth Mississippi, having a population of 190,885. In the First district of Connecticut, having a population of 220,003, 15 per cent more than that of the Eighth Mississippi, E. Stevens Henry received 20,289 votes, and had that district been of the same size as Mr. Williams' district Mr. Henry must have had 17,642 votes to secure election—more than ten times as many as it took to elect the Democratic leader of the house. Moreover, in opposition to Mr. Henry, 17,211 votes were cast for William O'Neil, Democrat; 392 for Edward Agard, Prohibitionist; 708 for Jameson, Socialist, and 144 for Joseph S. Powell, Socialist Labor. More than ten times as many votes were cast in Connecticut as were cast in Mississippi for a winning candidate. The scattering vote amounted altogether to 1,244—within 200 votes of the total vote in the Eighth Mississippi district, for Williams was without opposition. If this scattering vote had united for the Socialist candidate, and all the other voters in the First Connecticut district had been disfranchised, that candidate would have been elected in conditions very nearly corresponding, so far as numbers are concerned, to the conditions of the Mississippi election which put Mr. Williams in the house of representatives. And Mr. Williams is arguing against imperialism on the ground that the Philippines are governed without representation!

In the Eighth New Jersey district Representative Wiley was elected by 18,814 votes against 12,005 Democratic votes out of a population of 181,947. It took thirteen votes in this New Jersey district, which is smaller than that of Representative Williams, to elect a congressman opposed by a vote two-thirds as large as his own. To be elected unanimously he would have to receive more than twenty votes to Mr. Williams' one. Is one Mississippian equal to more than a score of Jerseymen at the polls?

Mr. Cannon, the speaker of the house, received 22,941 votes in a district whose population is 209,233, and he was opposed by a Democratic vote of 15,254 and a Prohibitionist vote of 1,166. More than ten times as many Democratic votes were cast against Cannon in Illinois as for Williams in Mississippi.

TWO BITS OF LUCK.

An Incident In Which the Good and Bad Tragically Mixed.

The late Senator Vest of Missouri used to tell a story of good luck and hard luck without a counterpart, according to the Buffalo Commercial. One day, while he was a member of the Confederate congress, he lost a month's pay somewhere on the streets of Richmond. Just as the woman in Scripture who lost a piece of silver called together her friends and neighbors and sought diligently until she found it, he called his friends and went with them on what seemed a hopeless search through the snow covered, dimly lighted streets of Richmond. The chances were a thousand to one against success. "We hadn't been out fifteen minutes when a young lieutenant in our party stooped down and picked up my lost roll. I was in high glee and wanted to treat. We were piloted to a cafe which, pending some repairs, had a ladder of about a dozen rungs instead of stairs. We all climbed up, considering it a great lark, all the while talking about what a lucky fellow the young lieutenant was and predicting great things for him. As we climbed down again the young lieutenant fell from the ladder and broke his neck."

GUILDS OF THIEVES.

Organized Bodies In China That Thrive on Fees.

China is the country of guilds, and the guild of thieves in any district might almost be described as a recognized body. It is treated with by all householders until it has become a kind of insurance agency against theft. All gatekeepers and night watchmen pay a small monthly fee to this guild in order that no thieving may take place on the premises over which they have control. Then if anything does go wrong it will be due to a free lance who would be promptly murdered if captured by the guild thieves themselves.

A recent writer on China states that a friend of his who employs many hundreds of coolies pays a regular monthly salary to the head of the thieves in that district. The man comes to the office on pay days like other employees to draw his wages. If, however, anything has been missed from the factory during the month the value of it is deducted from his salary until the article is restored, which is invariably done within a short time, and in full.

KAFFIRS AND SNUFF.

A Grave Breach of Manners to Take a Pinch Standing Up.

In South Africa among the Kaffirs snuff taking is universal, and it is a grave breach of manners to ask your host for a pinch when you are standing up.

The reason for this is found in the treacherous practices of former times. When one man wished to kill another favorite device was to ask him for a pinch of snuff, and then, while the unsuspecting victim was fumbling for his snuffbox, the murderer had a splendid opportunity. As this trick for taking a man at a disadvantage became familiar it naturally grew to be a point of good manners to make your request when squatting on the ground, when clearly you were intending no evil.

The Kaffir snuff is made from crude tobacco grown at every kraal, which is powdered up and mixed with the ash of the aloe, carefully ground on a stone and damped. It is always etiquette to ask for snuff, and the donor grants your request grudgingly, lest he should be suspected of pressing upon you bewitching medicine with it.

Suspicious.

Dr. Sloan of Ayr many years ago said that a friend of his had gone not long before to see the parish minister of Craigie, near Kilmarnock, and, finding him for the moment engaged, had turned into the churchyard, where he sauntered past the sexton, who was at work digging a grave. As the clergyman was detained some time, the visitor walked to and fro along the path and at length noticed that the sexton's eyes were pretty constantly fixed upon him. At length he stopped and, addressing the gravedigger, asked: "What are ye staring at me for? Ye needna tak' the measure o' me, if that's what you're ettlin' at, for we bury at Riccarton."—Reminiscences of Sir Archibald Geikie.

An Oddly Placed Church.

The old chapel of ease at Tunbridge Wells, England, stands partly in Kent and partly in Sussex; but, more than that, it also stands in three parishes. When the clergyman leaves the vestry he comes out of the parish of Frant, in Sussex, and if he is going to officiate at the altar he walks into the parish of Tunbridge, in Kent. If, on the other hand, he is going to preach the sermon he walks from Frant into the parish of Speldhurst.

One of Man's Blessings.

When a man talks too much his wife pulls at his coat for him to sit down, and it is not until she is dead and he makes a fool of himself that the world recognizes how much of his past good record was due to this coat tail censor. —Atchison Globe.

Reasonable.

Smith—I am the most reasonable man on earth. Jones—Then why do you always insist on having your own way? Smith—Because it's the most reasonable one.

"De worst nuisance on earth," said Uncle Eben, "is de man dat keeps huntin' around to see how many nuisances he kin find to kick about."—Washington Star.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition. XI—Madam Cavendish, whose silence about Wingfield's innocence shields her own granddaughter. Catherine, wishes him to wed Mary. Wingfield is guided by a witch to a secure hiding place for the arms. XII—The grand ball at the governor's, with Mary as belle. She reveals her affection for Wingfield.

CHAPTER XV.

I HAD not formed my plan of taking part in the coming insurrection without many misgivings lest I should by so doing bring harm upon the Cavendishes. But on discussing the matter in all its bearings with Major Robert Beverly, whom I had ever held to be a man of judgment, he assured me that in his opinion there could no possible ill result come to such a household of women, especially when the head of it was of such openly avowed royalist leanings. Unless, indeed, he admitted, the bringing over of the arms and the powder was to be traced to Mistress Mary Cavendish.

This he said not knowing the secret of his first wife's tomb, and I feeling, as indeed I was, an arch deceiver. But what other course is left open to any man, when he can shield the one he loves best in the whole world only at the expense of some one else? Can he do otherwise but let the other suffer and even forfeit his sense of plain dealing? I have lived to be an old man, and verily nothing hath so grown in the light of my experience as the impossibility of serving love, except at a loss, not only to others, but to oneself But that truth of the greatest importance in the whole world hath also grown upon me, that love should be served at whatever cost. I cared not then, and I care not now, who suffered and who was wronged if only that beloved one was saved.

I went home that night from Barry Upper Branch riding a horse which Dick Barry lent me, on learning that I had come thither without one, though not in what mad fashion, and Sir Humphrey rode with me until our roads parted. Much gaming was there that night after we left; we leaving the Barrys and my Lord Estes and Drake and Captain Jaynes and many others intent upon the dice, but Humphrey and I did not linger, I having naught to stake and he having promised his mother not to play.

"Sometimes I wish that I had not so promised my mother," he said, looking back over his great boyish shoulder as he rode ahead, "for sometimes I think 'tis part of the estate of a man to put up stakes at cards and to win or lose as beseems a gentleman of Virginia and a cavalier. But, sure, Harry, a promise to a man's mother is not to be broken lightly, and indeed she doth ask me every night when I return late, and I shall see her face at the window when I ride in sight of the great house; but faith, Harry, I would love to win in something; if not in hearts, in a throw of the dice. For, sure, I am a man grown and have never had my own will in aught that lies near my heart."

With that he gave a great sigh, and I, striving to cheer him and indeed loving the lad, replied that he was but young and there was still time ahead, and the will of one's heart required often but a short corner of turning. But he was angry again at me for that, and cried out I knew not, for all I was loved in return, the heart of a certain maid as well as he who was despised, and spurred his horse and rode on ahead, and when we had come to the division of the road, saluted me shortly and was gone, and the sound of his galloping died away in the distance, and I rode home alone meditating.

And when I reached Drake Hill a white curtain fluttered athwart a window and I caught a gleam of a white arm pulling it to place and knew that Mistress Mary had been watching for me—I cannot say with what rapture and triumph and misgivings.

It was well toward morning, and indeed a faint pallor of dawn was in the east and now and then a bird was waking. Not a slave on the plantation was astir and the sounds of slumber were coming from the quarters. So I myself put my borrowed horse in stable and then was seeking my own room, when, passing through the hall, a white figure started forth from a shadow and caught me by the arm, and it was Catherine Cavendish. She urged me forth to the porch, I being bewildered and knowing not how, nor indeed if it were wise, to resist her. But when we stood together there, in that hush of slumber only broken now and then by the waking love of a bird, and it seemed verily as if we two were alone in the whole world, a sense of the situation flashed upon me. I turned on my heel to re-enter the house. "Madam," I said, "this will never do. If you remain here with me your reputation"—

"What think you I care for my reputation?" she whispered. "What think you? Harry Wingfield, you cannot do this monstrous thing. You cannot be so lost to all honor as to let my sister—You cannot, and you a convict"—

Then indeed for the first time in my life and the last I answered a woman as if she were a man and on an equal footing of antagonism with me. "Madam," I replied, "I will maintain my honor against your own." But she seemed to make no account of what I said. Indeed I have often wondered whether a woman when she is in pursuit of any given end can progress by other methods than an ant, which hath no power of circuitousness and will climb over a tree with long labor and pain rather than skirt it if it come in her way. Straight at her purpose she went. "Harry, Harry," she said still in that sharp whisper, "you will not, you cannot—she is but a child."

Then before I could reply out ran Mary Cavendish herself and was close at my side, turning an angry face upon her sister.

"Catherine," she cried out, "how dare you? I am no child. Think you that I do not know my own mind? How dare you? You shall not come between Harry and me! I am his before the whole world. I will not have it, Catherine!"

Then Catherine Cavendish, awakening such bewilderment and dismay in me as I had never felt, looked at her sister and said in a voice which I can hear yet, "Have thy way then, sister; but 'tis over thy own sister's heart."

"What mean you?" Mary asked breathlessly.

"I love him!" said Catherine.

I felt the hot blood mount to my head, and I knew what shame was. I turned to retreat. I knew not what to do, but Mary's voice stopped me. It rang out clear and pitiless with that pitilessness of a great love.

"And what is that to me, Catherine?" she cried out. "Sure it is but to thy shame if thou hast loved unsought and confessed unasked. And if I had ten thousand sisters and they all in love with him, as well they might be, for there is no one like him in the whole world, over all their hearts would I go rather than he should miss me for but a second if he loved me. Think you that aught like that can make a difference? Think you that one heart can outweigh two and the misery of one be of any account before that of three?"

Then suddenly she looked sharply at her sister and cried out angrily:

"Catherine Cavendish, I know what this means. 'Tis but another device to part us. You love him not. You have hated him from the first. You have hated him, and he is no more guilty than you be. 'Tis but a trick to turn me from him. Fie, think you that will avail? Think you that a sister's heart counts with a maid before her lover's? Little you know of love and lovers to think that."

Catherine wildly weeping

Then, to my great astonishment, since I had never seen such weakness in her before, Catherine flung up her hands before her face and burst into such a storm of wild weeping as never was, and fled into the house, and Mary and I stood alone together, but only for a second, for Mary, also casting a glance at me, then about her at the utter loneliness and silence of the world, fled in her turn. Then I went to my room, but not to sleep nor to think altogether of love, for my Lord Culpeper was to sail that day, and the next night was appointed for the beginning of the plant cutting.

SENATOR LODGE AT MUSIC HALL.

Enlightens the Voters on the Panama Canal.--- Guy A. Ham Also Speaks on Issues of Day.

The greeting which Quincy extended to Senator Lodge last evening was not as spontaneous and hearty as might be expected in a city of 30,000, as Music hall was only half filled. Perhaps many did not realize the evening was pleasant as rain was falling when darkness came on.

Those present however were representative Quincy gentlemen, and included some Democrats and Socialists, and the applause was hearty and long continued when Senator Lodge was introduced.

The speakers were met at the depot on the arrival of the train from Boston at 7.49 by Representative R. R. Freeman and Thomas F. Burke of the Republican City Committee, and carriages taken for the hall. They were escorted by the City Band, which also played at the rally.

SENATOR HENRY CABOT LODGE.

Owing to the illness of President Dolliver of the City Committee, Councilman Stone introduced Theophilis King as the chairman of the evening.

On the platform besides the speakers were Representative Freeman, Harry S. Nicol, President Nichols of the City Council, Hon. John Shaw, Hon. John O. Hall, Principal Assessor Thompson, Postmaster Hammond, Thomas F. Burke, W. H. Teasdale, Edward J. Sandberg, Edwin W. Newcomb and others.

Chairman King in a vigorous five minute speech spoke in glowing terms of President Roosevelt, about whom he said the whole campaign centered. The President he said is the personification of manliness, and his strenuousness is always used for right. Further, the Republican party stood for liberty, law, virtue and truth. Mr. King felt sure that Roosevelt would be elected in November.

It was several moments after Senator Lodge was introduced before the applause subsided so that he could speak. He confined his address almost wholly to the Panama canal issue. He quoted from a private letter of the President written about a year ago which clearly refuted the misrepresentation of the Democrats today that the President fomented the Panama revolution. Further, said Senator Lodge, I personally obtained the letter in question from the President and gave it to the Democratic leaders in the Senate before the vote on the Panama treaty, and half the Democrats voted in favor of the treaty.

The necessity for the trip of the battleship Oregon around the horn during the Spanish war emphasized the need of a Panama canal which had been under consideration for 70 years. The Republican Congress acted and work has commenced.

We were determined it should be an American canal, and it will be. It was necessary to reinburse the French company for work already done, and they were paid. We also paid the Republic of Panama for rights. Since the President recognized the republic of Panama it had had the longest period of peace in its history.

Senator Lodge defended the liberal policy of government expenditures. Those for rivers and harbors were needed, he said, also those for rural delivery, and every dollar for the army and navy is wisely spent. Where the army of Great Britain cost $21 per capita, and France $17, it cost but $7.97 in the United States.

Public money as a whole was wisely and judiciously spent, and we should pursue the liberal policy as long as the income will admit.

Henry H. Faxon arose and asked if the United States was not rather liberal on the Panama canal.

Senator Lodge asked if the gentleman meant to the French company or to the republic. Without waiting for a reply he said the former sum was the estimate of our own engineers. The canal was all the republic had and it was worth all we paid her to secure a canal connecting the two oceans without further delay.

In closing Senator Lodge spoke enthusiastically of President Roosevelt, who had been tried and proved, and had no secrets. The Senator returned to Boston on the 9.12 train.

Guy A. Ham, Esq., was then introduced and spoke ably and interestingly for half an hour. He lauded the administration of Gov. Bates, and spoke of the prosperity of the country under President Roosevelt, and the achievements. He also paid the President a personal tribute, and said he would long be revered with Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley. The Democrats came in for several sharp raps.

As Mr. Ham took his seat, Henry H. Faxon arose and said:

"When the gentleman last up alluded to why the Democratic party did not like Gov. Bates he omitted a very important matter. It was because the Governor wanted to restrict the sale of intoxicating liquors and that party could not live without whiskey."

Chairman King replied saying that the Republicans stood for temperance and for all that was pure and right.

A selection by the band closed the rally.

Recital.

The recital given at the Quincy Mansion school last evening by Mr. J. Herbert Marceau, tenor; Mr. William Howard, violinist; Mr. Butram C. Henry, pianist; presented a fine program.

Mr. Marceau has long been a resident here, and his excellences as a soloist are well known to the musical public. His rendering of the French love song, called forth enthusiastic applause from those present.

The skill of Mr. Howard as an interpreter, stamps him as an artist of the foremost rank, and his performances were notable for purity of tone, and contrasts in tempo and expression. His audience were enthusiastic, recalling him again and again, at the ending of the different groups of pieces.

The closing selection for the piano was rendered by Mr. Henry with a perfection of technique, and a brilliancy and delicacy of expression, such as a master is capable of demonstrating. This grand finale was thoroughly appreciated, and Mr. Henry received generous applause.

A meeting of the Hospital Aid Association will be held Thursday, October 27th, at 2.30 P. M., at the home of Mrs. G. S. Keyes, 15 Alleyne terrace.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition. XI—Madam Cavendish, whose silence about Wingfield's innocence shields her own granddaughter. Catherine, wishes him to wed Mary. Wingfield is guided by a witch to a secure hiding place for the arms. XII—The grand ball at the governor's, with Mary as belle. She reveals her affection for Wingfield.

CHAPTER XVI.

I KNOW not if my Lord Culpeper had any inkling of what was about to happen. Some were there who always considered him to be one who feathered his own nest with as little risk as might be, regardless of those over and under him, and one who saw when it behooved him to do so, and was blind when it served his own ends, even with the glare of a happening in his eyes. And many considered that he was in England when it seemed for his own best good without regard to the king or the colony, but that matters not, at this date.

In truth, his was a ticklish position—between two fires. If he remained in Virginia it was at great danger to himself, if he sided not with the insurgents; and, on the other hand, there was the certainty of his losing his governorship and his lands, and perhaps his head, if he went to tobacco cutting with the rest of us. He was without doubt better off on the high sea, which is a sort of neutral place of nature, beyond the reach, for the time, of mobs or scepters, unless one falls in with a black flag.

At all events, off sailed my Lord Culpeper, leaving Sir Henry Chichely as lieutenant governor, and verily he might as well have left a weathercock as that well intentioned but pliable gentleman. Give him but a head wind over him and he would wax fierce to order, and well he served the government in the Bacon uprising, but leave him to his own will and back and forth he swung with great bluster, but no stability. None of the colony, least of all the militia, stood in awe of Sir Henry Chichely, nor regarded him as more than a figurehead of authority when my Lord Culpeper had set sail.

The morning of the day after the sailing, the people of Jamestown whom one happened to meet on the road had a strange expression of countenance, and I doubt not that a man skilled in such matters could have read as truly the signs of an eruption of those forces of human passion in the hearts of men as of an earthquake by the belching forth of smoke and fire from the mouth of a volcano.

Everybody looked at his neighbor with either a glare of doubt and wariness or with covert understanding, and some there were who had a pale seriousness of demeanor from having a full comprehension of the situation and of what might come of it, though not in the least drawing back on that account, and some were all flushed and glowing with eagerness and laughing from sheer delight in danger and daring, and some were like stolid beasts of the field watching the eye of a master, ready at its wink to leap forth to the strain of labor or fury. Many of these last were of our English laborers, whom I held in some sort of pity, and doubt as to whether it were just and merciful to draw them into such a stew kettle, for in truth many of them had not a pound of tobacco to lose by the navigation act and no more interest in the uprising than had the muskets stacked in Major Robert Beverly's first wife's tomb. Yet, I pray, what can men do without tools, and have not tools some glory of their own which we take small account of and yet which may be a recompense to them?

Early that morning the news spread that Colonel Kemp of the Gloucester militia and a troop of horse and foot had been sent secretly against some plant cutters in Gloucester county who had arisen before us and had taken prisoners some twenty-two caught in the act. The news of the sending came first, I think, from Major Robert Beverly, the clerk of the assembly, who had withheld the knowledge for some time, inasmuch as he disliked the savor of treachery, but being in his cups that night before at Barry Upper Branch out it came. 'Twas Dick Barry who told me. I fell in with him and Captain Jaynes on the Jamestown road that morning. "Colonel Kemp hath ridden against the rioters in Gloucester with foot and horse, by order of the general court, and Beverly hath been knowing to it all this time," he said gloomily.

Then he added that a man who served on two sides had no strength for either, and one who had raised his hand against Bacon had best been out of the present cause. But Captain Jaynes swore with one of his broadsides of mighty oaths that 'twas best as 'twas, since Beverly had some influence over the militia, and that he was safe enough not to turn traitor with his great store of tobacco at stake, and that should the court proceed to extremes with the Gloucester plant cutters such a flame would leap to life in Virginia as would choke England with the smoke of its burning.

We knew no more than the fact of the sending, but that afternoon came riding into Jamestown Colonel Kemp with a small body of horse, having left the rest and the foot in Gloucester, there to suppress further disorder, and with him, bound to their saddles, some twenty-two prisoners, glaring about them with defiant faces and covered with dust and mire and some with blood.

Something there was about that awful glow of red on face, on hand or soaking through homespun sleeve or waistcoat that was like the waving of a battleflag or the call of a trumpet. Such a fury awoke in us who looked on as never was, and the prisoners had been then and there torn from their horses and set free had it not been for the consideration that undue precipitation might ruin the main cause.

But the sight of human blood shed in a righteous cause is the spur of the brave and goads him to action beyond all else. Quite silent we kept when that troop rode past us on their way to prison, though we were a gathering crowd not only of some of the best of Virginia, but some of her worst and most uncontrolled of indenture white slaves and convicts; but something there must have been in our looks which gave heart to those who rode bound to their horses, for one and then another turned and looked back at us, and I trow got some hope.

However, before the night fairly fell, twenty of the prisoners, upon giving assurance of penitence, were discharged, and but two, the ringleaders, were committed and were in the prison. The twenty, being somewhat craven-hearted, and some of them indisposed by wounds, were on their ways homeward when we were afield.

We waited for the moon to be up, which was an hour later that night. I was all equipped in good season, and was stealing forth secretly, lest any see me, for I wished not to alarm the household, nor if possible to have any one aware of what I was about to do, that they might be acquit of blame through ignorance, when I was met in the threshold of an unused door by Mary Cavendish. And here will I say, while marveling at it greatly, that the excitement of a great cause, which calls for all the enthusiasm and bravery of a man, doth, while it not for one moment alters the truth and constancy of his love, yet allay for the time his selfish thirst for it.

While I was ready as ever to die for Mary Cavendish, and while the thought of her was as ever in my inmost soul,

The troop on their way to prison

yet that effervescence of warlike spirit within me had rendered me not forgetful, but somewhat unwatchful of a word and a look of hers. And for the time being that sad question of our estates, which forbade more than our loves, had seemed to pale in importance before this matter of maybe the rising or falling of a new empire. Heart and soul was I in this cause and gave myself the rein as I had longed to do for the cause of Nathaniel Bacon.

But Mary met me at the northern door, which opened directly on a locust thicket and was little used, and stood before me, with her beautiful face as white as a lily, but a brave light in her eyes.

"Where go you, Harry?" she whispered.

Then I, not knowing her fully and fearing lest I disquiet her, answered evasively somewhat about hunting and Sir Humphrey. Some reply of that tenor was necessary, as I was, besides my knife for the tobacco cutting, armed to the teeth and booted to my middle. But there was no deceiving Mary Cavendish. She seized both my hands, and I trow for the minute in that brave maiden soul of hers the selfishness of our love passed as well as with me.

"I pray thee, Harry, cut down the tobacco on Laurel Creek first," she whispered, "as I would were I a man. Oh, I would I were a man! Harry, promise me that thou wilt cut down first the tobacco on my plantation of Laurel Creek."

But I had made up my mind to touch neither that nor the tobacco on Drake Hill, lest in some way the women of the Cavendish family be implicated.

"There be enough and more than enough for tonight," I answered and would have passed, but she would not let me.

"Harry," she cried so loud that I feared for listening ears, "if you cut not down my tobacco, then will I myself! Harry, promise me!"

No love nor fear for me was in her eyes as she looked at me, only that enthusiasm for the cause of liberty, and I loved her better for it, if that could be. A man or woman who is but a bond slave to love and incapable of aught but the longing for it is but a poor lover.

"I tell thee, Harry, cut down the plants on Laurel Creek!" she cried again, and I answered, to appease her, not daring violent contradiction lest I rouse her to some desperate act, this wild, young maid with Nathaniel Bacon's hair in the locket against her heart and as fiery blood as his in her veins, that it should come in good time, but that I was under the leadership of others and not my own.

"Then as soon as may be, Harry," she persisted, "for sure I should die of shame were my plants standing and the others cut; and, Harry, sure it could not be at all were it not for my fine gowns which the Golden Horn brought over from England!"

With that she laughed, and stood aside to let me pass, but suddenly, as I touched her in the narrow way, her mood changed, and the woman in her became uppermost, though not to her shaking. But she caught hold of my right arm with her two little hands and pressed her fair cheek against my shoulder with that modest boldness of a maid when she is assured of love, and whispered, "Harry, if the militia is ordered out they say they will not fire, but—if thou be wounded, Harry, 'tis I will nurse thee, and no other, and—Harry, cut all the plants that thou art able before they come."

Then she let me go, and I went forth thinking that here was a helpmeet for a soldier in such times as these, and how I gloried in her because she held her love as one with glory. Round to the stable for my horse I stole, and it was very dark, with a soft smother of darkness because of a heavy mist, and the moon not up, and I had backed my horse out of his stall and was about to mount him before I was aware of a dark figure lurking in shadow, and made out by the long sweep of the garments that it was a woman. I paused, and looked intently into the shadow, where she stood so silently that she might have deceived me had it not been for a flutter of her cloak in a stray wind.

"Who goes there?" I called out softly, but I knew well enough. I knew well enough it was Catherine Cavendish, and indeed I marveled that I had gotten thus far without meeting her. She stepped forward with no more ado when I accosted her, and spoke, but with great caution.

"What do you, Master Wingfield?" she whispered.

"I go on my own business an it please you, madam," I answered, something curtly, and I have since shamed myself with the memory of it, for she was a woman.

"It pleases me not, nor my grandmother, that one of her household should go forth on any errand of mystery at such a time as this, when whispers have reached us of another insurrection," she replied. "Master Wingfield, I demand to know, in the name of my Grandmother Cavendish, the purpose of your riding forth in such fashion."

"And that, madam, I refuse to tell you," I replied, bowing low.

"You presume too greatly on your privileges," she burst out. "You think because my grandmmother holds you in such strange favor that she seems to forget, to forget"—

"That I am a convict, madam," I finished for her, with another low bow.

"Finish it as you will, Master Wingfield," she said haughtily, "but you think wrongly that she will countenance treason to the king in her own household, and 'tis treason that is brewing tonight."

"Madam," I whispered, "if you love your grandmother and value her safety you will remain in ignorance of this."

Then she caught me by the arm with such a nervous ardor that never would I have known her for the Catherine Cavendish of late years.

"Harry, you shall not go," she whispered. "I say you shall not! I—I—will go to my grandmother. I will have the militia out. Harry, I say you shall not go!"

But then my blood was up. "Madam," I said, "go I shall, and if you acquaint your grandmother 'twill be to her possible undoing, and yours and your sister's, since the having one of the rioters in your own household will lay you open to suspicion. Then, besides, your sister's bringing over of the arms may be traced to her if the matter be agitated."

Then truly the feminine soul of this woman leaped to the surface with no more ado.

"Oh, Harry!" she cried out. "I care not for my grandmother, nor my sister, nor the king, nor Nathaniel Bacon, nor aught, nor aught— I fear, I fear— Oh, I fear lest thou be killed, Harry!"

"Lest my dead body be brought home to thy door and the accusation of having furnished a traitor to the king be laid to thee, madam?" I said, for not one whit believed I in her love for me. But she only sobbed in a distracted fashion.

"Fear not, madam," I said. "If the militia be out and I fall, it will go hard that I die before I have time to forswear myself yet again for the sake of thy family. But I pray thee keep to thyself for the sake of all."

JAPANESE IN THE FIELD

A Russian's Observations of the Little Brown Soldiers.

THEIR ENDURANCE REMARKABLE

Some Infantry Regiments, He Says, Are Capable of Marching About Thirty-six Miles a Day, Going as Fast as Cavalry—The Soldiers Not Overloaded, as the Russians Are. Coats of Mail Also Worn.

Niemirovitch Dantchenko, a Russian journalist, contributes to the Revue Russe some interesting observations of the Japanese soldiers.

"The particulars," he says, "furnished by the Chinese concerning the endurance of certain Japanese regiments are not imaginary. Some of the infantry regiments of Japan are capable of marching about thirty-six miles a day, going as fast as cavalry. These regiments are composed of men who before being soldiers were rickshaw men—that is to say, drivers and horses at the same time, their trade being to carry people in small hand vehicles as rapidly as possible. If such men could run a whole day without stoppages, dragging a loaded vehicle, what cannot they do when they drag nothing and carry very little on their shoulders?

"Japanese soldiers have, indeed, a superiority over our soldiers in that they are not overloaded. While one of our infantry soldiers is carrying an equipment weighing forty kilograms and seventy-three rounds of ammunition, to which must be added at least seven pounds of personal effects, which promptly tires him, the Japanese soldier has the larger part of his ammunition and effects placed on carts which follow the detachment. The Japanese, therefore, is cool and ready for the fight, even after a long march.

"I have had several opportunities of watching the Japanese descend the mountains. As soon as the heights are occupied by a line of tirailleurs, the main body of the troops runs down slope.

"'How fortunate they are!' say our soldiers, with envy. 'It's easy for them to perform those feats. They have no ammunition on their backs, and they have comfortable shoes. With our sacks weighing on our shoulders and our heavy boots on our feet, we could never run as they do. We would crush ourselves against the rocks or roll down the precipices.'

"At the place where the descent would take several hours for our soldiers it takes only a few minutes for the Japanese. Moreover, it is impossible for our soldiers to take good aim because the Japanese come down the mountain like an avalanche and more quickly than a torrent.

"What astonishes me greatly is that all this should have escaped the attention of our military agents who lived in Japan before the war. Did they not say that the Japanese had insufficient cavalry, quite inferior to ours? That cavalry has been found very sufficient, and it is magnificent. Similar errors of judgment were made at the time of the Russo-Turkish war.

"According to our military agents the Russians merely needed an army corps to enter triumphantly into Constantinople. Before the present war I heard Colonel Vannosky, who lived for a long while in Japan as military agent, say:

"'A war with Japan would be but child's play. Victory would not cost us much, and to win that victory we would not have to make great efforts. Japan is a weak and pitiful adversary.'

"It is only recently that we have learned some very interesting details. We did not know one month ago that the Japanese officers and soldiers wore a kind of coat of mail. This explains why bayonets have little effect on the Japanese and why the sabers of our Cossacks are all notched after a fight, while their blows have done no harm to the enemy."

Japanese as Farmers.

The Japanese have surprised the world as fighters; but, according to Harold Bolce, they are also the most remarkable agricultural nation in the world, says the London Globe. They have only 10,000 square miles of arable land. An automobile going fifty miles an hour could skirt this area in eleven hours. Yet it supports an imperial nation—the rising power of the far east. Experts admit that the scientific skill of Japanese agriculturists is unapproached. "Patient diligence, with knowledge of the chemistry of the soil and the physiology of plants, have yielded results that have astounded the most advanced agriculturists in western nations."

Characteristic of Russia.

Henry Roberts of Hartford, the Republican nominee for governor of Connecticut, evinced great interest in the disposition which the United States government would make of the Russian cruiser Lena, tied up in the harbor of San Francisco, says the New York Times.

"Experts have examined the vessel," said one of the nominee's lieutenants, "and report the hull in poor condition and entirely unseaworthy."

"Another Russian stronghold found weak," commented Roberts, with the terseness of a newspaper headline writer.

Senator Hoar's Favorite Dishes.

In his private life Senator Hoar was simple in the extreme. New England dishes, baked beans, fishballs and the like, were what he most liked. To each successive boarding place he went he carried a careful list of recipes for these dishes and insisted on their presence.

ONE OF PAYNE'S HABITS.

Late Postmaster General's Bluff to Stand Off Newsboys.

The late Henry C. Payne, postmaster general of the United States, had a habit of carrying a folded newspaper in his hand when walking the streets of Washington, says the New York Press. Entering the capitol one day, Senator Spooner asked Mr. Payne for a look at his paper, saying he was interested in a bit of current news.

"Why, this is a couple of weeks old," said Senator Spooner, returning the paper in disgust.

"I don't carry the paper to read," explained the postmaster general. "It's just a bluff. When I carry a newspaper the newsboys don't bother me."

Postmaster General Payne was a master of the epigram. He demonstrated that fact when he was questioned about some charges that had been brought against one of the officials of his department, says Collier's Weekly. Shrewd political organizer and manager, for many years one of the confidential advisers of several administrations, systematic, quick and unhesitating in his own private business policies, his command of incisive speech on occasions and aptitude at epigrammatic replies are not to be wondered at.

"It is not clear who brought these charges," said Mr. Payne.

"They were worked up by Charlotte Smith," suggested his interviewer. "She is a reformer who is a familiar figure at the capitol."

"Charlotte Smith?" repeated the postmaster general. "Yes, I know her. Fathers everything, mothers nothing!"

Old residents of Shelburne Falls still remember Mr. Payne when he was a boy as an unusually bright chap, rather undersized, with bushy hair and a quick, alert manner, says the Philadelphia Press. He was studious and a hard worker, and at the age of fifteen began to look about for a position to help pay for his livelihood.

It was then that he entered Uncle Sam's postal service. He told the postmaster of the village that for a dollar a week he would be at the postoffice early every morning, would sweep and dust the place and do such errands as were to be done before the hour for going to school.

BIG NUGGET FROM KLONDIKE

Proposal to Make It Feature of New Crown For King Edward.

Klondike has a project for a special crown for King Edward, according to a Seattle (Wash.) dispatch to the New York Tribune. The largest nugget ever found in the Canadian El Dorado has been brought to Dawson and is on exhibition at Seattle. The proposal is made to buy it by popular subscription from the owners and forward it to King Edward, with the request that it be used as the principal piece in a crown to contain gems and precious metals from all parts of Britain's empire.

The nugget weighs 85.43 ounces, and there is not a particle of quartz in the piece. The intrinsic value is $1,280, but the owners hold it for more because of its size and purity.

It was found by R. C. McCollom on a claim owned by McCollom and George Quirle. The nugget is flat and looks like a rock from a creek bed.

The President Would Do.

While James Jeffrey Roche was having a chat with President Roosevelt in the White House a few days ago the telephone bell was ringing somewhat persistently, says the Boston Herald. There being no attendant at hand, the president excused himself and went to answer the repeated call. This is the conversation that took place on the line, according to the testimony of the distinguished gentleman at the president's end of it:

"Well, what is it?"

"Hello, is Archie there?"

"No, he's not."

"Who's this I'm talking to?"

"The president."

"Well, you'll do. Tell Archie to come over and play ball."

And the president proceeded to execute the order as directed.

An Autumn Lyric.

All hail to thee, calm, lackadaisical season
When woodlands and studies are equally brown!
And for some very strong, indescribable reason
The tired summer boarders return back to town.

The fat seaside boniface gleefully jingles
His profits in gold as he welcomes the sale—
And the college-bred waiter delightfully mingles
Once more with his set in the campus of Yale.

The travel stained actor, with never a vest on,
Parades the Rialto once more in his prime,
But his brain is perplexed by the serious question
Of how to lay out his penultimate dime.

The Count de Titano is back to the city;
His conquests were numerous by the seashore.
Now he merrily trolls a gay Florentine ditty
And lathers his customers—same as before.

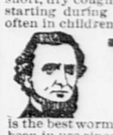

Now Strephon and Phyllis are beauteously wreathing
The chaplets they wove in long years ago,
And in clove scented accents the lover is breathing
His passion divine—when the gaslight is low.

Farewell, summer season—the funny man, sighing,
Lays by the old "chestnuts" unsold till next year;
The leaves, with the gay season's fashions, are dying,
So, boys, get your overcoats—autumn is here.

—Eugene Geary in New York Herald.

WATSON SCORNS HIM.

Shows Contempt For Parker In His Letter of Acceptance. Dodges Race Issues.

Candidate Describes Hill's Man as Lacking In Manhood and the Qualities of Leadership.

In his letter of acceptance, issued last week, Thomas E. Watson, the Populist candidate for president, says in part:

"Much abuse has been heaped upon me because more time was devoted by me to denunciation of Parker than of Roosevelt. The reason is obvious enough. Roosevelt is a straight cut Republican, who declares boldly for Republican principles, defiantly defending existing conditions. To attack him is a short, easy job. He is so conspicuous and stationary a target that no one who wished to take a shot at him could possibly miss the mark.

"He is not in ambush; he is behind no 'blind;' he stands out in the open, and he says to his enemies: 'Here I am—a Republican who stands pat on all existing conditions; if you want a fight, come on.' Now, I can understand a Republican like that, and, while I would love to make my battleax ring on his helmet until one of us went down in political defeat and death, yet I could respect him all the while as a foeman worthy of any man's steel. Mr. Roosevelt will get Republican votes and no others. He is not seeking the support of Bryan Democrats upon false pretenses. He is not playing a confidence game on the negro question. He is not attempting to win Jeffersonians by a sham adherence to Jeffersonian principles. In short, there is no danger that Jeffersonian Democrats will vote for Roosevelt upon the assumption that he is a Jeffersonian Democrat. There is no danger that Roosevelt will get a single vote to which I, as a Jeffersonian in principle, am entitled.

Parker Lacks Leadership.

"With Mr. Parker it is different. He is not a Jeffersonian Democrat, yet he seeks to secure the support of Jeffersonians. If he would speak out plainly and tell the people that he is in principle the same thing practically that Roosevelt is the Bryan Democrats would fall away from him by the million. I would then be enabled to organize such a party of revolt against the Republican rule as would sweep the country.

"His attitude is thoroughly disingenuous, profoundly lacking in true manhood and leadership. He was willing to stand upon the New York state platform which Mr. Bryan denounced as a dishonest platform. His position was so indefinite, so foxy, so entirely neutral, that Mr. Bryan declared to cheering thousands that Parker was 'absolutely unfit for the Democratic nomination,' and that 'nobody but an artful dodger' could stand upon that New York platform, which so much resembled its father, David B. Hill. I believe it was also in the same speeches that Mr. Bryan declared that a man should be willing to die for his convictions, which is also a very sound proposition.

Forced Parker's Telegram.

"By a dictatorial tone, amounting to menace, Judge Parker was driven by the New York World into the sending of the telegram which told the Democratic convention for the first time, and many hours after Parker had secured the nomination, that the gold standard was 'irrevocably fixed.'

"Neither then nor in any utterance afterward did he say that the gold standard was right until he had been shelled so vigorously by myself and others for having deserted the free silverites without saying they were wrong and having gone over to the gold standard without saying it was right. Even Judge Parker finally realized that the ground was caving under his feet and was literally driven to firmer footing. At last he has taken his place side by side with Roosevelt on the most deeply important issue before the people. * * *

Favors Liberal Pensions.

"Roosevelt stands in the open and dares Parker defiantly, almost mockingly, and Parker meekly stays out of the fight. In his formal letter of acceptance he says that he takes up the glove thrown at his feet, declaring that he will revoke that pension order No. 78.

"But in the same breath he hastens to admit that Roosevelt did precisely what he (Parker) thinks ought to be done. If elected he (Parker) will at once ask congress to do what Roosevelt has already done. Heavens! What a meek warrior is this! 'Roosevelt did the right thing, but not in the right way, and if you will elect me president I will do the same thing in the proper way!' Did any nominee ever seek the presidency on that kind of platform before?

Parker Dodges the Race Issues.

"When is he going to free those Philippines? He does not say. What is he going to do to the trusts? Will he deal drastically with the Standard Oil trust, which has coddled his political ambition for the last two years? What will he do to the sugar trust, which his campaign manager, Gorman, represents in the United States senate? On the negro question why has he been silent? Does he condemn Roosevelt for that Booker Washington lunch? Does he condemn the appointment of negroes to office? Why did he fail to make any reference whatever to that plank in the Republican platform which his running mate, Davis, says created a 'race issue?' The solid south is being kicked and cuffed into the support of Parker upon the ground that he differs from Roosevelt on the negro question. Before the south is dragooned into voting for the New Yorker and against her own son, hers in blood and sympathy and deathless devotion, ought not the New Yorker to be compelled to speak on this question? * * *

"When Dave Hill, Pat McCarren and August Belmont finished their work the Democratic bosses were so nearly nude that had it been a personal matter rather than political they could have been indicted for a 'notorious act of public indecency.' Able statesmen had undressed themselves in public. And now they are furiously angry with me because I am renewing the struggle which they abandoned. They resent the fact that some one else should try to do that which they were not willing to try to do.

Parker's Trust Advisers.

"They went to St. Louis with principles; they came back without them. They were clay in the hands of the Pat McCarrens of Standard Oil, Belmont of the Louisville and Nashville and Gorman of the sugar trust. The very first speech of the campaign was made in Brooklyn by Senator Bailey of Texas under the auspices of the Standard Oil company lobbyist, Pat McCarren. The chosen advisers of Mr. Parker are the men who led for the trusts and corporations when the taxpayers were looted during Cleveland's second administration. From Gorman, who reeks with the foulest trust legislation for twenty years, to Carlisle, who wrote the sugar schedule at the dictation of the sugar trust, and Belmont of the secret midnight bond deal down to Olney, who, in effect, advised the too willing Cleveland to lend the United States army to the Pullman Palace Car company in Chicago, the notorious old band of boodlers are there. * * *

"Every line of the platform seems to be in a tremble lest it should displease the beneficiaries of class legislation. Every tone of its quaking voice seems to say to the corporations, 'Don't be afraid; I won't hurt you.' With the anxious fear of Snug, the joiner, in 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' the apparent lion kindly dissipates the fear of his audience by assuring them in advance that its roar is only for stage purposes."

SENATOR DEPEW'S STORY.

Told at Reception at New York Republican Club to State Candidates.

It seems hard lines to say that the Democratic brother is not competent to conduct the business of this great state and ought not to be instrusted with these larger responsibilities which come with the construction of the barge canal, but I can tell you the reason why.

We all wondered during the Spanish-American war why it was that when the fleet at Santiago was about equal to ours it was sunk in twenty minutes, while ours received only one shot, and we all wondered that while the fleet at Manila was about equal to ours it was sunk in nineteen minutes and we received no shot.

People all over the world could not explain it, and the naval people at Washington had difficulty in finding out how it could have occurred. But coming on from Washington at the close of the last great victory I had as my fellow companion that delightful wit and most charming man and actor, old Joe Jefferson, and I said to him:

"I have been in Washington, and the naval experts cannot tell why it is that Cervera's fleet should have been lost in twenty minutes and not a shot hit our fleet, and the same thing happened at Manila bay."

And Mr. Jefferson said to me, "As an actor of fifty years' experience I can tell you—the Spaniards had not rehearsed."

The trouble with our Democratic brethren is that in the forty-four years since the war, having been in power only four years and in our state not having seen power for the last ten years, they have not rehearsed. [Applause.] And so the performance is not one upon which the people of the state of New York will lift the curtain to hiss the actors off the stage.

No Boom For Esopus.

[Special to the New York Times, Dem.]

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—When the name of Judge Alton B. Parker was first mentioned as a Democratic candidate for president, L. Wright, a wholesale liquor importer of New York, seeing the possibility of making money out of a hotel business at Esopus, which, he believed, would become the Mecca for a host of enthusiastic Democrats from all over the United States, obtained options on about all of the property in that quiet village.

Most of the options he secured were for six months, and in some instances only trifling sums were paid. When Judge Parker's nomination became a fact most of the villagers began to have regrets for their precipitancy. As the weeks went by and the great rush of Democratic pilgrims failed to materialize, however, there was a change of sentiment, and now the weight of opinion is that Mr. Wright's options will not make him or anybody very rich.

In the primary stages of the Parker boom Mr. Wright announced that he would erect a dining hall at Esopus to accommodate 1,500, with tents for the overflow. He shipped a great quantity of furniture there and also a large safe. This property was never unpacked and remains in storage at the dock and in private houses in the neighborhood. The big dining hall was never erected, and the local hostelries have proved ample to provide for all comers to date.

For Sake of Peace

By OTHO B. SEGNA

Copyright, 1904, by Otho B. Segna

"Mrs. Gray," whispered Alec Bruce "where is Peace?"

"In the studio."

"Alone?"

"Alone."

'Where are the other girls?"

"They are all out somewhere. Karl is"—

"Never mind. Just so they are not in the house. Mrs. Gray, if you have any mercy in your makeup keep everybody away from that studio for just one half hour. I've waited two years for this chance."

He hurried noiselessly up the stairs to the top floor of the Octagon, home of bachelor maids. The studio door was open, and Peace sat by the easel facing an unfinished painting of "Evangeline."

"Peace be unto this house," was his salutation as he salaamed orientally fashion, "and to me, Peace!"

She feigned absorption in her work.

"Must I remove my shoes?" still waiting at the door, holding a rose in his outstretched hand.

"Come you from Persia?" she queried, smiling.

"Surely, fair lady, and the rose—'tis the Persian rose of beauty and of love—to you a peace offering"

"I suppose you may come in,' grudgingly. "I really want the rose."

"'Tis yours, gentle maiden, likewise the heart of the Persian."

"That's not funny," severely.

"Nay, but 'tis truth."

"It's a beautiful morning for a walk," in a "no trespassing" tone.

"Oh, delightful!" chilled, but tenaciously hopeful. "Jack and I have been out looking at houses."

"How interesting!"

"Tell me truly, Peace, what did you think the other day when I actually forced old Jack to show his hand, like wise his heart?"

"I thought," vaguely, intuitively on the defensive, "I thought you knew—what you were about."

"I did," eagerly. "I feared he would never propose to Edith unless he was helped, and I was tired of waiting."

"Waiting?" with puzzled interest.

"Yes. You see, I was bound by a sacred promise, and I was growing desperate."

"I don't understand"—

"It was like this," pushing the Roman seat nearer the easel and assuming a nonchalance he was far from feeling—"you know, it's two years since Jack and I began calling here at the Octagon. Judge Graves introduced us—sort of vouched for our respectability—you may remember"—

"I remember," putting fresh colors on the palette.

"Well, in a few weeks Jack discovered that he was in love with Edith. I knew long before that I was in"—

"Kindly move a little, Mr. Bruce. I may spatter paint on your clothing,' coldly polite.

The Roman seat was moved back a little—a very little.

"Thank you. I don't often spatter, but accident, you know"—

"M—m, yes. Well, as I was saying,' strenuously endeavoring to regain lost ground, "Jack and I 'fessed to one another one night, and Jack was dreadfully gloomy over it," pausing, expecting a question.

The artist was intensely interested in adjusting with the brush a fold of Evangeline's gown.

"M—m, over his prospects, I mean. And when I told him that I was"—

"Please hand me that rag, Mr. Bruce, no, not that one, the oily one on the floor beside your seat. Thank you. I never before had so much trouble with drapery."

"You don't know what the word trouble means, Peace Gray. Now, I'll go on," firmly. "When I told Jack that I was in love he said that was all right for me. With my wealth I could propose at once, and I could be married within a month if I wanted to, while he, with his uncertain future, must wait an indefinite time before he could even let the girl know he cared for her."

"Well, he has now, and I hope they will be very happy," dismissing the subject with finality.

"Oh, they will," hurriedly, "and I told Jack—actually made a vow, in fact—that I'd never breathe a word of"— "You kept the secret faithfully, Mr Bruce. There, don't you like that drapery better?"

—"never breathe a word of my attachment," doggedly persevering, "until he was in a position to declare his And I've kept faith with Jack and strict guard over myself for two years Now," triumphantly, "I am free to speak"—

"Do you care to have the cross in the picture, Mr. Bruce? Many artists show a cross, half concealed in the shadowy suggestion of trees, just back of the figure of Evangeline. This is your commission, and any changes"—

"I wish you'd let me finish it," with apparent surrender.

"Finish the picture? Why, I didn't know you could paint."

"I can't, nor draw, but I can finish this picture to suit me. Peace, do you know she looks like you?"

"So the girls say," following his lead with evident relief.

"I wish she didn't look so sad."

"You couldn't expect anything else She cannot find her Gabriel."

"Some Evangelines won't look at Gabriel when he comes to them," gloomily.

"I'm curious to know how you would finish the picture," on guard again.

"Oh, I'd improve on Longfellow. I'd have Gabriel come and surprise her while she is sitting here. I'd have her seem glad to see him, and—and very glad to him, you know. I'd have him put his arms around her and kiss her—well, nine times, sure. And then I'd have them 'marry and live happy ever after,' as the old fashioned fairy tales always did."

"If I weren't afraid you'd spoil the picture," temptingly.

"Oh, no, I won't; I won't hurt it a bit," eagerly, a daring thought fascinating him with its possibilities. "You get me a big apron; I mustn't spoil my clothes."

Her absence was brief, but sufficient for his purpose. When she returned he waved his hand triumphantly toward the easel.

"There, Evangeline; your Gabriel has come and awaits your greeting."

She stepped nearer to the picture—a large, unmounted photograph of Bruce was placed on the easel close to the figure of Evangeline. She caught it up quickly, ignoring the significance of its position and of Alec's words.

"Oh, when did you have this? It is very good."

He came nearer, looking at the photograph over her shoulder.

"That's your Gabriel, Evangeline You must be good to him, you know Oh, Peace, don't put me off any longer You understand me—I want you for my wife, Peace. Why, Peace! Peace Peace, dearest, don't cry! What is the matter? What have I said to hurt you so?"

"Oh, Alec, I am so ashamed—so ashamed!"

"Here, sit here, Peace, and tell me all about it."

"Oh, Alec, I've been terribly jealous and I've thought hateful things about all the girls—Tillie first, then Martha and Kara and Kathleen—oh, I've hated them all!"

"M—m! This is pretty bad, Peace but I'll tell you what I've done. I've laid plans"—lowering his voice to a tragical whisper—"deep, dark plans to do away with every man except Jack who ever came to the Octagon. I meant to smother Coleridge under a ton of his own orchids and press the breath out of Judge Graves with a stack of law books and drown Abe Adams in a 'flood of eloquence,' and as for that impetuous westerner—I thought it was you he wanted—I could have torn him limb from limb! You see, we're dangerous—too dangerous to be at large We'll have to marry for the sake of peace."

"Not for the sake of Alec?" archly.

"Oh, Peace, for my sake, and, Peace a double wedding with Jack and Edith"—

"That half hour, Alec Bruce," called Mrs. Gray's voice from the hall, "is greatly overdone, and"—

"Not a bit of it, Auntie Gray. This half hour is rare. There'll never be another like it."

"I thought I'd tell you the girls are coming—all four of them"—

"Keep them away, auntie; keep them away from me. You know their belligerent, quarrelsome dispositions. And I have determined that at any cost I must and will have Peace!"

And the chronicles of the Octagon record that he did.

A Good Natured Wife.

An English rustic whose wife was blessed with a remarkably even temper went over the way to a neighbor one evening and said:

"Neighbor, I just should like to see my wife cross for once. I've tried all I know, and I can't make her cross no way."

"You can't make your wife cross?' said his neighbor. "I wish I could make mine anything else. But you just do what I tell you, and if that won't act nothing will. You bring her in some night a lot of the crookedest sticks for the fire you can get—them as won't lie in no form—and see how she makes out then."

The pieces of wood were accordingly brought in, as awkward and crooked and contrary as could be found. The man went away early to work and at noon returned to see the result of his experiment.

He was greeted with a smiling face and the gentle request:

"Tom, do bring me in some more of those crooked sticks if you can find them. They do just fit around the kettle so nicely!"

Agamemnon's Tomb.

Agamemnon, it has been claimed, is a glorious myth, but those who have felt the charm of Homer's matchless epic telling of his achievements at Troy will be loath to believe it. Let us keep inviolate our belief in the heroes You may see today Agamemnon's tomb at Mycenae, Greece—Mycenae, to which he, as king, returned triumphant from the conquest of Ilium, bringing with him, as Æschylus tells in the greatest of Greek tragedies, the fair Cassandra. Agamemnon did not die of old age, covered with honors, for that was not the popular end of heroes in those strenuous days. Homer says he was slain by Ægisthus, lover of his queen wife, Æschylus tells that Queen Clytemnestra killed both Agamemnon and Cassandra.

A True Portrait.

The widow was taking her first look at the bust of her beloved husband The clay was still damp. "Pray examine it well, madam," said the sculptor. "Is there is anything wrong I can alter it."

The widow looked at it with a mixture of sorrow and satisfaction.

"It is just like him," she said, "a perfect portrait—his large nose—the sign of goodness." Here she burst in to tears. "He was so good! Make the nose a little larger!"

TEACHING BY SONGS.

Chicago School Trustees Adopt "Cultural" Melodies For Pupils.

The schoolboy's nature is to be softened by music, says the Chicago Tribune. Songs have been adopted by the Chicago school board calculated to inspire in him a love of animals and nature. He will sing about the autumn leaves, the squirrel, the hungry spider, the wren and the robin.

The seeds of patriotism will be sown by songs of inspiring measure. All the songs to be sung in the schools are "cultural" and are intended to refine the tastes of the pupils and convey to them unconsciously a sense of the "joy of living." The list of songs adopted for use in the schools during the next year was made up with great care.

The first grade songs are divided into three classes, autumn songs, winter and Christmas songs and spring songs. Included in the autumn list are such songs as "Fall's Leaves," "Little Gypsy Dandelion," "The Squirrel's Tea," "The Hungry Spider," "The Ponies," "The Bugle," "Signs of the Weather" and "The Moon."

Some of the winter and Christmas songs for the first grade deal with the following subjects: "Winter," "Snowing and Blowing," "Snowbirds," "The Sleigh Ride," "On a Snowy Day," "The Snow," "The Trees," "The Windmill," "Christmas," "The Soldier's Song," "Sing a Song of Workshops" and "A Prayer."

The spring songs include the following: "Dairy Maids," "May Is Coming," "Wrens and Robins," "The Butterfly," "Out In the Country," "My Dolly," "The Drum," "The Mill Wheel," "The Wind," "Song to Venus," "Dew Drops," "When the Stars" and "Spring Is Coming."

The autumn songs for the second grade bear such titles as "Little Doves," "The Pet Lamb," "Song of the Bluebird," "Indian Summer," "The Woodpecker," "October," "Winds of Evening," "The Squirrel," "The Apple Tree" and "A Child's Thanksgiving."

The list for winter includes songs dealing with the Eskimos and such like. In this list is also included "Hark, What Mean Those Holy Voices?" and "Heavenly Father." The spring songs of this grade include songs about the rain, winds, the swallows, the robin, Maytime, the morning glory, the violet. The list for the eight grades contains nearly 200 songs. In the upper grades the songs become heavier and more difficult to learn. "Hail Columbia," and nearly all of the national airs are prescribed for these grades.

Many of these songs are to be taught during the winter to the thousands of foreigners attending the free evening schools. It is urged that these foreign born love music and will readily take up the American national airs.

MORGAN'S KISS FOR DOANE.

Affectionate Greeting Between the Bishop and Financier at Albany.

When J. P. Morgan's special train arrived at Albany the other day, four hours late, it was met by Bishop Doane of Albany, Mrs. Doane, Coadjutor Bishop Nelson and Dean Talbot of All Saints' cathedral, says the New York World.

When Bishop Doane and Mr. Morgan met they embraced and kissed each other. The demonstration of brotherly affection was seen by a number of clergymen of All Saints' cathedral, Superintendent Harrington of the New York Central and one or two others. The clergymen regarded the greeting as a matter of form, but the laymen were greatly surprised at the sight of the bishop and the noted financier in affectionate embrace.

When the train pulled into the station the bishop hurried up the platform to the middle car. There he caught sight of Mr. Morgan, who was stepping on to the platform of the car. Before Mr. Morgan could reach the steps the bishop had bounded up and had his arm around his shoulders. Mr. Morgan embraced the bishop, and the two kissed each other on the cheek. They then went nimbly down the steps to the station platform.

After spending an hour in Albany the party left over the West Shore.

Mrs. Fish's Color Fad.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish affects one particular color for a season and follows it as closely as possible in her entire wardrobe. The last was an attack of yellow, which some of her friends with brutal frankness called "perfectly hideous." But yellow has lost its charm, and red is now her choice, says the New York Press. "It is so warm and rich for winter," she says. Her tailor has received orders to make all her gowns of red material, and her hats will be of that hue. One afternoon gown is of cardinal taffeta, with a waist made entirely of smocking, and the long waisted effect adds to her height. Red shoes, gloves, umbrellas, stockings, petticoats, even handkerchiefs, have been ordered. Her boudoir is being finished in red, and she is having her garnets and rubies reset. It is said that at her "scarlet ball" in Newport she appeared to such advantage that she immediately determined to have a red wardrobe and accessories to match.

A "Gospel Garden."

Captain J. N. Filar of the Evanston Volunteers of America is to establish a "gospel garden" at the end of the Evanston electric line, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. Details of the plan have not yet been perfected, but they include merry-go-rounds, giant swings, lemonade booths, long, comfortable seats under the trees and many attractions of the beer garden, with the beer left out. Evangelistic services are to be held at regular intervals.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

People do not need to go to the White mountains for attractive scenery. What can be more beautiful than the Blue hills with the multi-colored foliage of the trees? Last Sunday many people from all the surrounding towns enjoyed this scenery and eagerly gathered the chestnuts which may be found there in abundance. Many of us do not realize the attractive places right in our own borders but think we must travel hundreds of miles to reach them.

We would like to call the attention of readers of the Ledger who buy of newsboys to a few facts. The boys are charged for every paper they take out and the next day have to pay for all papers not returned to us. If you do not pay the boy for your paper he has to advance the money and trust to your honesty to reimburse him. On Mondays every boy in our employ is paid for delivering Ledgers to our customers, and he also has to settle in full for his personal customers. Thus you can readily see if you are careless in paying promptly for your paper the boy suffers.

Several good boys have had to give up carrying papers because they have a long list of customers who do not pay them and they cannot afford to advance the money. It is a rule of the office that a boy must not trust for more than a week and then on his responsibility.

It would hardly seem possible that anyone would be mean enough to cheat hardworking little newsboys, but so many cases have been brought to our attention lately that perhaps a little enlightenment will be of benefit to patron and newsboy.

Lutheran Reunion.

A reunion of all the confirmation classes of the Swedish Lutheran church was held last evening. It was held at the church on Granite street and was largely attended. During the first part of the evening there was a pleasing literary and musical program. This included a dialogue by Miss Cathrina Hultin and Miss Josephine Lawson, duet by Miss Annie Ryden and Miss Ellen Nordquist, declamation by C. R. Wallin and singing by a choir from the confirmation classes.

The sermon was by Rev. Dr. C. A. Evald who spoke from these words "What does it profit a man if he gain the world, but loses his soul."

Coffee and refreshments were served.

Good Flying Machine.

During the heaviest of the gale yesterday afternoon a middle-aged gentleman came along Hancock street, his head bent forward to break the force of the wind. When opposite the residence of Dr. Garey a sudden gust of wind lifted the stiff hat from his head and sent it flying upward like a balloon. High up into the air it sailed until it reached the topmost branch of a tree in front of the doctor's residence. Here it caught and hung, far out of reach and impossible to get down. The gentleman looked at it, muttered something to himself that sounded like a prayer, then continued on his way, his bald head exposed to the elements. This morning the hat was still in the tree.

Great Religions.

A meeting of the Quincy Branch Alliance will be held in the parlor of First Church, City Square, Monday, October 24, at 3 o'clock.

The subject for study this season is "Great Religions" and at this meeting the teachings of Zoroaster and Mohammed will be presented. Mrs. Wilson Marsh is the committee in charge, which insures an interesting method of treating the topic.

All women are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

Mr. Robert Q. McDonnell of Barre, Vermont, is in Quincy on a business trip, making his headquarsers at The Greenleaf.

HOSPITAL WEEK.

Committees Selected for the Work.

Increase in Patients Reported.

Also an Increase in Expense Over Last Year.

The inclement weather prevented as large an attendance as usual at the meeting in Colonial hall to arrange for the annual Hospital week collections.

President William B. Rice presided, and after the records of previous meetings had been read, R. D. Chase the treasurer gave a brief outline of the financial standing of the corporation.

The income for the year would be about $10,000. The expenditures have usually been something like $12,000 but they would be a little larger this year. Up to Oct. 1, $9,000 had been expended, and as there was $1500 in unpaid bills he thought the expenditures of the year would amount to about $13,500 so that it would be necessary to raise $3,200 more.

President Rice said the meeting was called to provide the machinery to go through the work this year. It ought to be easier this year, as the names of all those who had contributed last year had been reserved. If $3,200 was collected, the $1,000 raised by the ladies could be used to reduce the indebtedness.

Dr. Gordon thought the custom of collections of the past few years a good one. We have had more patients this year than last but not so many paying ones.

Upon motion, James F. Burke was elected a chairman of the general committee on collections.

Mr. Burke with Fred B. Rice and N. G. Nickerson were appointed a committee to retire and bring in a list of chairmen from the several wards.

While they were out Frank E. Parlin superintendent of schools, was called upon. Mr. Parlin said this was the first meeting of the kind he had attended. He regarded the Hospital as one of the best forms of benevolence the city had. One that should appeal to every citizen. As the good work becomes more generally known the contributions will be larger and easier to collect. It had his hearty support in thought and effort.

President Rice believed the people would take care of the Hospital. What we need is a duplicate of such work as Mr. Parlin can give us. When the needs are brought home to the people, as he could bring them, we shall get abundant funds. He hoped the endowment fund would increase so that the house-to-house collections would be unnecessary. He believed it better that the money needed come from the general public than from one individual.

Treasurer Chase said we have a right to expect things will eventually run more easily. There seems to be something of an indifferent growth. There are important matters in this work that are neglected unless the people are aroused. It is usually overcome by agitation. The every day work of the hospital is not brought before the people. A more frequent and briefer report would be better. It would seem strange if 5,000 voters could not provide $5,000. Possibly some other method than the present might be better.

The committee reported the following as chairmen from the several wards, which was adopted:

Ward One, —E. H. Angier, D. E. Wadsworth, W. M. Packard.

Ward Two,—Joseph L. Whiton, Jr., Eugene R. Stone, George A. Sidelinger.

Ward Three,—George H. Field, Andrew Milne, Henry McGrath, Alexander Clark.

Ward Four,—W. E. Badger, J. C. Ballou, E. J. Sandberg, James H. Elcock.

Ward Five,—Frank E. Parlin, Frank A. Page, Dr. A. P. Thompson.

Ward Six,—Harry W. Read, Roger H. Wilde, Theodore Parker.

The date for the Hospital week was left with the general cemmittee.

The meeting then adjourned. The general committee is to meet at the residence of President Rice in the near future to arrange for the Hospital week collections.

HOME FROM ABROAD.

Rev. Robert W. Peach Warmly Welcomed by His Church People.

Many Quincy people will be pleased to hear from Rev. Robert Westly Peach, for many years the successful pastor at the Water Street Presbyterian church, who resigned in 1900. The Daily Courier of Camden, N. J., said in part in its issue of Wednesday:

Wonderfully improved in health and with a heart overflowing with gladness at being back in dear old America once more and with gratitude to his loyal congregation for its kindly solicitude, Rev. Robert Westly Peach, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, is home again from a ten months tour abroad.

The reverend gentleman arrived at Philadelphia on Monday morning, after anchoring in the river all night, on the American liner Havorford, from Liverpool, England. At the dock they were met by Mrs. Peach, wife of Rev. Mr. Peach, and a committee of reception, in carriages, and warm and hearty greetings exchanged. The returned pastor was escorted to his home at 426 Benson street, where his family of four children awaited his coming with gladsome expectancy.

Last night Pastor Peach was tendered a reception by the congregation of the Second Presbyterian church in the chapel. The chapel was tastefully decorated in honor of the joyous occasion and a splendid orchestra enhanced the pleasure of the happy event with select instrumental music. There was a very large audience present. Addresses of welcome home were made by Rev. Dr. Charles B. Austin, of Haddonfield, acting pastor in Mr. Peach's absence for four months, and S. Turner Foster, of Princeton, who officiated to date.

In reply, Pastor Peach spoke with great feeling. To the church, its officers and societies and the preachers who officiated in his absence, he extended credit and praise for their vigorous and successful work maintained all these months.

During his nearly ten months tour Mr. Peach visited Italy, Switzerland, Germany, France and England, the major portion of his sojourn abroad being spent in Italy and Switzerland. While at Naples he ascended Mount Vesuvius, recently in violent eruption, and stood on the edge of the historic destructive and yawning crater.

The eloquent and energetic young clergyman has been much benefitted in health and spirits by his long rest and tour.

While tarrying abroad, Mr. Peach heeded the Biblical injunction, and raised a beard, which, while very becoming, does not efface former recollections of his genial presence.

Rev. Mr. Peach has been pastor of the Second Presbyterian church for five years and in that time has gained the devoted friendship and unswerving loyalty of his large flock. The high standing and great success achieved by the church are proofs of both the energy of its people and loyalty to its pastor, supports which enabled it to flourish in his absence.

Scrofula

It is commonly inherited.

Few are entirely free from it.

Pale, weak, puny children are afflicted with it in nine cases out of ten, and many adults suffer from it.

Common indications are bunches in the neck, abscesses, cutaneous eruptions, inflamed eyelids, sore ears, rickets, catarrh, wasting, and general debility.

Public Burial Places.

Editors of the Daily Ledger:

The appropriation for this department of the city the past few years has been $4,800. With this sum the work has been done by close figuring by the superintendent and still leaves a balance. There has been no asking for more money as there is in most of the city departments. Such a man ought to be trusted. Is it not so?

The people can plainly see that such a man is not trusted when the city council appropriates $3,000 for the Sea street improvement. The work has been begun moving the wall to the Sea street line. Was the superintendent consulted? Why was not the wall left where it is instead of paying for labor doubled? where the same men in one-half the time could put in an edge stone with iron fence on top. This could be run on either side of drive. Without a fence there would be money enough left to grade the ground from the wall to top of the edge stone. If the appropriation was spent in this way the city would be proud of the improvement, and the people could see their money. This cemetery will need a chapel before a great while and would not the entrance be the place for it? Where is it to be if not there? out in the woods? It should be handy to the street cars and for the people who go to the cemetery to hold a funeral on a cold winter's day, when the mercury is down to zero, if the carriages cannot reach the lot where the funeral is to be held.

Will the proper authorities answer this question, Why does not this work come under the superintendent of the cemetery instead of the Commissioner of Public Works? This man has enough money to handle and it looks as though they wanted to put more in his hands. Why?

TEXTILE SCHOOLS.

Newspaper Women Pleased with Work at Lowell.

Those members of the New England Woman's Press Association, who failed to avail themselves of the opportunity of the excursion arranged for them by Miss Marian T. Hosmer, on Tuesday, October eighteenth, have much to regret. The day was perfect, through a country rich in historic interest, abounding in beautiful views and places. The electric trip to Lowell is well worth taking for itself and the more so when as at this time, all places of interest are pointed out and described graphically.

The Lowell Textile school is always open to visitors and as the N. E. W. P. A. was expected, arrangements were made to give them every attention. Lunch was enjoyed soon after the arrival of the party and then several hours were pleasantly and profitably employed in visiting the several departments.

There are four regular diploma courses: 1, Cotton Manufacturing; 2, Wool Manufacturing; 3, Designing, General Course; 4, Chemistry and Drying. Each course is intended to cover three years. In addition to the work of the day pupils, there are several practical courses arranged for evening pupils. One of these courses requires a year's time, four require two years, one three, and one four years for completion. The shortest time is required by the spinning course and the longest time is absorbed by chemistry and dyeing.

The popularity of this school is shown by the fact that the evening pupils numbered more than five hundred last year and will be greatly increased this year, while the day pupils last year reached one hundred and forty, with a large freshman class entering this year. These students are largely from Lowell, Lawrence and the neighboring cities, yet many are from other cities and towns in New England and there are not a few from the southern states. The fees for the evening courses necessarily vary, but that for the day courses is a hundred dollars, increased by fifty dollars, when the pupil is a resident of another state. It is expected that those desiring to enter be graduates of high schools or similar institutions. Others must pass a satisfactory examination in arithmetic, algebra, geometry, English and geography. The majority of the students are men, but several women avail themselves of its privileges.

The buildings are situated perfectly, on high ground, commanding fine views in all directions, they are within easy reach of the city centre and the railroad, yet are quite isolated. Electric cars pass the door frequently. The site includes ten acres in all, stretches to the banks of the Merrimac, which gives opportunities for rowing and canoeing. The grounds about the buildings are green and beautiful and here is a story of applied science. The soil seemed black and fertile, yet two sowings of grass met with no success. An analysis of the soil was made and it was found deficient in nitrates. A solution of nitrate of soda was applied and the seed sprouted and resulted in the fine grassy lawns that so beautifully outline the buildings constructed of Milwaukee brick.

It would seem as if room had been provided for all in the area devoted to the school today and it is a delight to go from one large room to another and note the absence of the crowds that are so common to our educational institutions now, yet it is unavoidable that with the awakened interest along these lines, these buildings, not yet two years old, must be added to and this has been provided for so that all will remain symmetrical.

Most fortunate is the school in its President, Mr. William W. Crosby, a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, whose clear brain, ready insight into problems, rare ability in the solution of the same, quick perception of the ability of the student and geuine cordiality, toward all comers has gone a long way toward mak ing the school what it is today. He is ably assisted by a carefully chosen body of instructors, including several graduates of the Institute of Technology, while the faculty includes practical business men and manufacturers, who are ready and eager to meet all problems of the present day work and spare no time or energy in solving them.

The State has been generous toward the school, the city no less so, in proportion and manufacturers have been ready to help so far as possible. This may not so well be named generosity as recognition of a good investment, for such must be this, the largest school of its kind in the country and the largest polytextile school in the world.

Experiment and invention have done much to make of what has been given, the success that is evident to day and the practical mill man and intelligent observer must note everywhere the fact that here is taught all that contributes to textile work, from the handling of the raw material to the finished product and at the same time mill construction, heating, ventilation, lighting the regulation of moisture and dryness, the management of all machines, engineering, the study of designing, of drawing of chemistry and working along these lines so intelligently as to make the school an authority not only in this country but abroad.

The newspaper man or woman is supposed to know all things and when the door is opened, he or she is expected to understand all that is revealed and to so picture it to others as to give them a full understanding, yet no one can gain so much from any description of the school as a few hours personal inspection will disclose. The hope only is to awaken sufficient interest to cause the taxpayers of the State to see how well their money is exended in this direction and to show to a boy and girl here and there what opportunity is theirs. Quincy is not too far away for already the school has pupils from Dorchester, who board at home. Naturally the school does not advertise itself to any great extent for there is no need of this. Its work tell. "The brighest boy or girl that comes here will find use for all his or her brains" said President Crosby Tuesday. Very beautiful specimens of dyeing, duplicating rare patterns, winding etc. were shown to the visitors and with such excellent guides as President Crosby, Secretary Charles H. Eames and Professor Olney little of interest could be passed by.

Those visiting the school will find an excellent lunch room that is under the direction of one of the students, who also adds to his income while studying by assisting in teaching evening classes.

A SCHOOL FOR ROOTERS

Special Course For Football Lovers at Missouri University.

SYSTEMATIC YELLING IS TAUGHT.

Club Organized by Students In Columbia, Mo., to Direct the Cheers on the Side Lines—Leaders Carry Huge Megaphones—Several Favorite Yells Used.

"Rooting," the ability to make a loud and continuous noise, is now taught regularly in the University of Missouri, says a dispatch from Columbia, Mo., to the Kansas City Star. The rooters' classes are by far the largest in school. Nearly every student in the university is enrolled in the course. This course of study is not found in the regular catalogue and is not honored with a place in the university curriculum, but is maintained by the Rooters' club, an organization composed of forty classmen. The members are elected because of lung capacity.

Harry Lyon of Kansas City, a senior, is the president of the club. His ability to make noise is unexcelled among the rooters. The chief yell leader is Wray Dudley, promoted from the rank and file at a recent student mass meeting that singled him out from a number of other aspirants for honors. He takes the place of "Hot Air" Nelson, who led the rooters' brigade at the last Kansas-Missouri football game.

Under the command of the rooter general are three subrooters, each of whom has charge of a section of the bleachers at football games. These are Charles W. Martin, "Deacon" Barnes and Charles Walker. These leaders are expected to keep the noise going in their respective territories, and failure to bring out a proper volume of sound means disgrace and relegation to the ranks.

The leaders carry huge megaphones and are decorated with long flowing streamers of the old gold and black. Whether Missouri is winning or losing these students perform mad gyrations on the track in front of the bleachers and endeavor to impart their enthusiasm to the spectators. A yell started in one section is taken up by each of the others in turn, making a continuous roll of noise from one end to the other.

The members of the rooters' club, who are distributed among the stands, where they can do the most execution, second the efforts of their leaders in producing noise. Each one acts as a leader in the group immediately surrounding him and conveys to his charges the directions of the head leader in front. Members of the club will be easily distinguished at approaching games. Special hats in the university colors have been ordered for their exclusive wear. A process known as chi-ing will be applied to any one outside the organization who wears the rooters' insignia.

The rooters have frequent meetings, at which they rehearse the university yells, old and new. The old tiger yell, "Tiger, tiger, M. S. U.," has been thrown out for others of a better noise producing variety. The most popular of these is that heard at the last Thanksgiving day game:

Missou-rah-rah!
Missou-rah-rah!
Hoo-rah! Hoo-rah!
Missou-rah!

The spelling of Missouri is another favorite that is delivered with good effect. Each letter is long drawn out, especially the final "i," the whole result being a yell equal in volume to the "Rockchalk-Jayhawk" of Kansas. The old varsity yell is still given, and several new combinations have been rehearsed and will be given at the approaching game.

Under the instruction of the rooters the students are becoming proficient in yelling. When Missouri made the first touchdown of the season against Kirksville the rooters did their duty manfully.

The final aim of the systematic practice in yelling is to produce a corps of rooters that will put Kansas to shame at the approaching Thanksgiving day game. "Missouri expects every rooter to do his duty," is the motto, and no matter how the game goes Missouri students intend to support the team with voices until the last.

Germany Copying Japan.

Japan learned much about war from Germany, but now the teacher turns to the pupil. Germany has condemned her quick firing field artillery as obsolete and adopted a style of gun like those in use in the Japanese army. The German guns have only been in use six years.

The November Christmas.

You can't help kin o' wishin' dat de time would hurry round
When gif's is on de Christmas tree an' snow is on de ground.
But dey've fixed up an arrangement dat will help de time to pass
Until de sleighbells ring an' fros' is silverin' de grass.
Dar ain' no 'scuse foh fidgitin' impatiently, because
A candidate is mighty nigh as good as Santa Claus.
He'll use a hoss an' buggy 'stead o' ridin' in a sleigh,
But dar ain' much need o' Christmas when you's got election day.

It sho'ly is mos' comfortin' an' cheerful foh to find
So many folks in sech a very generous frame o' mind.
Dey keeps a-axin' 'bout yoh health an' says, "How well yoh look!"
An' sometimes even takes an interest in yoh pocketbook.
De band is sweetly playin', an' de people ma'chin' by
Is almost like a circus, it's dat pleasin' to de eye.
De wind is tempered to de lamb, jes' like de good book say—
Dar ain' much need o' Christmas when you's got election day.

SILVER JUBILEE.

St. Francis Society of Braintree to Celebrate.

On Sunday next, the members of the St. Francis Catholic society will celebrate at their church on Central avenue, their 25th anniversary.

The exercises will include the receiving of holy communion by a large number of children at the 8.20 mass. At 10.20 a solemn high mass will be celebrated with Rev. J. J. Coen, pastor of St. John's church, Quincy, as celebrant. Rev. R. H. Splaine of Mt. Auburn as deacon and Rev. M. F. McDonnell, the pastor, as sub deacon.

A sermon, fitting to the occasion, will be celebrated by the talented preacher, Rev. R. H. Splaine of Mt. Auburn.

At 3.15 P. M. the sacrament of confirmation will be conferred for the first time in this town, by Bishop John Brady of Boston, with Rev. J. J. Coan of Quincy and Rev. A. F. Roche, pastor of St. Mary's, West Quincy, as assistants.

The musical exercises will be by an augmented choir, under the direction of Miss Mary F. Shea, organist.

The history of the Catholic church in Braintree is an interesting and creditable one. The first mass celebrated in the town was by Rev. Fr. Carraher at a shanty occupied by the laborers engaged in building the railroad, at a place near where the present Gannon homestead now stands. The second was at the home of Mr. William Doyle on Hancock street.

For a number of years the Catholics of Braintree were obliged to travel either to Quincy or Randolph to attend mass.

The first Sunday school was held at the home of Edmond Bannon, the second in charge of Miss Margaret Slavin in the open air in what is now a park on Hancock street.

In June 1866, a meeting was held at Town Hall, at which an organized Sunday school was formed under the direction of John Drinan. This was continued for a time in the Armory of Town hall.

In July 1875, Sunday school was again opened at Holbrook hall on the site of the present Holbrook block. Here for the first time, public mass was celebrated, the late Morris Colbert, to whom much of the success that led up to having a structure of our own is due, serving as altar boy.

As this hall was used by several societies, the altar had to be built up each Sunday morning and taken down after the mass. The hall having been destroyed by fire, the society next worshipped in what was then known as Rosenfield hall.

During the year '71 the death of the much loved pastor, Rev. James F. Sullivan caused deep regret. His successor the late Rev. F. A. Frigugulietti from that time until his death last year, carefully and zealously guarded the interests, spiritual and temporal of his people.

Finally land was purchased and the erection of a church began. On Christmas day 1878, the first mass was celebrated by Rev. T. J. Danahy of Newton Upper Falls whose work in the upbuilding and spiritual advancement of the Catholic people of this town can not be overated and whose place, in the hearts and affections of its people, has never admitted a rival.

In October, of 1879, the dedication of the church took place His Grace Archbishop Williams officiating, the sermon being preached by Rev. Fr. Chittick.

During the twenty-five years of its existence the Society has been peculiarly and remarkably blessed in its spiritual directors. Rev. A. F. Roche of Quincy, Rev. J. P. Cuffe of Atlantic, Rev. F. A. Cunningham of Belmont, Rev. J. E. Johnstone and Rev. J. J. Carey having won and held the respect and love and the prayerful memories of their people.

The pioneers of the St. Francis church were not bigots. Their charity we will strive to emulate, their faith to perpetuate, their loyalty to the best interests of church and country will be the secret of the progressive spirit, that will continue in the future as in the past to uphold and sustain the pastor, Rev. M. F. McDonnell in all his efforts; to recognize his earnestness and to assist him in building up a congregation that will be an honor to God and to their fellow citizens and may their only strife be to rival each other in deeds of virtue and charity.—Veritas.

—The Hingham Journal says: "Last week the new power station at Rockland, which has only recently been completed, was started up. It is a substation, where the high pressure current from Quincy is transformed and fed to the street car lines in its vicinity. The station in Abington will be discontinued."

PUBLIC SCALES.

City Square Near Fountain Not the Proper Place.

Editors Daily Ledger:

I was surprised to find in the records of the City Council meeting this week that the public scales question was still unsettled, and that it was thought desirable to locate them in City Square between the First church and the granite fountain.

I had suppose that the idea had been abandoned on account of the opposition to the location, and that the scales would be located in or near the freight yard on Granite street.

The feelings of a great many residents were outraged when the grand old elm tree shading the fountain was ruthlessly uprooted to make way for the proposed scales, and a fight was put up to prevent further disfigurement. It does not seem right that one man should have the power to go ahead on his own responsibility to disfigure the city.

There are some Quincy born and old residents of Quincy who still have a care for the beauties of the city and have some rights though City Hall officials do not seem to appreciate the fact. I hope our people will rise up and once for all settle the public scale matter and have them located in a suitable place. L.

Class in Geology.

About fifty members of the T. L. L. field class in geology visited Mattapan last Saturday where felsite, pinite and conglomerate rocks were studied.

The class was led to the base of a rocky hill where attention was called to a deep glacial striation with a direction 45 degrees east of south and north of west. This is an exceptionally deep groove discovered lately by Dr. Shurtleff.

The country rock of Mattapan is felsite. Felsite is altered obsidian, and obsidian is glass. Felsite is banded. In Mattapan, in well defined planes in thin layers. Its color ranges from deep red to pink. After alteration it is green and becomes pinite. This alteration is constantly going on. When pinite alters it becomes white clay. This alteration is called kaolin.

Felsite is an igneous rock and comes under the sub-division called Volcanic, and this kind belongs to the Syenite family. Syenite differs from granite in containing no quartz. By looking at a rock one cannot tell whether it is syenite or granite. Chemical analysis is the only way of distinguishing them.

A layer of fine tuff between coarse tuff caused the deep furrow made by the ice in the manner mentioned above. In the conglomerate about this place the pebbles were smooth as if polished and showed beautiful colors, some of them bounded by the the color of the gang.

The class then went to a railroad cut where the rock was an "eye-opener" to say the least. Of a reddish color it arose high above us. Upon its plane surfaces were well defined ferns, black in color. Some of us thought they were ferns. They were Dendrites, however, and the branching fern-like figures were made by a foreign mineral. It reminds one of the trees and ferns made by frost upon a window pane. These were very large figures on the lower layer of rock and very fine above. It will pay students of nature to visit this place. To reach it after reaching the station walk down the track towards the next station and pass under the bridge. The rocks are at the right hand a little distance beyond the bridge. It is a short walk. I understand that the rock is to be removed to give place for more track-roads.

—Chestnuts are very plenty this year. A writer from Shelburne Falls tells the following story: "A boy while after the cow found a place where chestnuts were very thick, and as he had no bag nor basket, took two strings from his pocket, tied them around the bottom of his trouser's legs and then filled in the trousers with about 12 quarts of chestnuts. He soon found he couldn't bend down to pick, so he had to lie down and chuck them in side-ways. But for a bush near by, he would hardly have been able to get up."

THE AUTUMN HAT.

Hints For Purchasing—Burnt Orange a Leading Color.

When choosing a hat it is well to be guided as much in the selection by the shape of the shoulders as by the face, head, complexion and hair. Many millinery mistakes are made by the small woman wearing the large picture hats that are so becoming to tall girls with good shoulders. A girl of five feet two in a hat of this sort looks several inches shorter than she really is.

Burnt orange will figure prominently in the winter millinery schemes. It will be employed as a high light to touch up otherwise somber creations.

In velvet burnt orange is an exquisite shade, and the woman whose coloring will not stand this fashionable tint is to be pitied. On gowns the orange will make delightful glints of contrast in the guise of tiny waistcoats or as touches on cuff, collar and neck.

A dainty whim of fashion is to catch up the fullness on sleeves with fancy buttons.

Neck chains of all kinds are as popular as ever, and to be really up to date a golden, enameled or jeweled butterfly or bird is the dangle to be suspended from them.

The charming hat illustrated is made with a soft crown of black tulle. From under the tulle glint pale yellow roses. The drooping brim at the back makes this hat becoming to any mode of hairdressing. A full rosette of tulle and another of yellow roses conceal the bandeau which lifts the hat off the left side of the hair.

INLAND SKIRMISH

Panama Malcontents and Marines In Conflict

SOME DEATHS RESULTED

Story Not Confirmed at Washington, Where Opinion Is Expressed That Our Men Are Able to Cope With Any Difficulty Which May Arise--Rush Orders to Pacific Squadron

Colon, Oct. 22.—News reached here last evening that about 200 armed men, who are thought to be malcontent Panamaians rather than Colombian soldiers, were seen in the neighborhood of Culebra, threatening hostilities against the Panamian government.

As soon as the American authorities of the canal zone became cognizant of the appearance of this force, marines were sent out to ascertain their purpose.

It is rumored that a skirmish occurred inland, in which several were killed, but there is no confirmation of this report.

Washington, Oct. 22.—Assistant Secretary Darling said late last night that sa far as he was aware no advices had been received at the navy department of the reported skirmish between United States marines and Panamians on the isthmus. If any dispatches have been received, the assistant secretary explained, they, in all probability, would not be delivered to the officials until some time today. At this time the navy has about 450 marines on the isthmus, a sufficient force, in the opinion of the administration, to cope with any difficulty which is likely to develop.

Rush Orders For Pacific Squadron

San Diego, Cal., Oct. 22.—The torpedo bot destroyer Paul Jones has gone under hurry orders to meet the Pacific squadron, which is supposed to have left Magdalena bay, where target practice has been going on, for Panama. NATIONS TO SELECT DATE

Draft of Invitation to Peace Meeting Prepared

Washington, Oct. 22.—The president is about to dispatch formal invitations to the powers to name delegates to the new peace conference to be held at The Hague. The powers are invited to suggest a date or dates for the meeting of the conference. Secretary Hay submitted a draft of the invitation to the cabinet yesterday.

Notice of his intention to issue this call was given by the president several weeks ago and the formal invitation has been in course of preparation ever since. There was no hesitation on the part of the president in naming The Hague in the invitation, hence it is assumed the government of The Netherlands was first consulted. The date of the meeting was left open because it is stated that any one of the powers has as much right to suggest a date as the United States. Consequently there must be considerable correspondence on this subject before an agreement is reached. It is not expected that the conference will meet during the continuance of the present war.

United Textile Workers Consider New Bedford Case

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 22.—But for the appearance of President Holland and Secretary Hart of the New Bedford Weavers' union, to discuss the secession of that body, the convention of the United Textile workers would have come to an end yesterday noon. The statements by the New Bedford officers kept the convention in session long after the officers were elected.

In the election of officers practically the same board that served the past year were elected, with John Golden of Fall River as president.

At the afternoon session the delegation from the New Bedford Weavers' union were heard at length. Honand and Hart presented the side of the weavers and criticised the national officers for voting to end the strike of weavers of the Dartmouth mill of New Bedford. The president and secretary of the national body, in reply, said that the constitution of the organization would not permit the ending of the strike under any consideration. The delegation then criticised the action of the national officers in not favoring the strike. At the same time the desire was expressed that the New Bedford Weavers' union should become once more members of the national organization. A committee was appointed to secure that end.

The convention adjourned finally at 3:30 o'clock. The next convention of the organization will be held in New York city in October, 1905.

ISSUES OF THE DAY

Discussed by Cleveland Before Business Men's Association

THE REPUBLICAN CLAIMS

He Declares Them to Be Vainglorious and Misleading--Talks Upon Currency, Tariff, Trusts, Philippines and the Canal

New York, Oct. 22.—Attracted by the presence of Grover Cleveland, thousands of people struggled to gain entrance to Carnegie hall last night, where the former President of the United States made his first and only speech of the campaign.

John G. Carlisle, secretary of the treasury under Mr. Cleveland, was also a speaker and shared with Mr. Cleveland the great burst of enthusiasm at the meeting. Within 10 minutes after the entrances had been thrown wide to the public every seat in the big auditorium was taken. Still hundreds were unable to get inside.

This rally was under the auspices of the Business Men's Parker and Davis association.

Mr. Cleveland arrived at the hall shortly after 8 o'clock and immediately upon his entrance cheers burst forth, the demonstration lasting many minutes. Again and again Chairman Robb attempted to quiet the crowd, but was forced to his seat. When Mr. Cleveland saw that Robb's efforts were fruitless in quieting the demonstration he arose and held up his hand for silence, but the people could not be quieted for two fun minutes afterward. Mr. Cleveland said:

There are in my mind some aspects and incidents of this campaign which seem to me so startling and so humiliating that they should arrest the attention of every thoughtful citizen and arouse the anxious solicitude of every patriotic American.

Never before have our people been so belabored with party deliverances, which, in every line and every word, from platform declarations to the last appeal of party advocacy, are so saturated with conceited and tiresome claims of infallibility, and with supercilious disdain of all political efforts except such as are attempted under the banner of Republicanism. Shall this pass current at a time when, at the parting of the ways in our nation's development we are especially called to patriotic thoughtfulness and careful contemplation of party designs and to a vigilant watch against dangers that beset us? My faith in my countrymen will not permit me to believe this, or to doubt that they will insist upon examining for themselves the accounts of party stewardship.

They know that their country's prosperity, like the rains of Heaven which freshen and beautify the ornamental lawn and at the same time make productive the farm and garden, should be distributed among all the people in every station of life; and they will challenge the claim of a party which boasts of a prosperity it has wrought which gives to its pampered favorites added opportunities to increase their riches, while the poor and those who toil wait like Lazarus to be fed from the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table.

The party will be given just credit which, early or late, has endeavored to safeguard the soundness of the nation's currency; but the people will reject as savoring of presumption the insistence that only those belonging to one party organization can claim to be the protectors and defenders of our financial integrity; nor will they forget that the fight was hotly on when many of the leaders of the party now making such an insistence, were worse than lukewarm in the cause.

A party may indulge in self-congratulation when it has effectively defended the people in their daily life from the rapacity of trusts and combinations, which thrive as private enterprise is strangled, and which grow fat, as, by their control of the cost of living, they cause the homes of our land to grow lean; but the people will hardly approve the vociferous pride which claims that a successful attack upon the merger of the stock of certain competing railroads has rescued them from their oppressors. They will not fail to observe that the huge combinations which directly injure them still flourish, and they may also recall how the consternation among those implicated in such schemes who once feared a general pursuit was quieted when the soothing assurance reached them that the government did not intend to "run amuck."

This item of the account will not be passed over without a reference to the platform statement that "protection, which guards and develops our industries, is a cardinal policy of the Republican party," nor without noting the declaration that the protective tariff policy ought now to be considered as "definitely established." The people know that this policy has given rise to reckless greed and to a worship of gain menacing patriotic sentiment and our love for high standards of national greatness, and they know that at best it lays burdens on the consumers of our land. They will see the sheer wrongfulness of this condition so clearly and they will so firmly believe that in this way they are made to bear tariff burdens in order that they may be discriminated against in favor of foreign consumers, that they will not be satisfied with the assurance that the tariff has nothing to do with trusts.

When the platform boast is made that: "In the Philippines we have suppressed insurrection, established order and given to life and property a security never known there before," the confession will be extorted that the insurrection suppressed was no more than the crushing out of resistance to the army of the United States while engaged in the subjugation of a people thousands of miles from our shores, whom an incident of a war undertaken by us in aid of those struggling for liberty and independence in another quarter, had put within our power; and the people will ask under what sanction was this subjugation entered upon by a nation pledged to the doctrine that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed; and they will deny that imperialism and our forcible rule of foreign people have any place among the purposes of our national life.

When credit is claimed for securing a route for a long desired interoceanic waterway, it will not be in a carping spirit that the people will look at the incidents accompanying this achievement. Not even the great worth of the thing accomplished will close the eyes of thoughtful Americans to the fact that in reaching the results we have exhibited such international ruthlessness and such selfish international immorality as have lastingly debilitated our reputation for good faith, and established a precedent which, in time to come, may be invoked to justify the most startling and reprehensible abandonment of the high ideals which have made us an example of the best civilization—a people, happy as we are intelligently free, strong as we are scrupulously just, and everywhere trusted and honored as we undeviatingly follow in the way of uprightness and rectitude.

I have ventured to suggest the misleading purpose of the vainglorious claims made by a party organization which seeks a continuance of political control, and to intimate the humiliating estimate of our people's intelligence and patriotic vigilance which the exploitation of these claims involve. It is surely not narrow partisanship which prompts me to entreat my countrymen to hold fast and sure their independence of thought and their courage in judgment.

I do speak, however, as a Democrat attached to Democratic principles and anxious for the ascendancy of my party when I congratulate the Democracy of our country upon the clear and satisfying statements in our party platform and upon the manner in which its doctrines are personified by our candidates. We pledge to our countrymen, through our platform rest, genuine prosperity, safety, and a return to the way marked out by the constitution; and we promise, through our candidates, that, if it is the people's will, our platform shall be carried out and that under our governmental management Democratic conservatism and care shall rule the national councils to the exclusion of rash impulse and spectacular demonstration.

I desire to congratulate you upon the fact that what Alton B. Parker is and what he represents in the nation, D. Cady Herrick is, and represents, in your state. The time has arrived when there is needed at the head of your state government a man as able, as fearless, and as incorruptible as I know your candidate for governor to be.

Let us hope that the day is near when all our people, having a correct appreciation of the value of the free institutions which God has vouchsafed to them, and animated by the spirit of true patriotism, may see their highest duty in continually guarding and defending these institutions against the decay which comes of neglect, the weakness which comes of undermining materialism, and the perversion which comes of disobedience to the laws of our national life and health.

During his speech Mr. Cleveland was loudly applauded, at times being interrupted for some minutes. At the conclusion of his speech Mr. Cleveland was greeted with an ovation more spontaneous than at any time during the evening.

Report That Russians Held Shakhe Was Erroneous

FEW SLIGHT SKIRMISHES

Abandoned Cannon Midway Between Russian and Japanese Trenches--Illustrations of Dexterity of Cossacks

Mukden, Oct. 22.—The Russians yesterday opened with artillery fire upon Shakhe station, where there seemed to be a Japanese outpost watching the Russian movements. The guns were then trained upon the village of Lamatung, a little east of the station. The Japanese replied languidly.

The weather is fine and sunny, with a cold, biting wind. There was a severe frost last night.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 22.—The rival armies of Russia and Japan entrenched a short distance from each other south of the Shakhe river are forced to continued inactivity until the fine weather now prevailing dries the sodden ground and the tired warriors are sufficiently rested to resume operations. The dispatch from Mukden reporting that the Russians yesterday confined themselves to a bombardment of Shakhe station and the adjoining village of Lamatung clears up an interesting point and shows that Shakhe station is not held by the Russians. It was reported that the Russians intended to at once restore railway traffic between that place and Mukden.

Russian correspondents report that some regiments of the Fifth Siberian corps have been engaged in slight skirmishes on the advance line the past few days. The fact that the First and Fifth Siberian were the only corps hitherto unmentioned in reports of the fighting on Oct. 19 shows that General Kuropatkin has sent the reserves to the trenches, giving other much tried corps a rest. Meanwhile the Cossacks are raiding the Japanese lines.

It has been developed that after the Lone Tree hill rout the Japanese were unable to remove a number of cannon in addition to those left on the hill, and which remained midway between the Russian and Japanese trenches. As they lay, these guns were so exposed to fire from both sides that it was impossible for either Russians or Japanese to get possession of them during daylight, and repeated attempts have been made, both by Russians and Japanese, to secure the guns under cover of darkness. Up to the present time Cossack detachments have succeeded in securing three of the guns.

The dexterity of the Cossacks in this sort of work was repeatedly illustrated during the Russian army maneuvers. On one occasion they abstracted the artillery harness, completely disabling all the batteries of their rival combatants. A more famous occasion was four years ago when Kuropatkin commanded the southern army marching from Moscow against the northern army, commanded by Grand Duke Sergius. Kuropatkin's Cossack leader, Dienrichs, surrounded the hut in which Sergius' chief of staff, Soboleff, now commanding the Sixth Siberian corps, and his subordinates, were asleep, and quietly went off with their dispatches and maps. When Soboleff woke up he found the whole staff bound and gagged and every document missing.

Ready For Another Great Battle

London, Oct. 22.—The Times' Tokio correspondent says that dispatches from Oyama's headquarters seem to indicate the Shakhe river as the immediate objective of the original advance and that appearances suggest that another great battle is imminent, in which the Japanese will assume the offensive.

Marx Unmoved by Death Sentence

New London, Conn., Oct. 22.—The sentence of death, to be hanged at the state prison at Wethersfield on Jan. 26 next, was passed upon Gershon Marx by Judge Case in the superior court, during an interruption of another murder trial. Marx showed no sign of emotion when he heard the solemn words pronounced.

NOVEL FOOTBALL CODE.

College Sport Put Within Sphere of Gentle Pastimes at Zion City.

Zion City boys will be able to play football this year, not the rough murderous fray which the average college boy now dotes on, but a simple, gentle, graceful and nondangerous game suitable to the quiet tastes of Dowie's domain, says the Chicago Record-Herald. Gladstone Dowie and Overseer Bracefield, former football players, have gone over the rules and changed them to conform with the principles inculcated to his flock by the general overseer.

Zion's football editors have blue penciled the rules so as to keep any possible injuries within the scope of mental healings in vogue at Zion City. The services of the "bone setter" will not be needed, as there will be no fractured ribs or other disfigurements if the rules be followed out.

The game will be open. On this point Editor Dowie has stolen a march on Walter Camp and other football sharks, who have worked for years to get daylight between the players. Mr. Dowie cut this Gordian knot in one grand sweep of his pen by abolishing tackles. Striking, holding, tripping and other ungentlemanly devices are also put among the discards. Iron and steel cleats follow in the wake of the tackles.

For fear that some other masculine feature may creep into the game the edict has gone forth that body must not touch body intentionally. If such a thing should happen a foul will be counted against the aggressor. If two men foul simultaneously the umpire shall award a double foul. If a foul is claimed and not awarded the captains and the man claiming the foul, together with the man against whom the foul is claimed, shall be the only persons to talk to the umpire.

ESCORT FOR COLLEGE GIRLS

Bryn Mawr Students Guarded, and Likewise Prevented From Flirting.

William Standen, a tall, athletic young man of Haverford, Pa., has been appointed by the Bryn Mawr college faculty as official escort to the students, says a Philadelphia special dispatch to the New York World. It goes without saying that every young man in Bryn Mawr and the surrounding country is eaten up with envy.

It was not until last spring that the faculty decided an escort was necessary. An attack by a negro was given as the reason, but residents of Bryn Mawr whisper that this was not all. Haverford college is only a short distance from Bryn Mawr, and it is said that Haverford students developed a decided predilection for strolling in the neighboring borough about the time trains were due to arrive and that by some strange chance they frequently met students from the female institution of learning and of course gallantly escorted them to their destination. This was all contrary to the rule of the Bryn Mawr faculty.

Standen will be on duty daily from 5 o'clock in the afternoon until midnight and will meet all incoming trains and escort students to outgoing trains whenever necessary. He will be duly armed "to keep the boys away," it is said.

Hobart Lewis has been appointed special watchman. Last year peepers were abundant at Bryn Mawr college, and the management is determined to put a stop to it. Lewis is an old man and was formerly watchman at the Summit Grove House when the girls were quartered there before Rockefeller hall was finished.

THE TRIO WALTZ.

Professor Duetweg's Substitute For the Twostep.

At the twenty-seventh annual convention of the American Society of Professors of Dancing, chartered in New York, two original dances were presented, says a St. Louis dispatch. The first creation was the trio waltz, arranged by Professor Oscar Duetweg of Terre Haute, Ind., the object of which is to avoid dancing the twostep to all kinds of time and to assist the learner in correct waltzing.

This dance is composed of a complete waltz turn, a chasse step and a glide which must also be danced in an opposite direction.

The second creation is the gondolier twostep, invented by Professor Henry J. Kramer of Los Angeles, Cal. It is an arrangement of a glide, running step and twostep. Professor Kramer claims that this gives variation to the present twostep.

Tramp's Great Strength.

A tramp lawyer of giant strength, carrying cooking utensils, his provender and a small arsenal and giving his name as William Covey of New York was recently arrested at Titonka, Ia., on the charge of assault, says a special dispatch from Eldora, Ia. When brought into court the man pleaded his own case, won out and now has his freedom. He had at one time evidently seen better days, but he would not talk much about himself. His pack contained bacon, potatoes, cabbage and onions, besides a camp stove, plate, knife, fork and cooking utensils. Other articles and keepsakes were in the man's pockets when searched.

Japanese War Offerings.

The commandant of the navy yard in Cavite, in the Philippine Islands, employs about sixty Japanese in the repair shops, says the Chicago Tribune. Most of these Japanese are carpenters and receive wages averaging about $1.50 gold a day. Of this amount each man sends 50 cents each day as his offering to the Japanese government during the war. This is Patriotism with a large "P."

Sunday Excursions

We have it, on what we consider to be reliable authority, that the Vanderbilt lines intend to do away with the Sunday excursion business and we are very glad to know it.

The only excuse that has ever been offered for the Sunday excursion is that it permits thousands of workers to enjoy themselves on Sunday, where, if the Sunday amusement were not offered, they would not have the opportunity for recreation and enjoyment that is necessary to their comfort and well being.

There is considerable truth in this claim, but we have never felt that it justified the extra excursion business indulged in by some railways. It has always been the idea of the writer to have as little work performed on railways on Sunday as was possible with the absolute demands of the service.

We believe that Sunday should be set apart, as far as possible, as a day of rest, and for its proper observance. The question of propriety is one that remains largely with each individual. One great objection to the extra excursion business on Sunday is that much of it falls on train and engine crews that have worked to the limit of personal safety during the preceding days of the week. These men are often called in emergencies to take out these special trains and not a few accidents to them have been traced to the worn-out condition of the men.

We believe if all of the railways could join together in doing away with extra Sunday business that the public demand would soon cease for it and the supposed hardship that its cessation would impose on the thousands who supposedly cannot give up a working day for their enjoyment would soon disappear.

It is to be hoped that the rumor pertaining to the discontinuance of these Sunday trains is true, and it would be most gratifying to learn that railway companies could determine to do away with all unnecessary train and yard work on Sunday. Some of it, of course, is necessary, but the most of it, and particularly the habit of hauling dead freight on Sunday is not necessary, and in fairness to the employees, the railway companies should discontinue it. —Railroad Trainmen's Journal.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

Quite the most important event of the theatrical season in Boston is the engagement announced for the Colonial theatre, beginning Oct. 24, of the celebrated prima donna and comedienne, Fritzi Scheff in a new comedy opera by Ludwig Englander and Stanislaus Stange entitled, "The Two Roses," Miss Sheff, who for several years was the most popular artiste in grand opera, made a sensation last year by going into comic opera and her engagement at the Colonial theatre in "Babette" was remarkable for its enthusiastic and crowded houses. In one season Miss Sheff became the acknowledged queen of comic opera. She returns to Boston this year in a new opera even better adapted to her fascinating personality and great musical attainments. Her manager, Charles B. Dillingham chose wisely the opportunity to give her ability as an actress more scope. In "The Two Roses" she appears in the first act as the lively young French-born ward in an old English family, and in the second act she assumes the guise of a waiting maid of an inn. Her versatility is displayed to fine advantage. The period of the opera, the eighteenth century and the place. Merry old England, give an opportunity for picturesque stage settings which are taken advantage of to the full. The engagement at the Colonial theatre is limited, and the only matinees are on Saturdays.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

The novelty of the Keith show for the week of Oct. 24 will be furnished by Staley and Birbeck, whose musical transformation act has not been seen for several years, and is claimed to be more complete and startling than ever before. The comedy section will be headed by Claude Gillingwater, a well known actor, presenting a mirth provoking sketch entitled "The wrong Man," in which he will be supported by a company of five people. Willie Zimmerman, who makes a specialty of imitating celebrated musical composers, and who was the most talked about entertainer in New York during the past summer, will be seen here for the first time. Some of others announced to appear are Prevest and Provest, in an eccentric acrobatic act; Vera King, singing commedienne and story teller; Eldora and Noine, novelty jugglers; Lew Sully, monologue comedian; Mme. Chester and her $10,000.00 statute dog, in "Pictures of the Hunt." It will be the last week for Jean Marcel's artistic bas reliefs, several new subjects being given.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Another very strong attraction is put forward by the Castle Square theatre management in announcing as next week's bill, the dramatic version Charles Major's novel "When Knighthood was in Flower," made by Paul Kester and which had its original production by Julia Marlowe and her company three seasons ago. This play has been generally accepted as one of the best dramatic creations from the novels of today the playwright having succeeded very happily in retaining the originality of the author in telling the story as well as in reproducing with rare fidelity the characters introduced. The novel it will be remembered deals with certain experiences in the life of Mary Tudor, second daughter of Henry VII, and the development of the plot brings into the action of the play many historical personages associated with the times.

COLUMBIA MUSIC HALL.

All this week the beautiful house has been crowded with hilarious audiences applauding the fun-makers in the new Weber-Fields burlesque, "Whoop-De-Doo." The play is sumptuously costumed and the principals presenting it are of a class certainly equal to those in any of the current high class musical entertainments. Everybody is already whistling Toby Lyons' new song, "Old Mr. Santa Claus," which he sings with much unction and in which he is accompanied by twelve of the cutest diminutive dancers dressed in brilliant silk pajamas that have been seen on the local stage for a long time. So unexpectedly great has been the advance sales and requests that the management has determined to retain this same burlesque another week. This, however, will be the only time when there will not be a new production made each week. It is well to remember that there is a matinee every day at 2.15.

Quincy, July 12. May 13-1y

The last of October and early November were eventful days for President and Mrs. John Adams of Quincy. Both of their birthday anniversaries came in this period within a month of each other, and about midway between their marriage anniversary, and also the death anniversary of Mrs. Adams.

For over fifty-four years Mr. and Mrs. Adams enjoyed the marriage relation, and were prominent in the affairs of Quincy, of the United States, and while at the White House and the Court of St. James, with the affairs of the world.

When it is remembered that the first railroad was not established in the United States until Oct. 7, 1826 (another October event in Quincy)—after the death of both President and Mrs. Adams, one realizes what it meant to make frequent trips to New York, Philadelphia and Washington, and to Europe by sailing vessels.

Tomorrow will be the 140th anniversary of the marriage, and the date will be observed by the Quincy Historical society at the birthplaces of the Presidents, two old houses on Franklin street which have been preserved as originally. The northerly house in which John Adams was born is now the headquarters of Adams chapter, Daughters of the Revolution, while the southerly house in which Mr. and Mrs. John Adams lived later, and where President John Quincy Adams was born, is the headquarters of the Historical society. In both are many relics and the public may visit the houses at any time.

The following brief sketch of the life of Abigail Adams, is taken from the memoir by her grandson, Charles Francis Adams, which prefaces the published volume of her letters.

There were few persons of her day and generation who derived their origin, or imbibed their character, more exclusively from the genuine stock of the Massachusetts Puritan settlers than Abigail Smith.

Her father, the Rev. William Smith, was the settled minister of the Congregational church at Weymouth, for more than forty years, and until his death. Her mother, Elizabeth Quincy, was the granddaughter of the Rev. John Norton, long the pastor of a church of the same denomination in the neighboring town of Hingham, and the nephew of John Norton, well known in the annals of the colony.

Her maternal grandfather, John Quincy, was the grandson of Thomas Shepard, minister of Charlestown, distinguished in his day, and the son of the more distingished Thomas Shepard of Cambridge, whose name still lives in one of the churches of that town.

Abigail Adams was the second of three daughters. She was born in Weymouth on the 11th of November, 1744, O. S. In her neighborhood there were not many advantages of instruction to be found; and even in Boston, the small metropolis, nearest at hand, the list of accomplishments within the reach of females was probably very short.

She did not enjoy an opportunity to acquire even such as there might have been, for the delicate state of her health forbade the idea of sending her away from home to obtain them. In a letter written in 1817, the year before her death, speaking of her own deficiences, says: "My early education did not partake of the abundant opportunities which the present days offer, and which even our common country schools afford. I never was sent to any school, I was always sick. Female education, in the best families, went no further than writing and arithmetic, in some few and rare instances, music and dancing."

The fact that she never went to any school, is a very important one to a proper estimate of her character.

At the house of Colonel John Quincy at Mt. Wollaston, and under the instruction of his wife, her grandmother, she appears to have imbibed most of the lessons which made the deepest impression upon her mind.

She was married on the 25th of October, 1764. The ten years immediately following appears to have been a quiet and very happy life, having her residence at Braintree or Boston. Within this period she became the mother of a daughter and three sons.

In June, 1784, she sailed from Boston in a merchant vessel bound for London, to join her husband. From a life of the utmost retirement, in a small and quiet country town of New England, she was at once transferred to the busy and bustling scenes of the populous and wealthy cities of Europe. She was the first representative of her sex from the United States at the Court of Great Britian. The return to the United States was simultaneous with the adoption of the present Constitution. At the time of her husband's election to the Presidency, her health which had never been very firm began decidedly to fail. Her residence in Philadelphia had subjected her to an attack of an intermittent fever from the effects of which she was never afterwards perfectly free.

From the year 1801 down to the day of her death, which happened on the 28th of October, 1818, she remained uninterruptedly at her home in Quincy. Her old age was not one of grief and repining, of clouds and darkness. Her cheerfulness continued, with the full possession of her faculties, to the last; and her sunny spirit enlivened the small social circle around her, brightened the solitary hours of her husband, and spread the influence of its example over the town where she lived.

The obsequies of Mrs. Adams were attended by a great concourse of people, who voluntarily came to pay this last tribute to her memory. The sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Kirkland, then president of Harvard University, which closed with a delicate and affecting testimony of her worth.

Just a few of the important events in the life of President John Adams are outlined at the top of the page.

LOSS $5,000

Large Polishing Mill Destroyed by Fire.

All in Flames When Discovered.

Had Work on Hand for Several Granite Firms.

The large polishing mill of M. A. McDonald & Co. on Deane street was totally destroyed by fire at midnight last night. It was 12.10 when the alarm sounded from Box 42 and when the department arrived flames were coming from every part of the building. The building at that time was practically destroyed, and there was little the department could do toward saving the contents.

In the building was an engine and boiler, polishing machinery and about 35 blocks of granite belonging to various firms. Some of these had already been polished while others were on the machines. The intense heat coupled with water served to ruin all of the blocks of granite.

Just how the fire started is not known, for when it was discovered the building was on fire in every part.

The loss on the building, machinery and granite is estimated at $5,000, and there was a blanket insurance of $3,000.

Woman's Trade Union League.

The Massachusetts Woman's Trade Union league is bringing unemployed women and girls from Fall River, and finding them positions in domestic service. Places have already been found for eighty-five girls, and the experiment is proving very successful. The girls send money back to Fall River each week, to relieve the distressing poverty at their homes. The League needs money to meet the expenses of transportation and lodging. Contributions may be sent to Mrs. Mary Morton Kehew, Treasurer, 264 Boylston street, Boston, Mass.

West Quincy Raid.

Chief Hayden, with Inspector McKay, Officers Goodhue, Hinchon, Holloran and George A. McKay, raided the premises of Joseph Shaw at 93 Willard street at 9 o'clock Sunday evening and seized 50 gallons of wine, 10 gallons of ale and one gallon of cherry rum.

FOOT BALL GAMES.

The Copeland Club and the South Quincys Win.

The Copeland club foot ball team opened their season Saturday, on the Ward Four playgrounds with a victory over Winthrop A. A. by the score of 17 to 0. The features for Copelands were the playing of Flaherty, Boyd, Roulliard and Saunders, while the best work for Winthrop was done by DeBarry, Smith and Sullivan.

The line-up:

COPELANDS.		WINTHROPS A.A.
Desmond-Dunn	le.,	Neilson
Burke-Williams	lt.,	Woods
Tabb	lg.,	Shannon
Roulliard,	c.,	Orcutt
Joyce,	rg.,	Holland
Shatzel-Badger,	rt.,	De Barry
Hebert,	re.,	Eldridge
Boyd	qb.,	Patterson
Saunders,	lhb.,	Smith
Martell,	rhb',	Londregan
Flaherty,	fb.,	Sullivan

Score—Copeland, 17; Winthrop, 0. Touchdowns—Flaherty, 2; Saunders, 1. Goals from touchdowns—Flaherty, 2. Umpire — Elcock. Referee — Ramsey. Linesmen — Riley and Finth. Time—15 minute halves.

Saturday Oct. 29, the Copelands will play the Defender A. C. of Cambridge, at West Quincy.

South Quincys at Holbrook.

The South Quincy foot ball team went to Holbrook on Saturday and whitewashed the local team 11 to 0. The kicking of Littlewood and the 50-yard run by Troupe of South Quincy were features of the game.

Quincys Lose.

In the Merrimac Valley league on Saturday at Lynn, association rules, the Quincy team was defeated by the Lynn team 6 to 0. The home team scored five of their goals in the first period. The Quincy team put up an excellent game but luck was against them.

Midway Islands.

Fred C. Chamberlin of Wollaston, who recently returned from a ninety days' trip round the world, had an interesting illustrated article in the Sunday Globe on Midway islands of the Pacific ocean of coral formation about which little is known. The average elevation above the sea is ten feet and the highest point but 43 feet. The islands fly the stars and stripes.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sheehan of 32 Crescent street gave a party on Friday evening to their little son William, in honor of his fifth birthday. Twenty little ones were present and all enjoyed the games and entertainment. A dainty lunch was served. Willie was the recipient of many gifts.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ Mr. Roosevelt is as good an example as we are likely to have, or can reasonably ask for, of the man who is willing to devote himself fearlessly and honorably to politics. Believing in the main in the principles for which he stands, as parties are divided today, I count it a duty and an honor to give him by loyal support as an expression of confidence in him personally.—President Tucker of Dartmouth college.

☞ Judge Emmons believes that every policeman should be retired at 65. If he thinks a man has necessarily lost his efficiency as a preserver of the peace at that age he should guess again. A man at that age who had had no previous experience might properly be rejected if he applied for a position on the police force, but one who had entered service in his youth, and grown up in the force, might be as effective as a younger man, and he could be retained without detriment to the service. Every city furnishes examples of this, and while the ranks should be recruited from the young men, there can justly be no inflexible age limit.—Lynn Item.

☞ The time has gone by when the great powers will allow the war horrors of the east to go on for very long. It is a settled principle in international law that if any war goes on so far that both sides violate every decency of civilization, the outsiders have every right to step in. That was the American excuse, in part, for bringing on the Spanish war, in what amounted to an order to Spain to stop the war on the Cubans. And it is now little more of a secret that if the style of war at Mukden does not change at once, the powers of Germany, France and Great Britain will step in. The Europeans want the United States to come in, also; but this country has almost nothing at stake and will do well to keep altogether out of it.—Gloucester Times.

Freight Wreck In Connection.

Stamford, Conn., Oct. 24.—A freight train was wrecked a mile east of the station here this morning and the cars are thrown about in such a manner that all four tracks of the road are blocked. No one is reported injured. It is not known how the train met with the mishap, but it was probably due, according to the statement of the agent here, to the breaking of a truck on one of the cars.

Fatal Stabbing Affray

Woburn, Mass., Oct. 24.—Kyriakos Chrondreas, a Greek, was stabbed during a quarrel at a boarding house here. He was removed to a hospital in Boston, where he died. John Pappas, another Greek, is alleged to have done the stabbing. He has disappeared and the police are looking for him. The quarrel was over $15 which Chrondreas claimed he had been cheated out of.

Murderer Attempts Suicide

Brookline, Mass., Oct. 24.—Henry F. Boles, the confessed murderer of his wife and Patrolman McMurray in this town last Monday evening, attempted to commit suicide in his cell at the police station. Although a close watch had been kept on Boles, he managed to throw himself head-foremost at a projecting piece of steel in the door of his cell. He had sustained a deep cut, but no fracture.

Union Bands Drew Out

Bristol, R. I., Oct. 24.—The annual state parade of the Catholic Total Abstinence unions of the Providence diocese, held here Sunday, was marred through a controversy arising over the employment of a non-union band connected with the United States army. Two union bands objected to the non-union band being in line and the army band was the only one in the parade.

Still at Sea on Divorce Canon

Boston, Oct. 24.—At the close of the 15th day of the Episcopal general convention the house of bishops and house of deputies were still at variance on the question of marriage and divorce. The issue will again be taken before the latter body, the bishops having declined to accept without amendment the compromise measure adopted by the deputies on Thursday.

RUSSIANS MAKE A BAD MISTAKE

Fire Upon Harmless British Fishing Vessels

REGARDED AS ACT OF WAR

Extraordinary and Inexplicable Action In Which at Least One Trawler Is Sunk, Two Men Have Their Heads Blown Off and Eighteen Others Brought Home Injured--Indignation at London and Astonishment at Washington

Hull, Eng., Oct. 24.—A. M. Jackson & Co., solicitors for the owners of 50 Hull fishing boats, have notified the foreign office and admiralty of an attack on the Hull fishing fleet by the Russian Pacific fleet, commonly designated as the Baltic squadron.

The official information is that early Saturday morning the Russian squadron fell in with the Hull fishing fleet in the North sea. The first portion of the fishing fleet passed safely. Then the Russian ships turned their searchlights on the British vessels for some time and a little later opened fire. The steam trawler Crane was sunk and the decapitated bodies of her skipper and mate have been brought to Hull. The boatswain and other members of the crew, who are understood to be seriously injured, are on board a mission ship. The only slightly injured members of the crew have arrived at Hull.

The steam trawlers Moulmein and Mino have arrived at Hull seriously damaged by shots, the latter having 16 holes in her hull. It is feared that other damage was done to trawlers and that at least one more trawler was lost with all hands.

The affair occurred 200 miles off Spurn Head. The Russian ships were steaming in line. The leading ships passed without incident, though most of the vessels turned searchlights on the trawlers long enough to prevent any mistake as to identity. After the bulk of the squadron had passed it opened fire, nearly all participating in the firing. The Crane was struck below the water line and raked above deck. Skipper Smith and Third Hand Leggott had their heads carried clean away by a shot, many of the crew being seriously injured. Another trawler also was sunk, but the Moulmein, which broke the news to Hull, has no particulars as to her fate.

The news has created an intense sensation and indignation at Hull. The Moulmein arrived with her flag at half-mast. Her skipper states that the trawlers were fishing about 220 miles east by north of Spurn Head at 1 o'clock Saturday morning, the weather being hazy, when the outlines of several vessels, apparently warships sailing in a line, were dimly seen. While the crew were watching the warships searchlights were flashed upon them, in the glare of which the Moulmein's crew observed what they took to be torpedo boats approaching, apparently with the intention of boarding the Moulmein.

They steamed away, however, and soon the fishermen were horrified to find that they were being fired upon. First one and then another trawler was struck by flying shot. What seemed to be a round shot went through the Moulmein's galley. The Mino, laying nearby, also was struck with many shots, but fortunately the damage was above her waterline and none of the crew was struck. The bombardment lasted about 20 minutes. When it had ceased the fleet sailed southward, and one of the trawlers sent up rockets.

The Moulmein steered in the direction of the rockets. Soon cries were heard and the Crane was found sinking, with another trawler taking off some of her crew. Those seriously injured were removed to a mission ship and the bodies of Smith and Leggott were placed aboard the Moulmein. The other men with minor injuries were put aboard the trawler Sea Gull, which has not arrived at Hull.

Representatives of the fishing fleet started late last night for London to consult with the authorities there. No motive can be assigned for the extraordinary procedure of the Russian warships.

From interviews with members of the trawler crews it appears that the admiral of the fishing fleet burned green flares to show that they were harmless fishermen, but these signals were ignored. Eighteen injured men are here under treatment. One trawler, the Wren, is missing, and it is feared that she has been sunk.

Newspapers Call It Act of War

London, Oct. 24.—Foreign Minister Lansdowne and M. Benckendorff, the Russian ambassador, both were out of town, and all the government offices in London were closed as usual on Sunday, and therefore no official view could be gleaned of the firing by Russian war vessels upon a British fishing fleet in the North sea.

The first reports of the affair received in London were regarded as almost incredible. When, however, cumulative evidence no longer left doubt of the general accuracy of the reports, astonishment became bewilderment as to what possible motive could have led the Russian officers into such an extraordinary and inexplicable course of action, which, unless a satisfactory explanation is immediately forthcoming, could only be regarded as an act of war. This is the view taken editorially by all the morning papers.

The worst feature of the story, as viewed here, is the heartlessness displayed by the Russian fleet in steaming away without taking the trouble to ascertain even whether their fire had inflicted any damage and without any effort to rescue the victims.

Blazed Away In Confusion

London, Oct. 24.—Captain Peaker of the steam cutter Magpie, one of the trawler fleet which was fired upon by the Russian Baltic fleet, confirms the details of the fate of the trawler Crane and her crew and speaks with intense indignation of the conduct of the Russians. He said: "It is impossible that we could have been taken for anything but trawlers. I can only imagine that the Russians lost their heads and blazed away in confusion and when they discovered their mistake steamed off."

St Petersburg In the Dark

St. Petersburg, Oct. 24.—Nothing has been heard here as yet regarding the reported firing on British trawlers by the Russian Pacific fleet. The last news of the fleet was a brief notice published stating that they had passed Dover, Eng., going south. The only conceivable explanation of such a story is the possibility that some of the vessels may have been at target practice, though this is not considered likely.

Through Straits of Dover

London, Oct. 24.—The Russian Pacific (Baltic) fleet, comprising seven battleships and four cruisers, passed Dover in three sections between 6 o'clock Sunday morning and 2 o'clock in the afternoon and later passed Eastbourne. A dispatch from Cherbourg reports that three Russian torpedo boats, escorted by the volunteer cruiser Korea, are moored in the roadstead there to take coal, water, etc.

Searched British Merchantmen

Portsmouth, Oct. 24.—The report is confirmed here that vessels of the Russian Baltic fleet stopped and searched merchantmen off the Isle of Wight.

Washington Officials Astonished

Washington, Oct. 24.—Astonishment that the Russian commander should have committed such a blunder as to fire on inoffensive fishing vessels, as reported in the press dispatches from Hull, prevails in official circles. At the same time these officials are prompt to express the opinion that the Russian government will promptly disavow the act and apologize when the facts are fully known. The tragedy, it is realized, adds to the complications which the Baltic fleet already has encountered ever since it was determined that it should go to the far east.

No official information of the occurrence has reached either the state department or the Russian embassy. At the latter place the officials were quick to say that the firing on the fishing vessels, no doubt, was a mistake for which the Russian government will make a prompt reparation and apology. It was due, they think, to a misapprehension as to the character of the vessels fired on, the Russian admiral probably thinking them submarine boats belonging to Japan. The Russian government has been conducting an investigation into reports that Japanese submarine boats would aim to intercept and destroy the vessels of the Baltic fleet on its way to the east, and for this reason unusual vigilance was imposed on Vice Admiral Rojestvensky. Russian officials say the whole affair is a regrettable and deplorable mistake.

Chinese Uprising Impending

London, Oct. 24.—Bennett Burleigh, after a careful inquiry into the situation, cables The Daily Telegraph from Shanghai that the political outlook in China is worse than prior to the "boxer" outbreak in 1900. Widespread operations of secret socities show a dangerous recrudescence of anti-foreign feeling. Drilling of large bodies of well equipped troops is proceeding night and day and the Chinese authorities are buying wholesale all kinds of military equipments and stores.

Mikado's Brother to Visit Us

Washington, Oct. 24.—It is stated authoritatively that the purpose of the Emperor of Japan, in sending on a visit to this country his adopted brother, Prince Fushimi, who will reach San Francisco about the middle of November, is to strengthen by every appropriate means the traditional friendship between the United States and Japan.

Heavy Seizure of Lottery Tickets

New York, Oct. 24.—In a series of raids, representatives of District Attorney Jerome's office seized $100,000 worth of lottery tickets and arrested six men and one woman. The prisoners are charged with selling lottery tickets at wholesale to ticket peddlers. Most of them ostensibly sold "steamship tickets."

Highwayman a Murderer

Chicago, Oct. 24.—While resisting an attempt to rob him as he sat in his place of business last night, William H. Kneiring, a saloon keeper, was shot by one of four highwaymen and killed. The robbers escaped, but not before one of them was shot and wounded.

MATURING PLANS

Hostile Armies Meanwhile Remain In Same Positions

ROADS HAVE BECOME DRY.

Kuropatkin Trying to Get Facts as to Enemy's Force on His Eastern Flank--Sixty Thousand Russian Casualties In the Battle on the Shakhe River

St. Petersburg, Oct. 24.—There is no change in the relative positions of the armies on the Shakhe river. General Sakharoff telegraphs that the Russians have been bombarding Lamuting and the Buddhist temple at Linshinpu, while the Japanese have been shelling the Russian position at Shakhe and near Linshinpu.

A press dispatch from Mukden reports that the Japanese are fortifying an important height south of Shakhe, and that neither side shows a disposition either to advance or to retire. Another press dispatch from the Russian front says the situation is not yet ripe for the resumption of the offensive.

This meagre, but significant admission, all that the censor allows to pass over the wires, doubtless indicates that General Kuropatkin is maturing important plans and distributing his forces in readiness for another attempt to break the Japanese resistance. The roads are now dried by wind and frost, the cold is intense, and flooded fields have been frozen. Thus military movements are fairly facilitated, though at the same time it will be more difficult to carry on entrenching work.

Great importance is attached to a report from Tokio that 200 Russians have crossed the Taitse river east of Bensihu, and that 20,000 are concentrated at Kauta pass, 20 miles northeast. This may indicate the direction of Kuropatkin's next blow, or possibly it is intended to disconcert the Japanese, and compel them to weaken their force on the railroad. Whatever Kuropatkin's ultimate object may be, there is no doubt that he is desirous of obtaining the most reliable information as to the number and disposition of the force on his eastern flank. The Cossack may be relied on to harrass the Japanese line of communication, besides reconnoitering.

Upwards of 20,000 of the Russian soldiers wounded in the battle of Shakhe have reached Harbin.

A report has reached St. Petersburg, but lacks confirmaton, that the Port Arthur fleet has left its anchorage in the harbor and has taken up a position in the roadstead.

Sixty Thousand Casualties

Tokio, Oct. 24.—Manchurian headquarters reported by telegraph that the number of Russian dead found on the Shakhe battlefield and interred up to Oct. 22 makes a total of 10,550. Upon this total Russian casualties are estimated to exceed 60,000. The Japanese captured a total of 45 guns during the Shakhe operations. The report of the Manchurian headquarters follows:

"The enumerated spoils, etc., of the battle of Shakhe follow: Prisoners, about 500; enemy's dead left on the field, 10,550; 45 guns, 37 ammunition wagons, 6920 shells, 5474 rifles, 78,000 small arms, ammunition, numerous swords, shovels, axes and tents. Besides the enumerated property the uncounted property, extending over 25 miles, will reach an enormous quantity. The enemy's dead is being interred with military honors. According to the number of dead, the Russian casualties are estimated at over 60,000."

Church and State Remain Separate

Paris, Oct. 24.—By a decisive vote, the chamber of deputies approved the government course in the matter of the rupture of diplomatic relations between France and the Vatican by the recall of Ambassador Nizard. The vote was taken after a boisterous session, in the course of which Deputy D'Asson called Prime Minister Combes a brigand and was restrained with difficulty from personally assaulting the premier.

Trolley Victims In Hospital

Newton, Mass., Oct. 24.—Four of the five persons who were removed to a hospital as a result of injuries received in a street car collision in the Chestnut Hill district will remain in the hospital, it is said, for several days. All are reported as doing nicely.

Out of Work and and Despondent

Bath, Me., Oct. 24.—William Thayer, 20 years old, a private in the Maine militia, committed suicide by hanging to a tree. Thayer was at Manassas in connection with the recent army maneuvers and had since been unemployed and despondent.

Three Killed In Railroad Wreck

Natchez, Miss., Oct. 24.—Three railroad men were killed and two severely hurt in a head-on collision between a passenger and a freight train here. It is asserted that the failure of the passenger train to obey orders was the cause of the accident.

Earthquake In Northern Europe

London, Oct. 24.—Dispatches received here from various points report a severe earthquake and much damage to property throughout Scandinavia and Denmark. Thus far, however, no fatalities have been reported.

DEMOCRATIC CLAIMS

Certain to Carry States Where Republicans Are In Power

New York, Oct. 24.—A statement was given out by the Democratic national committee after a consultation between Chairman Taggart and Messrs. Sheehan and Nichol. It says:

"In every state and in all sections Democrats have buried their differences and are working harmoniously and enthusiastically for the ticket. Our canvass shows that scarcely anywhere is there a trace of the dissensions which for the past eight years has unhappily divided the party. In the states of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, Maryland, Delaware and West Virginia, and in many of the western states, our organization is now more complete and effective than ever before in the history of the party. Candidates for governor who stand for the highest type of citizenship and represent popular local Democratic issues in all the doubtful states are greatly aiding the national ticket by their energetic campaign.

"Our canvass shows that we shall certainly carry by good majorities the states of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Maryland, Delaware, West Virginia and Indiana, and that in addition to these electoral votes we shall have the majority, if not all, of the electoral votes of the Rocky mountain states. It is impossible at this juncture to predict the outcome in Wisconsin.

"Illinois must also be classed in the doubtful column, for, although at this moment our canvass there is imperfect, it is sufficiently advanced to indicate an unmistakable Republican defection."

Socialists With Laboring Class

New York, Oct. 24.—Eugene V. Debs, presidential candidate of the Socialist party, addressed a meeting in the Academy of Music to ratify his nomination. Debs was given an enthusiastic reception. He said that the economic freedom of the laboring class hinges upon the showing which the Socialists may make in the coming election, and declared that the enmity between the leisure class and the laboring class is increasing.

Colonel Didn't See Senator

Wheeling, Oct. 24.—Messrs. Bryan and Fairbanks spent Sunday in this city. Mr. Bryan last night called at the McLure house to pay his respects to Senator Fairbanks, but the latter had left a few minutes before to board his special car for the night.

New York's Great Voting List

New York, Oct. 24.—This year's total registration in Greater New York is 688,775, which exceeds by nearly 50,000 the record of 640,522 in 1900. Each borough showed a substantial increase over the registration of four years ago.

Death Will Take Place of Wedding

Yonkers, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Rose Godz left her home here in her bridal dress, accompanied by Andrew Borle, whom she was to marry, and John Tobaczar, who was to act as best man. A few hours later she was found bruised and unconscious at the foot of a reservoir wall and she is dying. Borle and Tobaczar are under arrest and tell conflicting stories as to how the woman came to fall. She and the two men were seen on top of the wall not long before she was discovered unconscious on the rocks 25 feet below.

Political Argument Ends In Murder

Huntington, W. Va., Oct. 24.—Within half an hour after the benediction had been pronounced at the close of services in the church near Mill Creek yesterday, one man who had listened to the sermon, William Kennedy, was dead, and another, Henry Wellman, was fatally stabbed. The tragedy was the result of a political argument in which a half dozen members of the congregation engaged after leaving the church. Three arrests have been made.

TWO DRIVERS MISSING

One Had Driven Mail Wagon Since July and One Who Had Just Taken His Place Supposed to Be the Robbers

Lynn, Mass., Oct. 24.—The postal authorities have learned that the sack containing the registered mail from the Lynn and West Lynn postoffices for the Boston postoffice was stolen Saturday night, the letters and parcels rifled and all the enclosed money and valuables taken. The police and postoffice inspectors are searching for Henry Alden and John Beaupry, recent drivers of the mail wagon.

The contract for carrying the mails between the postoffices and the railroad station has been held for three years by J. E. Armitage, a liveryman. In July Armitage hired Alden to drive the wagon. A week ago Alden gave notice that he should quit work on Saturday, and at noon on that day he drove his wagon into the stable and was given his pay. Beaupry, a friend of Alden, was appointed his successor.

Beaupry called at the postoffice Saturday evening at 5:45 o'clock for the mail that leaves for Boston on the 6:01 train. Among the sacks was one containing the registered mail, 39 letters and packages in all, 26 from the Lynn office and 13 from the West Lynn office. Beaupry signed a receipt for the registered mail and drove his wagon in the direction of the railroad station.

At 6:30 o'clock Alden drove the wagon into the stable, but this occasioned no comment, as it was thought that he was assisting Beaupry in his first day's work. After putting away the wagon Alden left the stable and nothing has been seen of him since.

Late Saturday night William Hanscom, the night mail driver, discovered under the seat of the mail wagon two mail pouches that had been cut open and several loose letters. He notified Postmaster Sanderson, and after a brief investigation the latter discovered that the two rifled pouches and a third pouch containing registered matter had been stolen. Inspector Snow of the Boston office was assigned to the case.

The missing registered sack was discovered Sunday afternoon in the possession of two boys in an alley running off Exchange street. The boys said that they had just found it there. The letters were found in the sack. All of them had been cut open and the money and valuables extracted.

Philadelphia, Oct. 24.—With the forehead crushed and the throat cut, the body of Michael Mayerski, 4 years old, who was kidnapped near his home in Phoenixville by a band supposed to be gypsies, was found in an abandoned farmhouse a few miles from Valley Forge. Only the courage and the quick action of the police saved the prisoners from being roughly handled by a large crowd of excited people.

Bomb Throwing at Barcelona

Barcelona, Oct. 24.—A dynamite bomb was exploded in the street while crowds were welcoming Minister of Commerce Salazar, who had come here to preside at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. No one was injured, but the buildings in the vicinity of the scene of the explosion were damaged and the crowds were thrown into a panic. The police believe the explosion to have been the work of a group of anarchists.

Somebody Got Rich Find

Albany, Oct. 24.—Police in all parts of the country have been notified of the loss of $25,000 worth of jewelry by Mrs. E. P. Gavit of this city. Mrs. Gavit left a small hand satchel containing the jewelry on a seat in the Grand Central station in New York city, and did not discover her loss until her train, which makes no stops between New York and Albany, was well on its way.

The Carnegie Peace Palace

New York, Oct. 24.—Andrew Carnegie, with Mrs. Carnegie and their daughter, arrived here on the steamship Celtic. When Carnegie was informed that money is needed to maintain the peace palace at The Hague, he said: "I have nothing to do with that. There is a convention between the powers to maintain it and they should not find any trouble in raising $100,000."

Army Officer Killed by Mule

Fort Riley, Kas., Oct. 24.—Lieutenant Roberts of the Seventh cavalry died here after undergoing an operation for injuries received in an accident while on a hunting trip. While trying to adjust the harness of a wagon a mule kicked Roberts and threw him under the wagon, a wheel passing over his abdomen.

PASSENGERS IN A PANIC

Eighteen Hurt In Collision Between Trolley Cars

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 24.—Trolley cars in a rear-end collision on the Westboro and Marlboro street railway, 2½ miles west of Westboro, injured 18 people. Slippery rails are accountable for the accident. A car was being sent to Worcester for repairs. It was several minutes ahead of a regular car. Its progress was safe until meeting a hill, when the car kicked, and before the motorman could get control, it was running backward down the hill. At the foot of the hill at a curve it was met by the regular car, which was making good speed to climb the hill.

The cars crashed together with terrific force, demolishing the vestibules on both cars and ripping every seat from its fastenings on the Westboro car, which had 20 passengers aboard. There were no passengers on the other car. A panic among the passengers followed the crash in the frantic effort of the people to get out of the wreckage.

Maniacal Attempt at Poisoning

Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 24.—Mrs. Frank Pendergast, who has a boarding house, is dangerously ill as a result of eating a relish from a jar which was left at her door. Similar jars containing a relish had been left at six other boarding houses in the immediate vicinity, but Mrs. Pendergast is the only one known to have eaten the food, which is thought to have contained a large quantity of paris green. It is the general opinion that the attempt to poison whole families could only have been the work of an insane person.

Keough Died of Lung Trouble

Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 24.—After holding an autopsy on the body of Daniel Keough, who made an ante-mortem statement to the effect that he had been beaten by J. H. McMurray, candidate for alderman, after a political argument, Medical Examiner Downs reported to the coroner that he failed to find any external indications of violence. Keough died, he said, of pneumonia and oedema of the lungs.

No quarrel preceded the shooting, according to Mrs. Hill. Hill may recover.

Blue Hills.

Several thousand people went to the top of the great Blue Hill yesterday. It was a delightful day and many improved the time to visit the highest point in eastern Massachusetts. The street cars now carry passengers to the foot of the mountain, and it takes from 15 to 20 minutes to walk to the top.

Never before did so many people seek the Blue Hills to enjoy the charms and delights therewith presented, which the eye and the mind feast upon for hours without weariness, breathing the fresh, delightfully clear air of heaven, and be almost entranced by the beauty of the scene, which cannot be reproduced by the hand of man.

The club is strictly non-partisan, but plans active work in politics this fall.

Ten Acre Lots.

Editors of Daily Ledger:

Replying to "A Well Wisher" in a recent issue, would say that ten-acre lots are not at all necessary for our public schools today. The grounds about the John Hancock building are probably at the present time the most extensive in the city affording the children plenty of room for play, and plenty of sunlight. Wonder if a "Well Wisher" ever saw the Coddington schoolhouse and its small, cramped, and gloomy schoolyard, or the schoolyard at the Adams school!

With the great expense which the city is under for the maintenance of its public schools, I could not as a taxpayer favor any further addition to the John Hancock school yard. The building is up-to-date and was a good investment, but ten-acre lots are entirely out of the question for the public schools of Quincy. Some of the taxpayers would feel relieved if they could clear the mortgage from a little house lot of 5000 square feet which they occupy as a home.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition. XI—Madam Cavendish, whose silence about Wingfield's innocence shields her own granddaughter. Catherine, wishes him to wed Mary. Wingfield is guided by a witch to a secure hiding place for the arms. XII—The grand ball at the governor's, with Mary as belle. She reveals her affection for Wingfield.

CHAPTER XVI—(Continued).

With that I was in my saddle and rode away, for I had lingered, I feared, too long, and as God is my witness I had no faith that Catherine Cavendish did more than assume such interest in me for her own ends, for love, as I conceived it, was not thus.

I hastened on my way to Barry Upper Branch, where was the rendezvous,

Catherine urging Harry not to become a rebel and on my way had to pass the house where dwelt that woman of strange repute, Margery Key, and it was naught but a solidity of shadow beside the road except for a glimmer of white from the breast of her cat in the doorway. But, as I live, as I rode past a voice came from that house, though how she knew me in that gloom I know not.

"Good speed to thee, Master Wingfield, and the fagots that thou didst gather for the despised and poor shall turn into blessings, like bars of silver. That which thou hast given, hast thou forever. Go on and fear not, and strike for liberty and no harm shall come nigh thee." As she spoke I saw the bent back of the poor old crone in the doorway beside her cat, and partly because of her blessing and partly because, as I have said before, whether witch or not, she was aged and feeble and ill fitted for such work, I leaped from my saddle and gathered her another armful of fagots and laid them on her hearth.

I left the old soul shedding such tears of gratitude over that slight service and calling down such childish blessings upon my head that I began to have little doubt that she was no witch, but only a poor and solitary old woman, which, to my mind, is the forlornest state of humanity. How a man fares without those of his own flesh and blood I can understand, since a man must needs have some comfort in his own endurance of hardships, but what a woman can do without chick or child and no solace in her dependency I know not. Verily I know not that such be to blame if they turn to Satan himself for a protector, as they suspected Margery Key of doing.

I rode away from Margery Key's, having been delayed but a moment, and the quaver of her blessings was yet in my ears when verily I did see that which I have never understood. As I live, there passed from the house of that ne'er do well next door, which was closed tightly as if to assure folk that all therein were sound asleep, a bright light like a torch, but no man carried it, and it crossed the road and was away over the meadows, and no man whom I saw carried it, and it waved in the wind like a torch streaming back, and I knew it for a corpse candle. And that same night the man who dwelt in that house was slain while pulling up the tobacco plants.

I rode fast, marveling a little upon this strange sight, yet, though marveling, not afraid, for things that I understand not, and that seem to savor of something outside the flesh, have always rather aroused me to rage as of one who was approached by other than the given rules of warfare rather than fear. I have always argued that an apparition should attack only his own kind and hath no right to leave his own battlefield for ours when we be at a disadvantage by our lack of understanding as to weapons. So if I had time I would have ridden after that corpse candle and got, if I could, a sight of the bearer, had he been fiend or spook, but I knew that I had none to lose. So I rode on hard to Barry Upper Branch.

There was an air of mystery about the whole place that night, though it were hard to see the use of it. Whereas, generally speaking, there was a broad blazon of light from all the windows, often to the revealing of strange sights within, the shutters were closed, and only by the lines of gold at top and bottom would one have known the house was lit at all. And whereas there were always to be seen horses standing openly before the porch, this night one knew there were any about only by the sound of their distant stamping. And yet this was the night when all mystery of plotting was to be resolved into the wind of action.

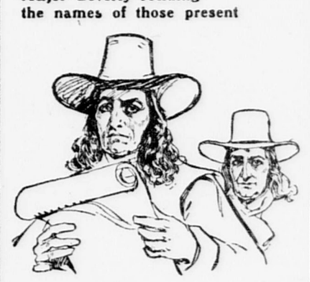

I entered and found a great company assembled in the hall, and all equipped with knives for the cutting of the tobacco plants and arms, for the militia, as was afterward proved, was an uncertain quantity. One minute the soldiers were for the government, when the promises as to their pay were specious, and the next, when the pay was not forthcoming, for the rioters, and there was no stability either for the one cause or the other in them.

There was a hushed greeting from one or two who stood nearest—Sir Humphrey Hyde among them—as I entered, then the work went on. Major Robert Beverly it was who was taking the lead of matters, though it was not fully known then or afterward, but sure it can do no harm at this late date to divulge the truth, for it was a glorious cause and to the credit of a man's honor if not to his purse and his standing with the government.

Major Beverly stood at the head of the hall with a roll of parchment in his hand, wherefrom he read the names of those present, whom he was dividing into parties for the purpose of the plant cutting, esteeming that the best plan to pursue rather than to march out openly in a great mob. Thus the whole company there assembled was divided into small parties and each put under a leader, who was to give directions as to the commencement of the work of destruction.

My party was headed by Captain Noel Jaynes, something to my discontent, for the hardest luck of choosing in the world to my mind is that of choosing a leader, for the leader is in himself a very gallstone. Never had it pleased me to follow any man's bidding, and in one way only could I comfort myself and retain my respect of self, and that was by the consideration that I followed by my own will and so in one sense led myself.

Major Beverly reading the names of those present

When at last we set forth, some of us riding and some on foot, with that old pirate captain to the front, hunched to his saddle, for he never could sit a horse like a landsman, but clung to him as if he were a swaying mast and worked his bridle like a wheel, with the result of heavy lunges to right or left, I felt for the first time since I had come to Virginia like my old self.

We hurried along the moonlit road, then struck into a bridle path, being bound for Major Robert Beverly's plantation, he being supposed to know naught of it, and indeed after his issuing of orders he had ridden to Jamestown to see Sir Henry Chichely and keep him quiet with a game at piquet, which he much affected.

As we rode along in silence, if any man spoke Captain Jaynes quieted him with a great oath smothered in his chest as if by a bed of feathers, and presently I became aware there were more of us than when we started. We swarmed through the woods, our company being swelled invisibly from every side, and not only men, but women, were there. Both Mistress Allgood and Mistress Longman were pressing on with their petticoats tucked up, and to my great surprise both of the black women who lived at Barry Upper Branch. They slunk along far to the rear, with knives gleaming like white fire at their girdles, keeping well out of sight of the Barry brothers, who were both of our party, and looking for all the world like two female tigers of some savage jungle in search of prey, since each moved with a curious powerful crouch of secrecy as to her back and hips and wary roll of fierce eyes.

When we were fairly in the open of Major Beverly's plantation some few torches were lit, and then I saw that we were indeed a good hundred strong, and of the party were that old graybeard who had played Maid Marion on May day and many of the morris dancers and those lusty lads and lasses, and they had been at the cider this time as at the other, but all had their wits at their service.

Not a light was in Major Beverly's great house, not a stir in the slave quarters. One would have sworn they were all asleep or dead. But Captain Jaynes called a halt and divided us into rank and file like a company of reapers, and to work we went on the great tobacco fields.

I trow it seemed a shame, as it ever does, to invoke that terrible force of the world which man controls, whether to his liberty or his slavery 'tis the question, and bring destruction upon all that fair inflorescence of life. But sometimes death and destruction are the means to life and immortality. Those great fields of Major Robert Beverly's lay before us in the full moonlight, overlapping with the lusty breadth of the new leaves gleaming with silver dew, and upon them we fell. We hacked and cut, we tore up by the roots.

ADVERTISE IN THE QUINCY LEDGER.

The reorganized Quincy Historical society, of which Brooks Adams, Esq., is president, and James L. Edwards, Esq., secretary, is entertaining this afternoon at the John Quincy Adams birthplace. The occasion is the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the marriage of President John and Mrs. Abigail Adams.

The reception is rather of an informal nature although the society has sent out three hundred invitations. Many prominent people are included in the list and as it is expected that many of those who received invitations will bring ladies and friends with them fully five hundred may attend.

The reception is at 3 o'clock at at which time there will probably be a few brief remarks by the president Brooks Adams and possibly the Hon. Charles Francis Adams, who arrived in town this morning.

The Globe says: Very fitting is it to commemorate thus the marriage of the second President of the United States with sprightly Abigail Smith, the daughter of a Weymouth parson, whose letters supply the most vivid picture anywhere to be found of actual life before and after the war of the revolution.

It was probably at one of the pleasant social gatherings at the hospitable mansion of her grandmother, Mrs. John Quincy, that Abigail first met John Adams, the son of the Braintree farmer, who had been born in the quaint old house now in the care of the Quincy Daughters of the Revolution, had been sent to Harvard college, had supported himself by school teaching while studying law in Worcester, and had now returned to Braintree for a short stay preparatory to practicing his profession.

Born in Quincy.
Lived in Quincy.
Died in Quincy.

This is a record of which the "City of Presidents" is proud in the life of President John Adams; and President John Quincy Adams was also born in Quincy, made Quincy his home, but died suddenly in the Capitol at Washington while serving this district as a member of Congress.

John Adams was born in the northerly of the two old houses now standing on Franklin street, and at the time of the birth of his son President John Quincy Adams was living in the southerly house, which is reopened today by the Quincy Historical Society.

John Adams was graduated from Harvard college in 1755. He taught school in Worcester where he also studied law, and began the practice of law at the age of 23. He became, later, chief justice of the supreme court, and in 1774 was a delegate to the first Continental Congress.

In 1778 he sailed to France as United States commissioner, but declined upon his arrival not to serve. On his return in 1779 he was selected by the old town of Braintree as a delegate to the convention for a formation of a State government for Massachusetts, where he took a prominent part.

Next we find him at the Court of St. James at London, as American Ambassador.

In 1789 he was chosen on the ticket with Washington as the first Vice President of the United States and was reelected. He was inaugurated as President Mar. 4, 1797, serving four years.

Retiring from the office of President in 1801 he made Quincy his home. In 1820 he was a delegate to the convention called to revise the State constitution. He died July 4, 1826, on the same day as President Thomas Jefferson, his co-patriot.

No President of the United States ever lived to such an old age as John Adams, who was in his 91st year. In fact only four have lived to be over 80.

Few realize how inseparable were the old First church at Quincy and President John Adams, Both came into existance about the same time, and passed out also about the same year, as will be seen by the data beneath the church illustrated on this page.

It is recorded in history that "Mr. Adams was never absent from church, forenoon or afternoon, when in Quincy, and his son, President John Quincy Adams was as punctual at church."

President John Adams was the owner of Pew No. 1 in the old church, which was on the south of the main aisle, directly in front of the pulpit. He was accustomed in the latter years of his life to sit on the short seat across the head of the pew. The pew directly across the aisle was reserved for the minister's family. Directly in the rear of President Adams was Daniel Greenleaf, and the pew on the side was occupied by James Baxter.

Bowling Season Opened.

The Old Colony Bowling association will start its second year of candle pins next Thursday night. The circuit this season will consist of six teams—Quincy, Quincy Point, East Weymouth, Weymouth, South Braintree and Holbrook.

Quincy, the champions of last year, will start away from home and roll at Holbrook. The South Braintrees will stroll down to Quincy Point, while the two Weymouth teams will have a pitched battle on the East Weymouth alleys.

The Quincy team will be practically the same as last season with the exception of White, who is away, and will depend on Hart a new man to fill his shoes. The Quincy Points have a new team this season and claim that they will make the going very warm. However the Old Colony League looks for a very successful season and much better scores than last year are expected to be made.

Costly Mausoleums.

Potter Palmer of Palmer House, Chicago, fame, is to be commemorated by a mausoleum to be built of granite in the Grecian Ionic style, and to cost —this is the important point—upwards of $60,000. Up to the present time the costliest thing in this line in Chicago is the E. J. Lehmann memorial, on which $45,000 was spent. But this will be far distanced by the Palmer mausoleum and considerably distanced by the projected mausoleum of the Honore family. New York boasts of one lately erected for the last resting place of John Mackay, of the Postal Telegraph company, almost, if not quite, as costly as the Palmer tomb is going to be. And in both New York and Chicago there are many monuments and mausoleums on which money has been lavished.—New Bedford Standard.

Recess at School.

Mr. Finch, principal of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools, has revived the old time out-of-door recess in the first, second and third grades, in each building. No system of ventilation can keep the air of our crowded school rooms absolutely pure, and a brisk run in the open air is much more beneficial to the children than any in-door gymnastics. Mr. Finch also believes that supervised play is education, so that the time spent on the playground during the recess may be made profitable as well as enjoyable.

NO SECRETS.

All Republicans Invited to Meeting in Ward Three.

The Ward Three idea of a public meeting for the selection of candidates for the Republican caucus is one that might well be adopted by other wards and by all parties.

It is really an old-fashioned caucus where all the Republican voters of the ward take a part in the selection of candidates rather than a select few. The wants of all parts of the ward are considered and there is more or less discussion of city affairs in general. There is no effort to steal a march on the voters, and no secret work, but all Republicans attending the meeting are invited to present candidates, and it is quite probable that there will be a double list of names to go on the caucus ballot so that the voters will have a chance for a choice.

A meeting has been called in Ward Three for Thursday evening, not to boom any particular candidate for Mayor, but to select names to present to the City caucus for Councilmen and School Committee from ward, and Councilman-at-large; also for Ward Committee.

As Ward Three has a gentleman prominently mentioned for Mayor, it is probable that the Mayoralty issue may be touched upon, and it is hoped Mr. Thompson will be present.

A WITHDRAWAL.

Probably Only One Democratic Candidate for Legislature.

Timothy J. Carey, one of the Democratic candidates for Representative to the General Court, has withdrawn. It is probable that the vacancy will not be filled and that James H. Elcock will be the only Democratic candidate from this district.

Alliance Meeting.

Monday afternoon's meeting of the First church Alliance was a most interesting one. Over fifty ladies gathered in the church parlor. Mrs. George G. Saville, the president, presided during the opening exercises and the short business session, after which she introduced Mrs. Wilson Marsh, chairman of the afternoon.

This year the Alliance is making a study of the great religions and Monday afternoon's subject was Zoroaster and Mohammed. Mrs. Marsh handled her subject broadly, interestingly and in such a clear way that every one got a better understanding of these two religions. Mrs. George W. Morton, Mrs. Annie E. Faxon, Mrs. John W. Sanborn and Mrs. George G. Saville supplemented Mrs. Marsh's paper by reading short selections.

A social half hour with refreshments followed.

In Different Directions.

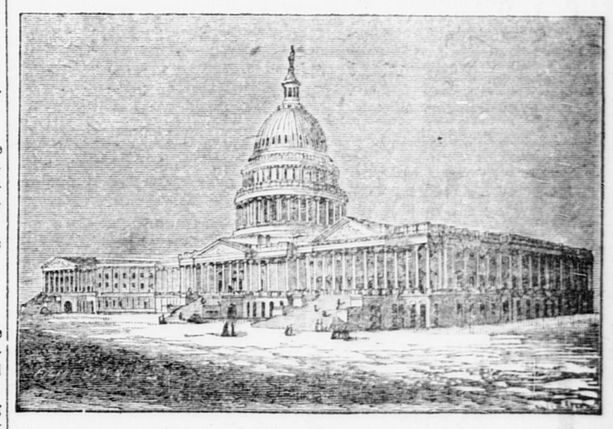

The rear trucks of the 8.40 car this morning for Brockton took the switch at Temple street and started in that direction while the forward trucks kept the main line. The result was the delaying of all cars until the service car arrived and pulled the car to the car barn.

The coreless apple from the United States and Canada is the latest sensation in the fruit markets of England.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ Many people believe that the liquor traffic should be licensed, but no sane man believes that any saloon keeper should be licensed or allowed to sell liquors that are impure. It may be remarked that one of the strongest arguments in favor of the dispensary system (prevailing in South Carolina) is that the liquors thus sold are pure.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

☞ Statistics show that the number of cigarettes smoked in this country is less by a billion than the number smoked ten years ago, the supposed reason being the substitute of little cigars, cheroots or stogies. It is not yet determined, however, whether the cigarette or the cheap tobacco of many of the little ones is the worse for the system, and whether we have really made any gain in the abandonment of the coffin-nails to this extent.—Haverhill Gazette.

☞ In Louisville, where strikes in the building trades have been unusually numerous, the working carpenters have formed a union which stands for the open shop, has no walking delegate and purposes to prevent strikes and lockouts. We can imagine the scorn with which the agitators of the intense and aggressive stripe will regard so namby-pamby a proposition. They will say, as they have said many times before, that the battle against Capital can never be won by the use of confetti. As to that, it is evident that, so far, not much progress has been made by the use of brickbats. The Louisville carpenters have an opportunity to show whether they can do better.—New Bedford Standard.

☞ There are few things that can always be sold at a profit, but automobiles are a notable exception. The owner of one of these machines can always get rid of it, even if he has to give it away or burn it up, and he has with him always the consoling thought that he can by so doing stop the expense. It may puzzle some people to figure out how we make out that this amounts to selling an automobile at a profit. If there are any such doubters, we will not stop to argue the question with them. It is sufficient to know that any one who has been in the game will realize what it means to stop the expense.—Banker and Tradesman.

England Sends Note to Russia on Disaster to Fishermen

JINGO ELEMENT FOR WAR

King Edward Characterizes the Affair as "Unwarrantable"--His Interference In Diplomatic Matter Gives Emphasis to Exceptionally Grave Nature of Crisis--The Russian Embassy Thinks the Whole Affair "Obviously a Mistake"

London, Oct. 25.—Great Britain has sent a long and urgent note to the Russian government, officially detailing the circumstances of the amazing and unexplained attack by the Russian second Pacific squadron during the night of Oct. 21 on British fishing boats in the North sea. The text of the note has not been given out, but it is officially stated from the foreign office that it contains the significant announcement "that the situation is one which, in the opinion of his majesty's government, does not brook delay."

Meanwhile the conservative public and press are remarkably undemonstrative. As usual the jingo element demands war, and even in official quarters some go so far as to say that it may be necessary to stop the Pacific fleet, pending settlement of the whole affair, though this extreme measure, it is believed, will not be necessary. Everywhere there is evidence of the very positive opinion that this is no time for the usual diplomatic dilly-dallying; that there must be no delay and no limit set by Russia to her apology, or the extent of compensation for sufferers by what the king himself terms "the unwarrantable action" of the Baltic squadron commanders.

The deep resentment of the whole British public, however, is reflected by the incident at the Victoria station last night on the arrival of Count Benkendorff from the continent, when a crowd gathered and hooted him and endeavored to break the windows of his carriage.

There is no attempt anywhere among men of responsibility to magnify the occurrence into a deliberate act of war, but, in view of the present inability to find an explanation, there is being poured upon the heads of the officers of the squadron a flood of invective and insinuation, though incompetence first and thereafter complete panic is the most generally accepted explanation.

Thus far no official word has been received from St. Petersburg as to the attitude of the Russian government. The fact that it had been decided during the day to prepare a semi-official note expressing the regret of the Russian government and its willingness to make full reparation so soon as the responsibility is fixed, was communicated to Lord Lansdowne and was the first information on the subject he had received from St. Petersburg.

The absence during the day of Count Benkendorff, the Russian ambassador, necessarily caused some delay, but the Russian charge of affairs, who called at the foreign office on request by note from Lord Lansdowne, unofficially expressed deep regret and, as far as it was possible for him to go, gave assurance of speedy action by the Russian government. Lord Lansdowne in this interview told M. Sansonoff, the charge, that he desired to see Ambassador Benkendorff Tuesday morning.

Lord Lansdowne asked Sansonoff if he could offer any explanation of the affair, and the latter replied that he only knew what had appeared in the papers and that he had not received any word up to that time from St. Petersburg. Lord Lansdowne gave no suggestion as to what might be done in the matter.

At the Russian embassy it was stated that "the whole affair was so obviously a mistake from whatever cause, that Russia's course was plainly dictated, namely, apology and ample compensation."

All eyes are now turned towards St. Petersburg, awaiting word from the Russian government.

The actual casualties during the one-sided bombardment off Dogger Bank can be correctly stated since the arrival at London last evening of the carrying ship Swift, reporting the safety of the missing trawlers. The Swift left the fleet at 10 a. m. on Oct. 23. Her captain says:

"The Russians gave not the slightest warning prior to the commencement of the firing. The admiral of the fishing fleet sent up a rocket warning, and then the firing commenced. He again sent up four green rockets, but this only seemed to increase the ferocity of the bombardment. The poor marksmanship of the Russian gunners was the only thing that saved the entire fleet within range of the searchlights and guns."

At the inquest at Hull it was stated that one vessel, the Crain, was sunk, and that four or five were more or less damaged. In the statement of the coroner to the jury that official said it was a question of very grave and possibly international importa[illegible], but it would be their duty to find wh[illegible] were the murderers of the dead men. After the identification of the decapitated bodies of the skipper and mate of the Crain the inquest adjourned to Nov. 2.

Reparation Without Delay

London, Oct. 25.—The feature of the editorial articles of the newspapers is a practically universal demand that the government insist upon the punishment of the Russian officers responsible for the Dogger Bank affair as the only possible insurance against a recurrence of the kind. Without this, it is argued, the seas will be unsafe for any peaceful vessel.

King Edward's telegram characterizing the affair as "unwarrantable" is considered to reflect well the national temper, and the fact that the king has taken the unusual course to thus interfere in a diplomatic matter gives the greatest satisfaction as emphasizing the exceptionally grave nature of the crisis. A day's reflection on the matter only leads the newspapers and public opinion to greater firmness in demanding that the amplest reparation shall be made without delay.

Regret is expressed that there should have been any demonstration against Count Benkendorff, the Russian ambassador, who, personally, is credited with friendly feelings toward Great Britain.

Waiting For Official Report

St. Petersburg, Oct. 25.—No official or unofficial Russian explanation of the affair off Dogger Bank is forthcoming up to this time and the world must wait until Vice Admiral Rojestvensky gives his version of the firing upon the British fishermen. Rojestvensky has communicated direct to the czar, but the admiralty has not yet received a report. The foreign office has issued a statement expressing the regrets of the government for the incident, but explains that no formal action is possible until Rojestvensky's official report of the affair has been received.

Thought He Saw Enemy's Signals

Paris, Oct. 25.—The Matin's Cherbourg correspondent report that he interviewed the commander of the Russian torpedo flotilla, which left that port Monday, who said that during Sunday night a wireless message from Vice AAdmiral Rojestvensky had been received as follows: "Redouble precautions and vigilance. Enemy signalled in channel."

Thinks Fishermen Aggressors

Rome, Oct. 25.—The Russian ambassador here expresses the opinion that the Russian squadron opened fire on the fishing boats in the North sea only after an attempt had been made to attack some of the ships.

Possible Act of Resentment

London, Oct. 25.—The steamship Esperanza, which is due to sail from Barry with provisions for the Russian Baltic fleet, was found last evening to be in a sinking condition, her hull having been pierced below the water line. It is suggested locally that it is the wanton act of some man employed about the ship in resentment of the North sea incident.

May Be Needed In England

St. Johns, Oct. 25.—The British cruiser Charybdis received orders last evening to be in readiness to proceed to England on a moment's notice. The training ship Calypso has been ordered to arrange for the mobilization of 500 men of the Newfoundland naval reserve. There is much excitement in naval circles here.

Armies Not Four Miles Apart

London, Oct. 25.—There has been no resumption of fighting of a general character on the Shakhe river. Both Russians and Japanese are entrenching their positions. The outposts are within 700 yards of each other and less than four miles separates the main armies. A scarcity of fuel is causing the soldiers great suffering since the cold weather set in.

Carnegie Honored by Steel Men

New York, Oct. 25.—The opening exercises of the American meeting of the Iron and Steel institute were held last night. The session was marked by the presentation to Andrew Carnegie of the highest honors that the institute can bestow, the Bessemer gold medal, because of his life work in the development of the iron and steel industry of the world.

Perjurer Gets Ten Years

New York, Oct. 25.—Herman Froehlich, a butcher, was convicted of perjury and was sentenced to serve 10 years in state prison. This is the last of the numerous cases of "straw bondsmen" which have been prosecuted during the past year. Froehlich admitted on the witness stand that he had gone on more than 4000 bonds in this city.

Jealousy and Double Tragedy

Pittsburg, Oct. 25.—Peter Fitzwilliams, a railroad switchman, shot and fatally wounded Mrs. Sarah Walters, and then killed himself by putting a bullet into his brain. The shooting is thought to have been brought about by jealousy. Mrs. Walters has been separated for several years from her husband.

To Extend Wireless Telegraphy

Washington, Oct. 25.—One of the principal recommendations of Rear Admiral Manney, chief of the bureau of equipment, in his annual report, is that congress be asked for an appropriation of $150,000 for the further equipment of the navy with wireless telegraphy.

OUR FASTEST CRUISER

Colorado Goes Far Beyond Requirements In Official Trial

Boston, Oct. 25.—The armored cruiser Colorado, built for the United States navy by William Cramp & Sons of Philadelphia, on her official trial covered 88 nautical miles in 3 hours 57 minutes and 7 seconds, an hourly average speed of 22.26 knots throughout the run, exceeding the speed of 22 knots called for in the builder's contract by more than a quarter of a knot. It is thought that tide corrections may increase her average slightly. The highest speed developed was 23.33 knots, and this was attained on the homeward run for 6.6 miles.

The performance rates the Colorado as the fastest vessel in the armored cruiser class, and one of the fastest in the navy, the only American warships that have ever exceeded her speed being the Columbia and Minneapolis. The engines worked smoothly and developed an average horse-power of 28,000, and the ponderous twin screws whirled at an average of 128 revolutions a minute and at times made 130 revolutions. The great ship responded to the slightest touch on her helm.

In the turning, "figure eight" and other maneuvering tests, the ship gave splendid satisfaction, particularly in the complete turn, which she made in a circle the diameter of which was a little less than twice the length of the cruiser.

Senator Crane's Popularity

Pittsfield, Mass., Oct. 25.—A Republican rally here last evening was the occasion for a remarkable demonstration in honor of Senator Crane, who presided. The assemblage jumped to their feet and cheered for Crane for fully five minutes. The women in the gallery waved handkerchiefs and fans. When Crane could command silence he expressed his appreciation of the support and encouragement which the people of Berkshire county have given him whenever he has been a candidate for office.

Big Fire In Sewing Machine Plant

Orange, Mass., Oct. 25.—A fire in the factory of the New Home Sewing Machine company last evening caused a loss of $100,000. The fire broke out about 15 minutes after the employes left the factory and a few moments later a tremendous explosion occurred, but beyond spreading the flames throughout the building no serious damage was done. The fire, it is believed, was caused by over-heated ovens, in which 25 tons of iron is baked every night.

Rejected Suitor Killed Himself

Boston, Oct. 25.—Charles Melzard, aged 19, called upon Rose Bransfield in South Boston last night and while they were standing on the doorsteps the girl told him she did not wish him to call upon her any more. He replied: "Then I will shoot you and myself, too." Miss Bransfield jokingly answered, "All right, go ahead," whereupon Melzard shot himself in the side, the ball lodging near his heart. He died in a short time.

Gloucester Fisherman Wrecked

Ipswich, Mass., Oct. 25.—The Gloucester fishing schooner Olive May was wrecked on Ipswich bar last night and her crew of four men had considerable difficulty in saving themselves. The wreck was seen by the life savers of the Plum island station, who rowed four miles in their surfboat and assisted the fishermen in getting ashore. The Olive May was valued at $2500.

POISON IN RELISH

Amesbury Police In a Fair Way to Trace Its Source

"SAMPLES" WERE FREE

Woman to Whom They Were Sent Placed Them at Doors of Boarding Houses Designated by Writer Unknown to Her

Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 25.—The police have a definite clew through which they hope to determine the identity of the person or persons who were instrumental in placing pint jars of piccalili, said to have contained poison, upon the doorsteps of seven boarding houses in this city, and which resulted in the poisoning of Mrs. Frank Pendergast. The police are reticent as to developments in the case, but are less positive than at first that the attempted poisoning was the work of an insane person.

Mrs. Howard F. Currier, a canvassing agent, has notified the police that she innocently, acting for parties unknown to her, left the jars of piccalili at the boarding houses as a sample of goods she expected later to offer for sale. Some time last week Mrs. Currier received a letter purporting to come from a firm which prepared relishes. The correspondent asked her to act as the firm's agent and to distribute samples of piccalili which had been forwarded to her address. A list of names to whom the samples were to be delivered was given and the letter added that the parties mentioned had bought the same product of the house a year ago.

Mrs. Currier undertook the work and wrote to her correspondent for further instructions. She received no reply to her letter, but Friday afternoon, after she had delivered the original samples, she received four additional jars of the relish. These jars were broken and she made no use of them.

The police are in possession of the letter received by Mrs. Currier, but are reticent as to what discoveries, if any, have been made as to its origin. It is said that the letter came from Haverhill, but this statement cannot be confirmed. It is known that the name used by the writer was fictitious.

Nine of the jars received by Mrs. Currier have been sent to the state chemists at Boston for analysis of their contents. Mrs. Pendergast, who ate from the jar left on her doorstep, is reported as recovering.

Actress Gilpert Honored

New York, Oct. 25.—With the audience on its feet, cheering Mrs. Gilbert and singing as one chorus "Auld Lang Syne," the curtain went down at the Lyceum theatre last night on the first performance of "Granny." The ovation accorded Mrs. Gilbert throughout the evening was almost overwhelming and the venerable old lady was deeply affected. "Granny" will run for three weeks, after which Mrs. Gilbert, who is now 83 years old, will retire. "Granny" was written by Clyde Fitch at the request of Mr. Froman and was designed as a tribute to Mrs. Gilbert upon her retirement.

Family Difficulties Led to Shooting

New York, Oct. 25.—William H. O'Connor, a real estate broker, aged 45, was shot in the neck and probably mortally wounded last night by Wolf Philips, 70 years old, a publisher, in the vestibule of Philips' home as O'Connor was entering the house with Miss Philips. Philips says that he acted in self-defense. The shooting is the result, according to the story of Mr. and Mrs. Philips to the police, of family difficulties for which Philips blamed O'Connor.

AGREED AT LAST

Episcopal Bishops and Deputies Settle the Divorce Question

Boston, Oct. 25.—An agreement on the divorce question was reached by the house of bishops and the house of deputies of the Episcopal general convention, after many days of discussion. That section of the canon bearing directly on the remarriage of divorced persons, which was amended by the bishops, assented to by the deputies, and becomes effective at once, says that:

No minister, knowingly after due inquiry, shall solemnize the marriage of any person who has been or is the husband or the wife of any other person then living, from whom he or she has been divorced for any cause arising after marriage. But this canon shall not be held to apply to the innocent party in a divorce for adultery; provided, that before the application for such remarriage a period of not less than one year shall have elapsed after the granting of such divorce, and that satisfactory evidence touching the facts in the case be laid before the ecclesiastical authority, and such ecclesiastical authority, having taken legal advice thereon, shall have declared in writing that, in his judgment, the case of the applicant conforms to the requirements of this canon; and provided further, that it shall be within the discretion of any minister to decline to solmnize any marriage.

Town Under Martial Law

Norfolk, Oct. 25.—Berkley, the scene of the lynching of the negro Blount, is now under martial law. Two encounters occurred last night between the troops and negroes. One negro refused to obey orders to move on and was bayonetted. He is not seriously hurt. Two militiamen called upon a negro seen crossing a lot to halt. In reply he opened fire on them and they replied. The negro escaped in the darkness. It is thought he is wounded. There is an ugly undercurrent of feeling among the negroes of the town.

In the confession Johnson is said to have declared that Oscar Dahlgren killed Abbott, and that three other men are implicated.

Parker the Star Attraction During a Yiddish Play

GIVEN A GREAT OVATION

Demonstration Lasted Half an Hour and Was Only Stopped by Police Taking Advantage of Audience Tiring of Bedlam

New York, Oct. 25.—Judge Parker was the centre last night of the wildest, most enthusiastic demonstration that has greeted him in his campaign for the presidency. As the guests of the Tammany leaders of the East Side, Parker and District Attorney Jerome attended the performance at the Grand Street theatre, and later a dinner at an East Side restaurant nearby. At the theatre Adler, the Hebrew actor, played the Yiddish version of King Lear, and a Hebrew drama entitled "Truth." The theatre was crowded from the ground floor to the top balcony and the streets for blocks around were so congested that a reserve force of police was required to open a passageway from the theatre to the restaurant.

The candidate had not intended to come to New York until today, but upon receiving a pressing invitation from the Tammany leaders, Jerome and large business interests of the East Side, he consented to come last evening. He arrived here at 7:45 o'clock, accompanied by his secretary. They were met by Jerome and managed to get into the playhouse unobserved, but as soon as they stepped into boxes reserved on the left of the stage the audience sent up a cheer and men, women and children surang to their feet, clapping their hands, and waving fans and wraps.

The actors attempted to go on, but finding there was not an eye directed toward the stage decided to suspend. The orchestra joined in the ovation, playing "Way Down in My Heart I've Got a Feeling For You." Judge Parker arose and bowed right and left. Mr. Adler stepped toward the box occupied by the candidate's party and bowed and the audience applauded this action. Many persons called for a speech from the judge, but he paid no attention beyond smiling and bowing. The demonstration continued until the audience, tiring, was gotten under control by the police, who before had difficulty in restraining a tendency to rush the box.

Many political leaders made their way to the box and met Parker. All were known on the East Side and were applauded as they shook hands with the candidate.

After half an hour of bedlam in the theatre Parker decided the players had been sufficiently lenient. He took his seat and motioned Adler to proceed and the interrupted act was allowed to proceed.

As the curtain was rung down at 10:30 the party left their boxes and started up Grand street toward a nearby restaurant. The street in front of the theatre looked as if the whole East Side had been turned out of home with no place to go but the theatre or the cafe. A squad of police took the lead and pushed through a wild, surging mob that was shouting itself hoarse, discharging fireworks and otherwise contributing to a scene of enthusiasm.

Judge Parker seemed to like the experience and though jostled and pushed from side to side, he laughed and joked with the crowd. The police would not allow the procession to stop long enough for any of the crowd to shake hands with the candidate. The dinner continued for nearly two hours and then the candidate went to his apartments at the Hotel Seville, where he will remain until Thursday night or Friday, conferring with his political lieutenants and advisers.

CARS TO DUDLEY ST.

The Railway Corporations Disagree on Terms.

[Special to the Ledger.]

Boston, Oct. 24,—Negotiations between representatives of the Old Colony street railway company and of the Boston Elevated Railway company over the proposed running of through cars from Quincy to the station of the elevated at Dudley street, Boston, have resulted in a disagreement. The meetings of the representatives have not been public and it is not given out what the causes of the disagreement are.

It is said at the office of the Railroad Commissioners that a further effort will be made to reach a settlement and another conference will be held this week, but the date is not given out.

It is recognized that the people of Quincy have a direct and large interest in procuring terms whereby their cars instead of stopping at the bridge over Neponset river, may be taken to Dudley street and there make connections with the Boston elevated system. The reasonableness of the desire of the people of Quincy seems to be admitted.

It is said at this end of the line that the Mayor of Quincy has done all he could to secure the benefit to the people of his city.

MOONLIGHT GOLF.

Remarkable Performance on the Links at Wollaston.

Making a score that would be considered remarkably good in the daytime and coming within three of bogy, was the feat accomplished Monday night in moonlight by Robert G. McAndrew, the professional of the Wollaston golf club, says the Globe. The entire 18 holes were made in the presence of a large gallery, and Mr. McAndrew was cheered and congratulated on his brilliant showing when he finished.

The play Monday grew out of discussion started at the clubhouse a few evenings ago, when it was stated by a prominent member that the course could not be made by moonlight in less than 100 strokes. Mr. McAndrew at once said he would make the course in a less number, and the man who started the discussion said there was $25 for the one who would make the course inside 100. Monday Mr. McAndrew proved that he was a master of the game.

The weather conditions were nearly perfect. There was a bright moon and no wind, but a mist from the Neponset river somewhat obscured a long-distance view. There was a heavy white frost on the grass, which made some of the greens slow, but Mr. McAndrew made up for these handicaps by beautiful drives for which he is famous.

THE BOYS WARNED.

Birds and Property to be Protected by the Police.

After repeated complaints on account of damage to property, personal injury and the wanton and cruel killing of birds, the police will strictly enforce an ordinance that was passed by the City Council of Quincy in 1903, that reads as follows:

Section 1. No person shall, in or across any street or public grounds in the city, throw stones, snowballs or other missiles, or shoot with, or use an air gun, bow and arrow or sling.

Section 2. Whoever violates any provision of the foregoing section, shall be punished by a five not exceeding twenty dollars for each offence.

The first steps toward enforcing this ordinance were taken last Friday, when an officer visited the Wollaston school and requested Principal Finch to have all of the sling shots that were in possession of the boys, collected and given to him.

This was done, and a large number of the dangerous little missiles were captured. The boys were then warned that any one violating any provision of the ordinance would be promptly arrested. It is hoped that "A word to the wise will be sufficient," and that there will be no future trouble.

Jell-O Gets the Gold Medal.

St. Louis, Oct. 24, 1904.—The International Jury has awarded the Gold Medal to The Genesee Pure Food Co., Le Roy, N. Y., manufacturers of Jell-O and Jell-O Ice Cream Powder. Their exhibit in the Agricultural Building is probably the most popular of any at the Fair, and the Jell-O hand-boxes, which they give free to all visitors, are seen everywhere.

"MISFIT FACTORY."

Y. M. C. A. Schools Turn Out the Finished Article.

A misfit factory for men, where the square pegs are placed in the square holes and the men who started wrong are turned right-about-face and steered in the direction of their natural bent where fame and fortune may await them, is in full operation in Boston, says the Journal.

Carpenters are turned into the hopper in the great mill, which is part of the factory, and come out architects, lawyers or physicians. Blacksmith's have the blacksmithing knocked out of them, and come out musicians or artists or civil engineers. Musicians are turned into blacksmiths if their bent lies that way, artists into draughtsmen or telegraph operators, and all men who apply at this factory are either assisted to make the most of themselves at the employment they are pursuing or taught some other trade or profession into which they can gradually become expert while still working at their old trade.

The place where these wonders are worked is the Evening Institute of the Boston Y. M. C. A., now beginning its tenth season with the largest number of pupils in its history. "We are working mainly to correct mistakes," said Frank Palmer Speare educational director as he described the work.

"Take one instance out of many—one of our brightest pupils in the clay modeling and drawing department, Charles W. Kalmin. He came here a year ago, a sailor, whose highest wages had been but $40 a month, and who had worked most of his life for $6 and $7 a week. He did not know when he came here just what he wanted to do, but by a little judicious questioning we found he was fond of drawing. I asked him if he would like to do some clay modeling, but he did not even know what clay modeling was, yet in one winter's work he has developed such remarkable talent that when he leaves the school after this term he can secure employment easily for $40 a week, and has a brilliant future before him as a promising sculptor.

"We are proud, and with reason, of American institutions of learning, yet only one man out of every hundred goes to college here and only two out of every hundred go to high school. That is not the worst, for while only half of our people go to school after 12 years old, only a few evening schools give any opportunities to the employed to study and correct the mistakes they made by too hastily choosing a profession or a trade, and this is what we are doing. We had 1455 students last year, which shows that our efforts are appreciated.

"Among the thousands of graduates we have turned out we have had many who have been of peculiar interest to me. One man was a printer—I shall call him S,—who lived about seventeen miles out of Boston, and is now one of the most promising lawyers on the North shore. He traveled, 14,976 miles coming to and from school, and missed but one session, and that was the night his mother died.

M., another case, was a night freight agent on the Boston and Albany, earning $10 a week. He is now the house doctor of one of Boston's leading hospitals.

B. drove a grocery wagon for $9 a week, and has just entered the Brooklyn Navy Yard for $1600 a year. James Magee, a California carpenter is now a leading architect in his home city, and I might multiply these instances by scores."

The above facts are from a article which appeared in the Journal last week, and are simply a few of the tangible results of the work of one Young Men's Christian Association. Every organization doing this work among young men is able to give such illustrations of the benefits of the work.

The Quincy association will soon be doing such a work. Already forty applications have been filed for evening class work in various lines which touch the daily lives of men.

The first class will open Tuesday, November 1, in monumental drawing The mechanical drawing class will open the following night. Applications are in for English, mathematics and free-hand drawing. These latter subjects will not be taken up unless a sufficient number of applications are filed to put the classes on a self-sustaining basis.

No other organization is so well adapted or so well equipped to do this work as the Y. M. C. A. Nearly 35,000 young men will be in the association classes in this country this season. Among them are men of all classes and types, shades of religious belief and disbelief. This sort of work appeals to fair-minded, thinking people and gains their sympathy and support.

In a recent issue of the Boston Transcript appeared an editorial from which we quote, "Archbishop Ireland is on record as saying that the only Protestant agency which the Roman Catholic Church covets and imitates is the Young Men's Christian Association. Certain it is that the rapidity of this organization's seizure of strategic points, the flexibility of its policy, the common sense and directness of its methods, and the economy of its administration commend it to many who might dissent from its theology and its spirit of exclusiveness in choice of governing members and officials."

After speaking at length of the efficient manner in which this organization grasped stragetic points during the war with Spain, and of its wonderful work in foreign lands, and its success in impressing itself upon governments and diplomats it adds:

"Notable proof of this fact has just been given in the official request of our first minister to the State of Panama, Hon. John Barrett, who through the State Department, has requested the International Young Men's Christian Association committee to send trained secretaries to Panama to work in one or both of its largest cities, where our engineers and the marines will congregate, who can establish there such associations and furnish such buildings as guard the physical, moral and spiritual welfare of young men in our American cities and towns and in many of the European and Asiatic cities where the Young Men's Christian Association has a foothold and is intrenched.

"Mr. Barrett's suggestion or plea is based on his own observation of the workings of the Y. M. C. A. in foreign cities in which he has been stationed as a diplomat or special agent of the Government.

"Such a petition, doubtless, will move the Y. M. C. A. to a prompt, favorable response, as it will involve extra expenditure the funds to make it possible should be forthcoming from those to whom the matter appeals as a matter of religion and patriotism. From a purely selfish standpoint the policy which Mr. Barrett urges is wise."

As the Transcript predicted, the International Committee has responded, and Mr. J. R. Thompson of the Field Department has gone to Panama to pioneer the work there.

No organization has ever received such recognition from governments as this is receiving through its Army and Navy work and now through the Canal Commission. It is indeed inspiring to know that such an organization is in our midst and will soon be doing a work among the boys and young men of this city in response to their varied needs. Surely it should receive the hearty support of all the people of Quincy.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition. XI—Madam Cavendish, whose silence about Wingfield's innocence shields her own granddaughter. Catherine, wishes him to wed Mary. Wingfield is guided by a witch to a secure hiding place for the arms. XII—The grand ball at the governor's, with Mary as belle. She reveals her affection for Wingfield.

CHAPTER XVI—(Continued).

In a trice we were bedlam loosened—that is, the ruder part of us. Some of us worked with no less fury, but still with some sense of our own dignity as destroyers over destruction. But the rabble who had swelled our ranks were all on fire with rage and wasted themselves as well as the tobacco. They filled the air with shouts and wild screams and peals of laughter. That fiercest joy of the world, the joy of destruction, was upon them, and sure it must have been one of the chiefest of the joys of primitive man, for all in a second it was as if the centuries of civilization and Christianity had gone for naught and the great gulf which lies back of us to the past had been leaped.

One had doubted it not had he seen those old men tearing up the tobacco plants, their mouths dribbling with a slow mutter of curses, for they had drunk much cider, and, being aged and none too well fed, it had more hold on them than on some of the others, and to see the women lost to all sense of decency, with their petticoats girded high on account of the dew, striding among the plants with high flings of stalwart legs, then slashing right and left with an uncertainty of fury which threatened not only themselves but their neighbors as well as the tobacco, and shrieking now and then, regardless of who might hear, "Down with the king!"

Often one cut a finger, but went on with blood flowing, and their hair begun to fly loose, and they smeared their faces with their cut hands, and as for the two black women, they pounced upon those green plants with fierce swashes of their gleaming knives and, though they could have sensed little about the true reason for it all, worked with a fury of savagery which needed no motive only its first impetus of motion.

Captain Jaynes rode hither and thither striving to keep the mob in order and enjoining silence upon them, and now and then lashing out with his long riding whip, but he had set forces in motion which he could not stop. Fire and flood and wind and the passions of men, whether for love or rage, are beyond the leading of them who invoke them, being the instruments of the gods.

Sir Humphrey Hyde, who was beside me, slashing away at the plants, whispered, "My God, Harry, how far will this fire which we have kindled spread?" but not in fear so much as amazement.

And I, bringing down a great ring of the green leaves, replied, and felt as I spoke as if some other than I had my tongue and my voice:

"Maybe in the end, before it hath quite died out, to the destroying of tyranny and monarchy and the clearing of the fields for a new government of equality and freedom."

But Sir Humphrey stared at me.

"Sure," he said, "it can do no more than to force the king to see that his colony hath grown from infancy to manhood and hath an arm to be respected, and compel him to repeal the navigation act. What else, Harry?"

Then I, speaking again as if some other moved my tongue, replied that none could say what matter a little fire kindleth, but those that came after us might know the result of that which we that night begun.

But Sir Humphrey shook his head.

"If but Nat Bacon were alive!" he sighed. "No leader have we, Harry. Oh, Harry, if thou wert not a convict! Captain Jaynes is sure out of his element in defending the rights of the oppressed and should be on his own quarter deck with his cutlass in hand and his rapscallions around him, slaying and robbing, to be in full feather. Naught can he do here. Lord, hear those women shriek! Why did they let women come hither, Harry? Sure Nick Barry is in his cups. Not thus would matters have been were Bacon alive. The women would have been at home in their beds, and no man in liquor at work, for I trust not the militia. Would Captain Bacon were alive, as he would have been had he not been foully done to death."

This he said believing, as did many, that Bacon's death was due to treachery and not fever, nor, as many of his enemies affirmed, from overindulgence in strong spirits, and I must say that I, remembering Bacon's greatness of enthusiasm and fixedness of purpose, was of the same belief.

As he spoke I seemed to see that dead hero as he would have looked in our midst with the moonlight shining on the stern whiteness of his face and that look of high command in his eyes which none dared gainsay. And I answered again and again, as with an impulse not my own, "And maybe Bacon in truth leads us still, if not by his own chosen ways, to his own ends."

"Truly, Harry," Sir Humphrey agreed, "had it not been for Bacon, I doubt if we had been at this night's work."

All the time we talked we advanced in our slashing swath up the field, and all the time that chorus of wild laughter and shrieks of disloyalty kept time with the swash of the knives, and all the time rose Captain Jaynes' storm of fruitless curses and commands, and now and then the stinging lash of his riding whip, and also Dick Barry's. As for Nick Barry, he lay overcome with sleep on a heap of the cut tobacco.

And all the time not a light shone in any of Major Robert Beverly's windows, and the slave quarters were as still as the tomb.

The store of ammunition in the tomb had been secretly removed and portioned out to the plant cutters at nightfall.

It was no slight task for even a hundred to cut such a wealth of tobacco as Major Robert Beverly had planted, work as fast as they might, and proceed over the fields in a fierce crawl of destruction, like an army of locusts, and finally they begun to wax impatient. And finally up rose that termagant, Mistress Longman, straightening her back with a spring as if it were whalebone, showing us her face shameless with rage and stained green with tobacco juice and here and there red with blood, for she had slashed ruthlessly. She flung back her coarse tangle of hair, threw up her arms with a wild hurrahing motion and screamed out in such a volume of shrillness that she overcapped all the rest of the tumult:

"To the stables, to the stables! Let out Major Beverly's horses and let them trample down the tobacco."

Then such a cry echoed her that I trow it might have proceeded from a thousand throats instead of one hundred odd, and in spite of all that Captain Jaynes could do, seconded by some few of us gentlemen who rallied about him, but were helpless since we could not fire upon our coadjutors, that mob swept into Beverly's stables, and presently out leaped, plunging with terror, all his fine thoroughbreds, the mob riding them about the fields in wild career. And one of the maddest of the riders, sitting astride and flogging her steed with a locust branch, was Mistress Longman, while her husband vainly fled after her, beseeching her to stop, and those around were roaring with laughter.

Mistress Longman urging that the tobacco be trampled down

Then some must let out the major's hogs, and they came rooting and tumbling with unwieldy gambols. And with this wild troop of animals, and the mob shrieking in a frenzy of delight, and now and then a woman in terror before the onslaught of a galloping horse, and now and then a whole group of cutters overset by a charging hog, and up and after him, and slaying him, and his squeals of agony—verily I had preferred a battlefield of a different sort.

And all this time Major Robert Beverly's house stood still in the moonlight, and not a noise from the slave quarters, and the fields were all in a pumice of wasted plant life, and we were about to go farther, when I heard again the cry of the little child coming from a chamber window. I trow they had given her some quieting potion or she had broken silence before.

With all our efforts the mob could not be persuaded to return Major Beverly's horses to his stables, which circumstance was afterward to the saving of his neck, since it was argued that he would not have abetted the using of his fine stud in such wise, some of the horses being recovered and some being lamed and cut.

So out of the Beverly plantation we swept, those on horseback at a gallop and those on foot tramping after, and above the tumult came that farthest reaching cry of the world—the cry of a little child frantic with terror.

Then they were for going to another large plantation belonging to one Richard Forster, who had gone in Ralph Drake's party, when all of a sudden the horses of us who were leading swerved aside, and there was Mistress Mary Cavendish on her Merry Roger, and by her side, pulling vainly at her bridle, her sister Catherine.

THE ADAMS FAMILY WELL REPRESENTED

A Large Gathering of Prominent People of Quincy and Vicinity

At the 140th Anniversary of the Marriage of President and Mrs. John Adams.

In response to invitations sent out by the Quincy Historical Society, a large number gathered at the President's houses Tuesday afternoon to observe the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the marriage of John and Abigail Adams.

It was also to make known the fact that the residence of President and Mrs. John Adams (the birthplace of President John Quincy Adams) would hereafter be opened to the public. The Historical society which has recently been reorganized has engaged James Rideout as care taker, who will show visitors about the house upon request.

Those present of the Adams family were: Hon. and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, their two daughters, Mrs. Mary Adams Abbott, Mrs. Louise Catherine Adams Perkins; Mrs. John Quincy Adams and daughter, Miss Abigail Adams; Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams; Mrs. Mary Adams Quincy and two daughters, Miss Dorothy Quincy and Miss Elinor Quincy.

Letters of regret from Charles W. Eliot president of Harvard University; Prof. J. B. Sewall, formerly master of Thayer Academy; Seth Mann, Jr., of Randolph Prof A. B. Hart of the History Department of Harvard, Rev. Daniel Munro Wilson, Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson of Cambridge, James P. Baxter of Portland, Me., and many others.

Cheerful log fires blazed in all the open fireplaces Tuesday and the visitors wandered through the various rooms examining the interesting articles of antiquity which were explained by the members of the board of curators. The closets were full of rare old china and pewter and were greatly admired.

On the walls of what was the parlor were three handsome and rare old pictures that were brought out from Boston for the day. These were pastels of John and Abigail Adams, and an oil painting by John Quincy Adams by Copley. Beneath the portrait of President John Quincy Adams was a beautiful wreath of green.

There were also on the walls of the different rooms quotations from the letters of Abigail Adams which reveal her character. One of these which will serve as an example was from a letter written April 11, 1776, which read "I hope in time, to have the reputation of being as good a farmeress as my partner has of being a good statesman."

The guests of the afternoon began to arrive early, and shortly after 3 o'clock they gathered in the yard. President Brooks Adams, Esq., the president of the society and the great grandson of President John Adams, spoke briefly, expressing his great pleasure at seeing them all. To him the house and the day are interesting, more than any day. It was seldom that two people whose names have survived centuries are so well remembered. Here it was she wrote those letters. I have come to consider the day as devoted particularly to her. He then introduced his brother Charles Francis Adams.

Mr. Adams gave a brief historical sketch of two old houses. He said he was 13 when his grandfather died. He had lived with him for five or six years. He died in 1848. My recollections of this neighborhood goes back to sixty years. That house the John Adams birthplace, is the oldest. This is the more interesting however.

When John Adams married there was a question whether he would marry one of the Quincy family or Nabby Smith as she was called. Immediately after this marriage he came to Quincy to live.

He then referred to the finding of the grave of John Quincy in the old burying ground upon which he intended to erect a memorial. He died as John Quincy Adams was born. He was named for his great grandfather who was then passing away.

They remained here until 1783 when peace was declared. It was here that John Adams drafted the constitution of Massachusetts which was subsequently adopted. Soon after they went to Europe and they never returned to this house to live. When they returned to Quincy it was to the Vassel house, but it was so different from what she had expected and the contrast was so great from what she had in Europe that she sat down and cried.

Thomas Boylston Adams lived in the John Adams birthplace until 1817 and it was here that Isaac Hull Adams was born. He was named for the Commander of the frigate Constitution.

The speaker visited Elizabeth Adams on her death bed three years ago. She was then 93. She barely knew him but while he was present she kept repeating these words:

"Thank God for Hull's victory." Her mind had gone back to those stirring times.

After the death of John Adams the house was occupied by various tenants. The house gradually fell into disuse until he almost wished a conflagration would solve the problem of what to do with the houses..

Then W. G. Spear of A. Historical society took an interest in one house and it was put in repair. Mrs. Titus also conceived the idea of having the other house for the Daughters of the Revolution.

Now the two houses are devoted to the exact purposes for which I hope they will ever continue to be, as they are perfect specimens of old New England homes.

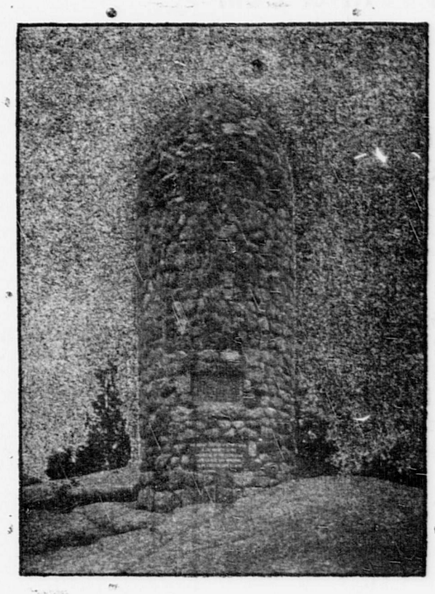

The time will come when there will be pilgrimages to Boston, as there now are to Europe to see these objects of interest. As far as his family were concerned he would as soon think of alienating an own child as selling the property for commercial purposes at any price.

The guests were then invited to visit the John Adams birthplace and partake of tea.

It was most fitting on this, the day of the anniversary of the marriage of John and Abigail Adams that two of their great great grand-daughters should preside at the refreshment table; Miss Abigail Adams pouring tea and Miss Dorothy Quincy, coffee. Members of the Historical society assisted in serving among them being Mrs. Brooks Adams, Mrs. George W. Morton, Mrs. William G. A. Pattee, Miss Ellen Fotter, Mrs. William E. Aiden, Mrs. Otho Hayward, Mrs. Theodore Hardwick, Miss Putnam, and others.

Drift of Opinion.

☞If John Sharp Williams is really anxious for the American voter to go to the polls, two weeks from to-morrow as he declaimed was his wish, on Saturday, why does he not talk that way, in the Eighth Mississippi district? The population of the five counties comprising the district is 190,000. Mr. Williams was elected to Congress, according to the report furnished by himself, "without opposition, receiving 1433 votes." There should be in his district upwards of 30,000 men of lawful age, and as much entitled to vote as the 1433 who voted for him. Why does not Mr. Williams urge the silent 28,000 to come out to the polls? A man who profits by a suppression of the votes of American citizen is a poor preacher to Massachusetts freemen.—Lynn Item.

☞The operatives of Fall River have in large numbers been on a strike for several months. Their conduct in this trying period entitles them to the commendation of all thinking people. It speaks much for the intelligence and law-abiding characteristics of the citizens of a municipality when 25,000 of its wage-earners go on a strike and yet so conduct themselves that there is no increase in lawlessness, but a general disposition shown to manfully and bravely meet a situation distressing and grievous.

It is admitted by every one that the competion of the South, where, under Democratic rule, labor laws are less restrictive and less humane, is responsible in part for this condition. It may and it may not be that the competion is sufficiently serious to demand the proposed cutdown. Of that, it is not proper for me to speak, but it is certain that it is a serious competition, and that it is the duty of the Executive, in the interest of labor and of capital to see to it that no legislation is placed on our statute books that adds unnecessarily to the handicaps under which our cotton industry is conduct. —Gov. Bates at North Adams.

AN AIRSHIP IN FACT.

Baldwin's Arrow Makes Ten-Mile Flight at St. Louis.

TRIAL A DISTINCT SUCCESS.

Maneuvers Even After the Motor Had Broken.

St. Louis, Oct. 26.—Propelled part of the way by its own power and the remainder by a wind blowing 10 miles an hour, the flying machine Arrow, owned and perfected by Thomas S. Baldwin of San Francisco, in charge of A. R. Knabenshue of Toledo, made an unannounced flight of 10 miles from the World's Fair grounds over St. Louis and across the Mississippi river to Cahokia, Ills.

The performance attracted the attention of thousands of persons, who cheered almost continuously as the big flying machine passed over the exposition grounds and soared high above the high buildings of the business quarter of St. Louis.

Clinging to the framework of the car, his precarious foothold being an iron tube that forms one side of the base of the triangular network of supports and ribs of the Arrow's body, Knabenshue maneuvered the flying machine in circles and against the wind until an accident to the motor rendered the big fan propellers useless and curtailed his command of direction.

In spite of this, Knabenshue maneuvered the flying machine into the wind, and was enabled to steer the Arrow in a course that varied several points off the wind and to land at a point of his own selecting.

There were few persons at the aerodrome when the flight began, but as the airship, several hundred feet in the air, sailed over the Transportation building, thousands watched it maneuvering at the will of the operator.

Slowly the Arrow turned and, breasting the wind, made progress in the direction from which it had come. Again the big cigar-shaped balloon answered its helm and again soared above the exposition buildings on its way to the Cascades. In attempting to make the second turn the motor broke, but almost instantly Knabenshue gained control and steered a straight course.

When Knabenshue found that he could still control the movements of the airship, he decided to effect a landing on the east side of the Mississippi river, and directed his course over the southwestern residence quarter of St. Louis, where his flight was watched by thousands.

Passing rapidly eastward, the Arrow reached the business quarter, where its appearance was the signal for great excitement. Clerks deserted their desks, street cars were stopped, and all business was suspended until the airship passed.

Although then nearly a mile high, Knabenshue could be seen, occasionally moving backward and forward on the small platform, keeping the ship under control and directing its movements either upward or downward as he desired.

After sailing high over the sky scrapers, Knabenshue passed to the Illinois side of the Mississippi river and headed toward Cahokia, where he brought the airship to the ground easily, the large balloon settling slowly to the ground and resting lightly on its framework.

After landing, Knabenshue said that the trial of the airship was a distinct success and that he could have brought the flying machine to the ground at any time, but that, as he could, to a certain extent, control its movements and felt himself in no danger, he decided to continue the flight and demonstrated that, even though the motor was broken, the Arrow could be controlled. The flight occupied exactly one hour. The motor broke about 15 minutes after the start.

The airship was constructed under the personal supervision of Captain Baldwin in California, for the $100,000 prize competition, and differs in many features from ships constructed in the past.

The gas balloon is cigar-shaped, of Japanese silk, 54 feet long and 17 feet in diameter. The frame attachment is 30 feet long and carries a double cylinder, seven-horse power gasoline engine, making 2000 revolutions of the propellers a minute possible. The machine is arranged so that the ship is pulled instead of pushed.

EPISCOPALIANS ADJOURN.

Pastoral Communication the Feature of the Closing Session.

Boston, Oct. 26.—The triennial general convention of the Episcopal church, which has been in session here since Oct. 5, was ended last evening with a public service in Trinity church. From the pulpit Bishop Potter of New York read a pastoral letter addressed to the church at large.

The communication, which consisted of more than 3000 words, considered some of the problems now before the country. Regarding divorce, the pastoral said that the facility with which the marriage relation may be taken on and put off is one of the menaces of American civilization, to the possible perils of which Christian people are as yet very imperfectly aroused. The letter made a plea for the permanence and security of the family. It also discussed the negro problem, stating that the church was taking steps to correct the situation so far as possible.

Little business of importance was transacted at the final business sessions. A resolution permitting foreign congregations not in communion with the church to use forms of service in their own tongue was adopted after a sharp contest. This legislation was enacted specifically for the benefit of Swedish congregations in Minnesota.

A DEMOCRATIC RATIFICATION.

Boston, Oct. 26.—The national and state Democratic tickets were ratified at a meeting in Tremont temple last night. The great building was crowded and thousands were unable to gain admittance. Prior to the meeting there was a torchlight procession. The paraders gathered in front of the South Terminal station, where the gubernatorial candidate, William L. Douglas of Brockton, was met and escorted to the temple with much cheering, band-playing and the burning of red fire. The speakers at the temple were William A. Gaston, national committeeman from this state; Mayor Collins of Boston, John R. Dos Passos of New York, William L. Douglas and others. The audience showed approval of the attacks upon the Republican party and the Roosevelt administration.

CAUGHT AFTER SEVEN YEARS.

Boston, Oct. 26.—After waiting for seven years, the police yesterday arrested Samuel Newman on an indictment warrant issued in 1897. An effort to lynch the negro probably will be made.

Czar Expresses Deep Regret For North Sea Incident.

ADMITS A GIGANTIC BLUNDER.

Party Differences Buried by British Statesmen, the Country Standing Solidly Behind the Government In Its Demand For Immediate Reparation--Admiral of the Fishing Fleet Makes Official Report

London, Oct. 26.—The inevitable delays of diplomatic procedure appear to retard a complete and satisfactory settlement of the acute differences between Great Britain and Russia arising from the deplorable North sea affair. King Edward has received from Emperor Nicholas himself a cablegram expressing the deepest regret and a practical acknowledgment that Great Britain's peremptory note will meet with a reply conceding every demand for apology for the act of aggression against the British flag, compensation for sufferers and punishment of the officers responsible for what is everywhere conceded to have been a gigantic blunder, and the Russian ambassador to the court of St. James has expressed to Foreign Minister Lansdowne his sorrow and sympathy.

These developments have allayed to some extent the deep resentment in the public mind, and the admiralty gave evidence of its appreciation of the necessity of proving that it is prepared actively to support the position of the people of Great Britain and fulfil the expectations of the world when it issued the following statement:

"On receipt on Oct. 24 of the news of the North sea tragedy, preliminary orders for mutual support and co-operation were issued as a measure of precaution from the admiralty to the channel, Mediterranean and home fleets."

Count Benkendorff, the Russian ambassador, was occupied until late last night with a mass of cipher dispatches, and it was announced at the embassy that it would be physically impossible to prepare a formal reply in such a short time.

While Great Britain is stirred to its depths, there has not been the slightest evidence of a repetition of the rowdyism of Monday night, which is condemned on all sides. Popular appreciation of the situation was evidenced when King Edward appeared in public yesterday. He was greeted with more than usual enthusiasm on account of the decided tone of his telegram to the mayor of Hull on Monday.

The speeches of members of the cabinet and of the house of commons yesterday in different parts of the country voiced the sentiment of Great Britain, and the spirit in which the utterances were met show that for the moment party differences have been laid aside and that the country is solidly behind the government.

Lord Selborne, at the Pilgrims' banquet last night, denounced the Dogger Bank affair in the most outspoken terms yet heard from a member of the cabinet as an "inexcusable outrage," and "a terrible blunder which would be impossible in either the British or the American navy." Colonial Secretary Lyttleton, too, in another place, spoke in plain terms, saying that it was impossible to view the affair as other than the result of murderous intention or wicked negligence.

The postmortem examination of the bodies of the victims of the Dogger Bank affair was held yesterday at Hull. The proceedings were purely formal and no official announcement was made, but it is stated positively that both of the dead men bore wounds inflicted both by machine guns and a larger shell.

The report of Thomas Carr, admiral of the fishing fleet, dated from "The North Sea," is a picturesque touch, a plain sailor's yarn of the occurrence, which was handed to Foreign Minister Lansdowne last night. It is as follows:

"We were fishing in lat. 55.18 north, and long. 5 east, the night of Oct. 21. At 11:30 p. m. a large fleet of men-of-war sprang up on our lee bow, the wind being about south-southeast. One squadron passed by our lee side. The remainder, consisting of four battleships, steamed just across our head, throwing searchlights over our fleet. As soon as they got to windward they began firing on us, their projectiles flying all around and across our decks for a full quarter of an hour, some of the shots passing under our mainsails, unpleasantly near the men who were gutting fish in the pound that they cleared out down below, one shot passing right between them. I very much regret to say that others in the fleet were not so fortunate as us in escaping hurt.

"The Crane was sunk, her skipper and third-hand were killed, and all the rest of the crew were wounded with the exception of the cook. The skipper of the Gull it was who, being hailed by the Crane, saying, 'We are sinking,' hove in his gear, got a boat and went to the rescue of the unfortunate survivors.

"The Moulmein, Mino and Snipe all had shots pass through them, the two former vessels being obliged to make sail homeward. I think two or three vessels did not board us in the morning, but that may be owing to thick weather causing them to miss the fleet.

"I don't know whether they took us for Japanese or whether they were practicing to get their hands in. There must be a mistake somewhere. They ought to have known we were only inoffensive fishermen."

WAS DONE DELIBERATELY.

Suggestion That Drunken Commander Ordered the Bombardment.

London, Oct. 26.—A dispatch from Hull to The Times says that the correspondent, as the result of his investigation, is of the opinion that the attack on the British trawlers by the Russian second Pacific squadron was a deliberate act, perpetrated with knowledge of its character.

The correspondent argues that the fact that the first ships of the squadron steamed calmly by disposes of the conviction that the Russian officers had an attack of "nerves" and then contends that it is ridiculous to suppose that Russian men-of-war, largely manned by Finns, could have mistaken the trawlers for anything but fishing boats.

The correspondent minutely details the injuries inflicted upon the trawlers, and asserts that "every shot was about 2½ inches in diameter at the point of entry, evidently bullets from machine guns, while the trawlers also were struck by a bursting shell, of which a skipper picked up fragments. The Moulmein had a hole aft 15 inches long and eight inches wide at the point of entry, evidently made by a shell. One cannot swallow the yarn that the Russian gunners were paralyzed by terror or that darkness prevented them from distinguishing the vessels they were firing at."

Finally the correspondent contends that "the whole affair is compatible with the idea of a drunken commander yielding to the temptation to have a little fun among British fishermen, who are nothing more than peasants in the eyes of a well born Russian, and, according to the ideas of a Russian officer, especially one under the influence of vodka or champagne, a few roubles would settle the killing of a poor brute of a peasant."

PROBABLY A CASE OF PANIC.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 26.—Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's action in firing into the British fishing fleet remains as great a mystery as ever. The admiralty announces that the admiral's report has not been received. The admiralty still clings to the hope that the official report may place the affair in a more favorable light, though reluctantly the officials are disposed to admit that it may have been a case of panic.

KUROPATKIN AT HEAD OF ARMY.

FEARS OF MILL MEN.

Unsatisfactory Compromise May Result at Fall River.

MUST SOON PLAN TO REOPEN.

Trade Conditions Likely to Be In Favor of Strikers.

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 26.—Three months ago yesterday, when the mill strike was inaugurated, manufacturers were a unit in commending the strength of the wage agreement then signed. Now there are those among the signers who wish they had never seen the agreement and they would be glad to be released from some of its effects.

Differences have arisen in consequence of the desire of several of the signers to reopen the mills to relieve the suffering in the city and try to establish a wage basis under which some of them can operate and save some of their trade. The executive committee seeks only to carry out the purpose of the agreement, which is to establish the new wage schedule in all the mills, and the signers are not a unit in the matter of the policy to be adopted for the time being.

There is no difference among them as to the necessity for enforcing the reduction, but some feel that if action of a more positive character is not taken soon conditions in the market may change and place the treasurers at a disadvantage in explaining to stockholders why it is necessary to remain shut down to enforce the new scale. An influx of orders or a radical drop in cotton prices would warrant a reopening, and some treasurers believe that when those conditions come, as they must some time, public opinion in and out of the city will compel a compromise which will be unsatisfactory to the mills.

The stock of goods here is now small and cotton is cheaper than it was when the strike was inaugurated. The great curtailment of production is being felt in the primary market, and a resumption of a normal demand for goods bids fair to result in higher prices. It will then be much more difficult to enforce a wage reduction than it now is, and there will then be greater reason on the part of the operatives to prolong the strike than there now seems to be.

The request of certain treasurers for a meeting of the signers to the agreement has virtually been refused because the committee does not deem it prudent to call manufacturers together uutil it is clear that there will be unanimity among them. The minority is thus excluded from expressing its views, save as individuals, and the agreement thus makes them part of a combination which has become distasteful to them.

Members of the minority are taking steps to end the strike in their own way, but as this has been attempted before and thwarted, the committee feels secure in its position. From all that now appears the strike will go on for at least two or three weeks.

FLURRY IN UNION PACIFIC.

New York, Oct. 26.—Union Pacific sold as high as 112 yesterday and the aggregate dealings in that stock footed up 360,800 shares. The published assertion that the retirement of the Oregon Short Line participating bonds had been determined on was the inciting cause of this extraordinary movement. The truth of this report could not be learned from any official sources.

SOLDIERS STICK TO HITCH.

Savannah, Ga., Oct. 26.—Former Captain Hitch, who was dismissed from the military service of the state for failure to prevent the mob at Statesboro from lynching two negro prisoners, was last night elected as honorary member of the Oglethorpe light infantry, which Hitch commanded.

SEEKING VOTES OF LEPERS.

Honolulu, Oct. 26.—The board of health recently issued an order prohibiting visits to the leper settlement of political speakers. Yesterday a candidate for a county office filed a suit in the federal court in which it is sought to restrain the board from giving effect to its order.

CALLED HOME TO FIGHT.

Ogden, Utah, Oct. 26.—M. A. Akimoto, who has charge of 600 Japanese employed in the beet fields of Utah and Idaho, says he has received orders from the Japanese consul for all members of the first and second army reserves to return home at once for active service.

DUTCH DEFEAT ACHINESE.

Amsterdam, Oct. 26.—A dispatch from Batavia reports that the Dutch troops have captured Batoebatoe, in Achin, after sharp fighting. The Achinese, the dispatch says, lost 196 killed and the Dutch captured 20 guns and had three killed and 11 wounded.

DOCTORS FOUND HE WAS DEAD.

Boston, Oct. 26.—James Thornton of this city was struck by a train while walking on the Mystic bridge, near Somerville last night. He was hurried to this city on a special train, but when placed in the ambulance the doctors found that he was dead.

DRIVEN TO THE WALL.

Independent Coal Operator Tells of Alleged Discrimination.

New York, Oct. 26.—John C. Haddock, an independent coal mine owner and operator, testifying before the interstate commerce commission in the case of W. R. Hearst against the coal-carrying railroads, said that, as a result of tariff discrimination, his company suffered a loss of more than $800,000 in less than eight years. This loss meant the differences between solvency and insolvency, and his company, which at one time had a reputation of high standing, as a result of the alleged discrimination is now in the hands of trustees.

Mr. Haddock said that he had persistently complained to the management of the Lackawanna company and had been met by the proposition that he turn his properties over to the railroad. This he had declined to do. In the end there was a compromise by which he received $150,000 from the Lackawanna company in settlement of his claim for $800,000.

Mr. Haddock also said that the Lackawanna company would not furnish a sufficient number of cars to market the output of his mines during the anthracite coal strike, and they caused to be removed spur tracks into the yards of dealers in Norwich and Cortland, N. Y., who purchased coal from his company.

BRIDE IS 16; HUSBAND 59.

Philadelphia, Oct. 26.—Accepting as gracefully as they could the decision of Judge Sulzberger, the parents of 16-year-old Mrs. W. H. K. Albertson relinquished her to her 59-year-old husband. Happy as a youth of 20, the elderly benedict took his girl bride by the hand and led her out of the courtroom. After an acquaintance of only two weeks they eloped one day after the girl's 16th birthday, and were married. Her father and mother tried to annul the marriage.

NO WOOD ALCOHOL.

Boston, Oct. 26.—Immediately following the recent deaths in New York, caused by the drinking of whiskey adulterated with wood alcohol, the board of police investigated the standard of goods supplied in Boston saloons. The investigation shows that in not a single one of the samples examined has the whiskey been adulterated with wood alcohol, but a very large proportion of the whiskey obtained is adulterated with other substances.

HELD UP BY INSPECTORS.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—Twenty persons are virtually being held prisoners on steamer Ionian at the request of United States immigration officials. They have United States naturalization papers and some thousands of dollars. The head of one family is named Mitchell. His family consists of 11 and the other family is headed by a deaf man. All are supposed to come from Russia. There is considerable mystery about the case.

TRINITY'S NEW PRESIDENT.

Hartford, Oct. 26.—Rev. Dr. Flavel S. Luther was inducted into office as president of Trinity college today in the presence of one of the most notable gatherings ever seen in Connecticut. Fourteen college presidents and 12 Episcopal bishops were present at the formal exercises in Parson's theatre and nearly all the colleges in the country were represented in the procession which escorted the new president to the exercises.

A LACK OF JEALOUSY.

London, Oct. 26.—"I thank God the day has come when neither the British nor the American navy can be jealous of each other's development." Rear Admiral Jewell, in the foregoing sentence, last night elicited loud cheers when he replied to the toast in honor of the American European squadron at the banquet given them by the Pilgrim society. The gathering included many notable Britons.

BLIGHTED LOVE THEORY.

Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 26.—That a blighted love affair is behind the piccalilli "poison" mystery is the theory upon which the police are now at work, and they announce that they expect an arrest will be made very soon. Incidentally, no person whose name has thus far been publicly mentioned with the case is in the slightset degree involved.

CORNELIUS VAN COTT DEAD.

New York, Oct. 26.—Cornelius Van Cott, postmaster of New York city, died suddenly of heart failure, aged 67. The recent arrest of his son, charged with colonizing, was a severe blow to the postmaster. In 1887 VanCott was chosen a state senator and served until 1889. He was given the postmastership for admirable political work.

War on Gypsy Moth.

The rapid spread of the gypsy and brown tail moths and the serious damage caused by these pests last summer has induced the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, through its Committee on Gardens, to hold a public Field Day for the aid of the citizens of the State. This meeting will be held at Arlington, Mass., Nov. 5th at 2 P. M., and will include a lecture by Professor A. H. Kirkland and a thorough demonstration of the best methods for destroying these pests. There will be ample opportunity to see the pests as they occur in nature, while expert foresters will show the use of insecticides, spraying operations and other methods of work against these enemies of trees. If any one wishes to learn the habits of these insects and how best to fight them, he cannot spend a few hours more profitably than to attend this meeting. The making and use of the Lime-Sulphur Wash for destroying the San Jose Scale will also be shown and there will be a large and complete exhibit of spraying and insectitudes. Arrangements have been made for the use of the Arlington Town Hall if the day should be stormy. As the meeting is free to all and as Arlington is easily reached both by train or electric cars, a large attendance is expected.

Reward Offered.

Myron W. Messer, father of the missing Harry W. Messer, formerly of this city, has offered a reward of $200 for information that shall lead to his location. It is not quite certain that the missing man was seen in Portland, Me., Oct. 11, although a young woman in the Falmouth house declares that she sold him a cigar on that date.

TODAY'S COURT.

Gustaf Anderson was arraigned for non-support at Quincy. Case continued until Thursday.

QUESTION OF LAW.

How Shall Quincy Provide Money for City Evening Schools?

Messrs. Porter, Hallowell, Miller, Burke, Churchill and Record were present at Tuesday night's meeting of the School Committee.

It was voted to close the schools Friday, Nov. 4, that teachers might attend the Norfolk County teachers' convention.

Considerable informal discussion followed about the boulevard taking so much of the Willard school lot. No one seemed to know when the property was taken or what compensation was received for it. It was decided to look up the matter.

Voted to expend the interest of the Rock Island fund in reference books for the High school.

Mr. Miller was assigned to the following sub-committees: Adams, John Hancock and Lincoln schools, and on books and supplies.

The chairman was instructed to sign a lease of the rooms of the department for another year.

Messrs. Hunting, Smith and Burke were appointed to write the annual report.

The superintendent made a report on children who are so defective mentally to be unable to profit by school work. The matter was referred to the superintendent and Dr. Record for further investigation.

The chairman reported the action of the City Council on the appropriation for evening schools, and it voted to send the following letter and interrogatories to the City Solicitor:

Paul R. Blackmur, Esq., City Solicitor, Quincy.

Dear Sir: Section 11, Chapter 42 of the Revised Laws of Massachusetts, 1902, provides that

Any town may, and every city or town of ten thousand or more inhabitants shall, maintain annually evening schools for the instruction of persons over fourteen years of age in orthography, reading, writing, the English language and grammar, geography, arithmetic, industrial drawing, both free hand and mechanical, the history of the United States, physiology and hygiene, and good behavior. Such other subjects may be taught in such schools as the school committee consider expedient.

The City Charter in section 48 provides that:

"No expenditure shall be made, nor liability incurred, by or in behalf of the city, until an appropriation has been duly voted by the City Council sufficient to meet such expenditures or liability together with all prior unpaid liabilities which are payable out of such appropriation."

The school Committee has not at its disposal any funds except such amounts as are necessary to meet obligations or contracts already entered into.

This financial statement was made to the City Council with the request that an appropriation for evening Schools be made at once. No additional appropriation has been granted.

In view of the apparent conflict of authorities, we respectfully ask your legal opinion in the matter, and request an early reply to the following interrogatories.

1—Must the School Committee maintain Evening Schools during or within the year 1904? If it must, what are the legal rights of the School Committee to incur indebtedness for this purpose in view of the failure of the proper authorities to furnish funds for this purpose after formal request, and in view of section 48 of the City Charter.

2—If Section 11, chapter 42, must be complied with by the School Committee, and the latter has no legal right to incur indebtedness for this purpose, in what way shall the expenses of the Evening Schools be legally met, since all funds at its disposal are required to meet existing contracts, and since the proper authorities after formal notice, have failed to provide the funds necessary to maintain the Evening Schools for the year 1904.

CRYSTAL WEDDING.

A Wollaston Couple Taken by Surprise on Their Anniversary.

Oct. 24 was the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Perry of South Central avenue. They did not intend to have a celebration but their friends took the initiative, and about fifty gave them a surprise—a genuine one too. The friends gathered early from Rockland, Holbrook, West Medford and Newton, as well as Wollaston, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Patterson nearby, and about 7 o'clock marched to the house, which they took by storm.

At an opportune time Mr. Charles B. Hall of Highland avenue, in a facetious speech presented Mr. and Mrs. Perry with several cut glass dishes. Mr. Perry responded happily. There were many other rich presents from friends showing the popularity of Mr. and Mrs. Perry. The guests were pleased with solos by Mrs. McGill of Rockland. Ice cream and cake were served. It was after ten o'clock before the merry surprisers departed for home.

Q. H. S. VICTORY.

The Foot Team Shut Out Weymouth at Weymouth.

The Quincy High foot ball team again defeated the Weymouth High boys on Tuesday, the match taking place at Weymouth.

In the first half the visitors had decidedly the best of it. Although they made some bad fumbles they were able to hold the home team for downs, and to gain on rushes and the score at the end of the half was 10 to 0 in favor of Quincy.

Quincy put almost a new team in the field for the second half, to give the boys practice. Weymouth took a brace and at one time the ball was dangerously close to the Quincy goal. A long run by Percival saved the visitors, and they scored another goal and shut Weymouth out. Score 15 to 0.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition. XI—Madam Cavendish, whose silence about Wingfield's innocence shields her own granddaughter. Catherine, wishes him to wed Mary. Wingfield is guided by a witch to a secure hiding place for the arms. XII—The grand ball at the governor's, with Mary as belle. She reveals her affection for Wingfield.

CHAPTER XVII.

MARY CAVENDISH raised her voice high until it seemed to me like a silver trumpet and cried out, with a wave of her white arm to them all: "On to Laurel Creek, I pray you! Oh, I pray you, good people, on to Laurel Creek, and cut down my tobacco for the sake of Virginia and the honor of the colony."

It needed but a puff of any wind of human will to send that fiery mob leaping in a new direction. Straightway they shouted with one accord: "To Laurel Creek, to Laurel Creek! Down with the tobacco, down with the governor, down with the king! To Laurel Creek!" and forged ahead, turning to the left instead of the right as had been ordered, and Mary was swept along with them, and Catherine would have been crushed had not a horseman, whom I did not recognize, caught her up on the saddle with him with a wonderful swing of a long, lithe arm and then galloped after. And as for myself and Captain Jaynes and Sir Humphrey and others of the burgesses whom I had best not call by name, we went, too, since we might as well have tried to hold the current of the James river as that headlong company.

But as soon as might be I shouted out to Sir Humphrey above the din that our first duty must be to save Mary and Catherine. And he answered back in a hoarse shout, "Oh, for God's sake, ride fast, Harry, for should the militia come what would happen to them?"

But I needed no urging. I know not whom I rode down—I trust not any, but I know not. I got before them all in some wise, Sir Humphrey following close behind, and Ralph Drake also, swearing that he knew not what possessed the jades to meddle in such matters and shouting to the rabble to stop, but he might as well have shouted to the wind. And by that time there were more than a hundred of us, though whence they had come I know not.

We gentlemen kept together in some wise and gradually gained on Mary, who had had the start, and there were some seven of us—one of the Barrys, Sir Humphrey Hyde, Ralph Drake, Parson Downs, in such guise for a parson that no one would have known him, booted and spurred and riding harder than any by virtue of his best horse in the colony, myself and two of the burgesses. We seven gaining on the rabble, in spite of the fact that many of them were mounted upon Major Robert Beverly's best horses, through their having less knowledge of horsemanship, closed around Mary Cavendish on Merry Roger, clearing the ground with long galloping bounds, and Catherine, with the strange horseman, was somewhat behind.

As we came up with Mary she looked at us over her shoulder with a brightness of triumph and withal something of merriment, like a child successful in mischief, and laughed and waved her hand in which, as I live, she held a sword which had long graced the hall at Drake Hill, and I believe she meditated cutting the tobacco herself.

Then a great cheer went up for her, in which we, in spite of our misgivings, joined. Something so wonderful and innocent there was in the fresh enthusiasm of the maid. Then again her sweet voice rang out:

"Down with the tobacco, gentlemen of Virginia, and down with all tyranny. Remember Nathaniel Bacon, remember Nathaniel Bacon!"

Then we all caught up that last cry of hers, and the air rang with "Remember Nathaniel Bacon!"

But as soon as might be I rode close enough to speak with Mary Cavendish, and Sir Humphrey was on the other side, each with our jealousy lost sight of in our concern for her.

"Child, thou must turn and go home," I said, and I fear my voice lost its firmness, for I was half mad with admiration and love and apprehension for her.

Then Sir Humphrey echoed me.

"The militia will be upon us presently," he shouted in her ear above the din. "Ride home as fast as you may."

She looked from one to the other of us and laughed gayly and shook her head, and her golden curls flew to the wind, and she touched Merry Roger with her whip and he bounded ahead, and we had all we could do to keep pace, he being fresh. Then Parson Downs pelted to her side and besought her to turn, and so did Captain Jaynes, though he was half laughing with delight at her spirit, and his bright eyes viewed her in such wise that I could scarce keep my fingers from his throat. But Mary Cavendish would hear to none, and no way there was of turning her, lest we dragged her from her saddle.

Again I rode close and spoke so that no one beside her could hear.

"Go home, I pray you, if you love me," I said.

But she looked at me with a proud defiance and such a spirit of a man that I marveled at her.

"'Tis no time to talk of love, sir," said she. "When a people strike for liberty they stop not for honey nor kisses."

Then she cried again, "Remember Nathaniel Bacon!" And again that wild shout echoed her silver voice.

But then I spoke again, catching her bridle rein as I rode.

"Then go, if not because you love me, because I love thee," I said close to her ear with her golden hair blowing athwart my face.

The Swing Top may be turned to one side, allowing the large flat top beneath to be used for heating water, or other purposes when desired.

The Wood Grate may be used alone, or resting on the coal grate, which is a great convenience for people using both fuels.

A KICK FOR GOAL.

He didn't know it was loaded.

FURNACE COLD.

People who live in furnace-heated houses may have noticed the prevalence of supposed colds, coughs and throat ailments immediately after the furnace has been started in the fall. As a matter of fact, experts declare that these epidemics are largely caused by the dust and germs which gather in the registers and hot-air pipes during the summer and are blown into the air of the house when the furnace is started. In addition to the ordinary dust, which is certain to settle in such places during the summer months, there is also danger that it may become impregnated with poisonous vapors from the cellar, which may be released by the current of hot air rising from the cellar. In view of the large number of houses which are heated by furnaces, the question of properly cleaning the pipes has an important influence on the health.—Healthy Home.

CAUTION.

The above article is from a reliable source, and we do not believe the danger from this cause is over estimated.

It has been stated before by different authorities that a large per cent. of the throat and lung trouble in the winter months, in the northern states, was caused by the hot, dry, dusty air from the hot-air furnace and registers. To avoid this danger use the more modern method of HOT WATER, or STEAM HEAT.

BRITAIN CHAFES UNDER DELAY.

Will Give Russia but a Short Time to Answer

NAVAL STATIONS ACTIVE

Gibraltar Fleet Under Sailing Orders and Channel Fleet Can Start at a Moment's Notice--North Sea Incident Characterized by Admiral of Baltic Fleet as "Purely Accidental"

London, Oct. 27.—Tension increases as time passes without a definite settlement of the situation created by the Russian blunder in the North sea. Ambassador Benkendorff's tentative communication to Foreign Minister Lansdowne and the fact that this was regarded as unsatisfactory only served to inflame the public mind, and while official circles are giving out intimations that it is their confident belief the whole matter will be satisfactorily arranged, it is also quite evident that only a short time will be allowed Russia in which to give final and complete assurances of her intention to comply with any and all demands Great Britain may make within reason.

The arrival of Admiral Rojestvensky at Vigo and the certainty that he is in direct communication with his government removes at once the possibility of any delay owing to inability of Russia to get his side of the occurrences of the night of Oct. 21. With this official version before the Russian government, together with the official statement of the members of the fishing fleet, it is unlikely that the British public or the British government will allow another 24 hours to pass quietly without receiving a satisfactory reply to the note, which demanded a quick answer.

Meanwhile the admiralty is not idle. Reports from all naval stations show that a tremendous state of activity exists. This is especially true of Gibraltar, from which place it is announced that some of the best of Great Britain's war vessels are under orders to proceed in the direction of the the Russian Baltic squadron, and that all the ships of the British channel fleet are ready to go to sea at a moment's notice.

Hitherto there has been no indication that a time limit had been set by Great Britain for Russia's reply to her demands, but the fact that three battleships and three cruisers are under orders for the morning of Oct. 28 is construed in some quarters to mean that Great Britain will not wait longer than that date before unleashing her seadogs, while it is also evident that the Russian cruisers and smaller boats of the Baltic squadron may find difficulty in passing the gateway to the east unless the crisis is completely over by the time they reach the entrance to the Mediterranean.

Information from an authoritative source puts a brighter light upon the situation. It is understood that practically everything has been decided upon to the satisfaction of Count Lamsdorff, the Russian foreign minister, except the question of the punishment of the offending officers of the Baltic squadron. It is further understood that Great Britain is not demanding final and formal written undertakings before announcing that she is satisfied, but that an undertaking in general terms on the part of Russia will be accepted as sufficient guarantee for an official announcement that the crisis has passed.

Colonial Secretary Lyttleton, speaking at Loamington last night, said he had no further information to disclose, but that he had no doubt Russia would make full reparation and punish the offenders.

All the public utterances of ministers and influential men reflect the gravity of the crisis, but also confidence that Russia will give the required satisfaction.

Lord Selborne, first lord of the admiralty, left London late last night for Portsmouth to give his personal attention to naval preparations there.

The tone of comparative moderation and calmness hitherto shown by the press of London is observed to be yielding to one of an outspoken and bellicose nature.

The Daily Mail editorially speaks of war threatening and gives in scare headlines "Ultimatum to Russia expires this afternoon," etc. Without going to these lengths, nearly all the papers are discussing the possibilities of war should the war party in St. Petersburg be able to influence the czar and government into a determination to shield the officers of the Baltic squadron.

The unofficial explanation of Admiral Rojestvensky, telegraphed from Vigo,

AGAINST THE TRUST

Important Verdict at Plymouth under New State Law.

City Solicitor Blackmur, assisted District Attorney Asa P. French to secure an important verdict against a trust at the Plymouth Superior court on Monday. It was a criminal process action under the Massachusetts anti-trust law of 1901 against the American Tobacco Company, defended by the Tobacco Trust organized under the laws of New Jersey with a capital of $180,000,000.

In his charge Judge Lawton said in part:

"If upon the evidence, you are satisfied that the defendant acting for the Continental Tobacco Company, offered for sale to any person or concern named in the indictment the plug tobacco made by the Continental Tobacco Company upon more favorable terms to such persons or concern, if such person or concern, should not sell or deal in the plug tobacco of any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons, you will be justified in finding the defendent guilty."

"If you are satisfied that the government witnesses are telling the truth, then it is your duty to bring in a verdict of guilty against this defendant."

The testimony which the Boston lawyers regard as most important in the case was that of Frank J. Dutra, a tobacco dealer of Brockton, and Richard J. Casey of Bridgewater. Dutra testified that the defendant offered to give him the extra 6 per cent. discount if he would throw out the union or independent companies' goods. Casey testified that he had accepted the Continental company's proposition. Before accepting he had been buying 5 per cent of his goods from independent concerns. Without the extra discount he could make a profit of about a cent a pound on the Continental's tobacco.

Ward Three Meeting.

Oratory will be let loose tonight at the meeting of the Ward Three Republicans in Malnati hall, when affairs pertaining to the city will be discussed. The object of this meeting is to select the candidates for councilmen from the ward, councilman-at-large and Ward Committee. That the subject of a candidate for Mayor will be touched upon goes without saying. At present this ward in common with other wards is divided upon the Mayoralty question. It is possible however that tonight that some new name may be brought forward although the general sentiment of the ward is for James Thompson. The meetings in Ward Three in other years have been interesting ones and have been productive of much good.

Wollaston Y. C. Fair.

The three days' fair of the Wollaston Yacht club opens tonight at the club house. Indications point to its being an unqualified success. Aside from tables for the sale of various articles there are several voting contests in which a lively interest is being taken. Friends of those who have entered these contests are working hard for their particular friend with the result that there is a good natured rivalry.

—Labor organization have never rarely made so serious a mistake as when a few of their leaders were allowed to appear to represent them all in denouncing Governor Bates for his veto of the misnamed "overtime" bill. They do not claim that any great wrong has been done the laboring people, but merely that he would not do what their few leaders demanded.

FOR PROTECTION.

700 Employers of Boston have Organized for Mutual Protection.

The Evening Record gives the following declaration of principles of the association:

No closed shop.

No restrictions as to the use of tools, machinery, or materials, except such as are unsafe.

No limitation of output.

No restriction as to the number of apprentices and helpers, when of proper age.

No boycott.

No sympathetic strike.

No sacrifice of the independent workman to the labor union.

No compulsory use of the union label.

The By-laws of this newly formed association read:

"We are not organized to antagonize labor," said a man who was influential in the beginning of the association, to the reporter. "We wish and intend to be perfectly fair. But the attitude of the unions has come to be un-American. It interferes with the liberty guaranteed a citizen. Their motives are entirely selfish.

"Our belief is that we have come to the point where we must beat the unions at their own game. That is by organization. Rome was controlled by an army that numbered a soldier for every 1000 citizens. How? Because the army was organized.

"We here in the east do not half know the terror of the labor union. It is time to act before we do.

"Our organization is patterned after a western idea. In one place there is an association of 8000 employers. Now when one of them is boycotted by the unions, around goes the word to the other 7999: 'Jones is boycotted; turn all your business his way.'

"Result—Jones would like to stay boycotted, and the boycott loses its terror and power."

Sunday School Convention.

Delegates to the annual convention of the Unitarian Sunday school society met in the Rogers Memorial church, Fairhaven, yesterday. The states represented are Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey and Illinois, and about 75 churches are included.

The meeting opened at 4 o'clock with a kindergarten service in the parish house. In the church, last evening, Rev. Paul Revere Frothingham of Boston preached the sermon. The convention will continue through today.

The delegates from First Church Sunday school, Quincy, were Mr. Charles H. Johnson, Miss Mary Holden and Miss Alice Keith Prescott.

MORE LIQUOR RAIDS

Quincy Point Bowling Alleys the Place—Arrests Made.

Chief Hayden with Inspectors McKay and Bradley and Officers Goodhue, Cahill, Larkin, Lyons and Curtin raided the bowling alley of William Cain and Edward Murphy at 554 Washington street, Wednesday evening. The officers seized two full bottles of whiskey and two bottles partly full. One of the alleged proprietors was placed under arrest and the other summoned into court.

Part of the liquor seized was found in the bowling alley and part of it in a room up stairs in the rear of the building. In this same room were four men, some cards and an electric bell which was connected with a push button in the alleys.

The officers also visited the residence of William Cain at 550 Washington street. They found no liquor here but they captured a man making a hasty departure with a bag full of empty whiskey bottles which they seized.

Immense Gathering.

The crowd at the Republican mass meeting in Carnegie hall, New York, last night, was so large that the doors were locked at 7.30 o'clock.

At that time all the available space within the hall was filled and several thousand people were crowded about the entrance seeking admittance.

John Hay, secretary of state, who made the principal speech, was given an ovation when he appeared. The band played and flags were waved in every part of the house, while the audience cheered.

Senator Elsberg referred to President Roosevelt as "the most inspiring leader who ever led a great party to victory," and the audience rose as one man when he characterized the President as "a man whom we admire and love."

Secretary Hay was introduced as "one of the greatest living Americans, and the foremost diplomat in all the world, a man whose name in every cabinet in the world is synonymous with honesty and fair dealing."

Great cheering greeted the secretary as he arose.

Judge Parker's Mother.

Derby, Conn., Oct. 26, — Judge Parker's mother, who lives here with her daughter, has told several friends within the last few days that she does not expect her son's election; that she has been reconciled to the likelihood of his defeat for some time and that therefore there will be no great disappointment for her Nov. 8. She says she rejoices that the campaign has been so free from personalities.

"The people seem to be satisfied with Roosevelt," said Mrs. Parker today, "and his election will reflect no discredit upon my son."

Berry Arrested.

Michael T. Berry, the Socialist-labor candidate for Governor, was arrested last evening in Charlestown for holding an open-air meeting in Hayes square.

Members of the socialist-labor party have professed all along to believe that if a case of this sort ever came before the courts the police would not be sustained, and it was in the hope of verifying this prediction that they started last evening's meeting.

Museum of Fine Arts.

The trustees of the museum of Fine Arts in Boston, have determined that for the future the museum shall open to the public on Monday mornings at 9 o'clock instead of midday. They have also decided that it shall be open free to the public on Washington's birthday. Patriots' day, Memorial day, the Seventeenth of June and Labor day.

Will Decide Tonight.

John McAnarney who has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for Mayor will probably give his decision tonight as to whether he will become a candidate at the caucus for the Republican nomination for Mayor.

The East Norfolk and Clark Christian Endeavor Unions will hold a grand rally at the Bethany church, Wednesday evening, Nov. 9. The speaker will be Rev. F. S. Hatch, ex-secretary of the India Christian Endeavor.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

Congratulations to President Roosevelt who has a birthday anniversary today. He was born in 1858.

Evidently the Quincy Historical Society has taken a new lease of life. With monthly meetings it should flourish.

Speaker Cannon says the Democratic platform is like a woman's mother Hubbard. "It covers everything and touches nothing."

Every prominent clergyman, no matter what his denomination, who has visited the Philippines, declares that America is doing a great Christian work there.

Representative Adam Bede says that the effort to start a Christian Endeavor chapter in the Philippines was a failure because the missionaries couldn't find anything to pin the badges to.

When Senator Tillman visited the Chicago Stock Yards, they asked him, if the Democratic party was the poor man's friend, why it had a capitalistic judge and a millionaire mine owner at the head of its ticket.

Candidate Parker recently charged that officers of the Government are now "practically chosen by a handful of corporate managers." The chief officers of the government today are, Hay, Taft, Moody, Metcalf, Shaw, Wilson and Wynne. The men who have so obliged Mr. Parker in this campaign as to insure their becoming the officers of the Government if he is elected are, D. B. Hill, August Belmont, Delancey Nicoll, William F. Sheeean, Thomas Taggart, McCarren, et al. Which group do you believe would prove the most willing servants of the "corporate managers?"

Drift of Opinion.

☞A Philadelphia judge has decided that a doctor may run his automobile as fast as he pleases, if he is responding to a sick case. Physicians with a penchant for scorching are likely to have a sudden increase in hurry calls. —Akron Journal.

☞It is announced that Ida Tarbell is to follow her famous history of the Standard Oil company by a biography of John D. Rockefeller. If there is any "right of privacy" in this land of the poor, persecuted millionaire, Mr. Rockefeller should be granted an injunction.—Hartford Telegram.

☞A wise citizen will desire the continuance in office of Secretary of State Hay and other invaluable cabinet men, and oppose their displacement by the Gormans of Maryland, the Champ Clarks of Missouri, the Tillmans of South Carolina, or the Hills of New York.—New York Tribune.

☞Before a man comes into a newspaper office to rake the editor over the coals for putting something harsh, but true about him, he should find out how many times that long suffering kind-hearted editor, has thrown matter into the waste basket that would make that man hide his head in shame. Some times it takes more discretion to run a waste basket than a newspaper. Every editor has the power of pardon and most of them use it a great deal more than the power of sentencing. —Malden News.

☞One of the Boston reform organizations proposes an increase of the poll tax to $6 a year, with rebate of a dollar for each caucus and election which the taxpayer attends, regular attendance upon the two caucuses and elections of each year bringing the tax down to its present rate. Of course the scheme is only a dream, but if put into effect it is doubtful if it would have the desired effect. The ballot that has to be hired to come to the caucus or the election isn't worth a great deal to the community, whoever pays the bill, or however it may be paid. When the franchise gets so that it has to be maintained in any such manner as that our democratic form of government is certainly getting into hard going.—Haverhill Gazette.

"REPAIRS NEEDED"

Four Russian Battleships Separate From Fleet

ANCHOR AT SPANISH PORT

Effort to Take on Coal In Violation of Spanish Neutrality Is Checked--Requested to Make Their Unwelcome Visit Short

Vigo, Spain, Oct. 27.—The arrival of the Russian battleships Emperor Alexander III, Borodino, Orel and Kniaz Souvaroff and the transport Anatol, which have anchored in this port, has caused considerable excitement.

The commander of the port immediately boarded the Russian flagship and informed Admiral Rojestvensky that the Spanish government could not permit the warships to coal within the port. Admiral Rojestvensky replied that his vessels needed repairs and that for that reason he had separated from the remainder of his squadron. The commander of the port promised to inform the Spanish government of the admiral's statement and communicate the government's reply as soon as it was received.

In spite of this, five German colliers anchored in port alongside the battleships, whereupon the commander of the port sent an aide-de-camp to beg Rojestvensky not to violate Spanish neutrality, and he also ordered the commanding officer of the Spanish cruiser Estramadura to notify the colliers that they must obey port authorities.

Eventually Rojestvensky promised that he would not coal in Spanish waters, at the same time begging the commander of the port to obtain the government's permission for each warship to take on 400 tons of coal with which to reach Tangier. Shortly afterwards three colliers sailed for Tangier, but two remained alongside the Russian warships.

During the afternoon Rojestvensky, accompanied by the commanders of his battleships, visited the military governor, the French consul and the commander of the port, receiving the usual honors.

As far as can be seen the crews of the battleships are very uneasy. Sentinels are closely watching every movement within the harbor. All four of the warships seem to be cleared for action.

It is rumored that the object of the Spanish government, in requesting the Russians to remain the shortest possible time at Vigo is to prevent the possibility of attack by Japanese agents, whose presence in the province of Galicia is suspected.

It is learned that three other Russian warships have anchored in Arosa bay. The government has refused them permission to coal in Spanish waters.

The Spanish warships Marques de la Victoria and Vasco Nunez de Balboa are keeping watch along the coast.

The authorities have ordered that all fishing boats shall fly the national flag in order to avoid a repetition of the Dogger Bank incident.

Cannot Communicate With Shore

Brest, France, Oct. 27.—The Russian collier Kniaz Gortschakoff is still anchored in the roadstead awaiting orders. Her commander has been strictly forbidden to communicate with shore or receive visits.

Violated City Ordinances

Boston, Oct. 27.—The seven men summoned to appear in the municipal court at the instigation of Judge Emmons to answer the charge of violating the city ordinances in the carrying of the dynamite which caused the Melrose explosion through Boston streets were arraigned yesterday. They all pleaded not guilty and their cases were continued for trial next Wednesday. The defendants were allowed to go on their own recognizance, bonds being fixed at $200.

Old Horseman Badly Hurt

Memphis, Oct. 27.—Ed Geers, the veteran driver and trainer, was thrown from a sulky at Billings park. One leg was broken and it is feared that the other was also fractured. He was badly shaken up and, owing to his age, his condition is believed to be serious.

Gold Wanted at Paris and Berlin

New York, Oct. 27.—Indications point to heavy exports of gold from this country to Paris and Berlin before the year's end. One estimate places the amount at not less than $20,000,000. The new Russian loan is believed to be the basis of the probable outflow.

Murder Indictment Returned

Bakersfield, Vt., Oct. 27.—The grand jury returned an indictment for murder against Reuben Bronson, who is charged with shooting and killing Charles Lyon. The shooting occurred on March 31, and Bronson has been in jail ever since.

Vacation For Coal Miners

Mahanoy City, Pa., Oct. 27.—Notices were posted here last night announcing a suspension of work at the collieries of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron company in the Schuylkill region after Friday until further orders.

More Hawaiian Embezzlements

Honolulu, Oct. 27.—H. M. Dow, chief clerk of former High Sheriff Brown, and W. Mossman, clerk to former Deputy Sheriff Chillingworth, have been arrested on warrants charging them with embezzlement.

NO CHANGE OF POLICY

Fall River Wage Reduction Notices Will Not Come Down

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 27.—It is officially stated that the manufacturers will not open the mills next Monday morning, and the strike will enter on its 15th week at that time. Neither will the manufacturers entertain any propositions looking toward a settlement of the strike which embodies a proposition that the wage notices shall be taken down. The executive committee of the signers to the agreement have been threshing out the opinions of treasurers for the past few days, and they have concluded that the sentiment for a reopening is not yet strong enough among their operatives or treasurers to warrant a departure from the policy laid down 14 weeks ago.

No date has been fixed when the mills will be reopened. The strike bids fair to go on indefinitely, so far as manufacturers are concerned, and while it is true that complaints are made among mill men about the operation of the agreement, it will be abided by in every particular by those who are dissatisfied.

Abuse of Mail Service

Boston, Oct. 27.—A pseudo astrologer was arrested in station A of the Boston postoffice on a charge of using the mails for improper purposes. The name given by the man was George Adams. Postoffice Inspector Snow identified Adams as George Rupert, against whom a fraud order had been issued about two months ago by the postoffice department and what, at that time, was considered an illegal business was believed to have been stopped. The circulars, alleged to have been sent through the mails by Adams, advertise a magic love potion.

Notorious Thief Violated Parole

Boston, Oct. 27.—A warrant was issued and signed by Governor Bates remanding to the state prison William E. Kelly, known as "Jocko" Kelly. This action was taken because Kelly had violated the terms of the parole granted him a year ago, inasmuch as he was convicted early in the present month on the charge of stealing the contents of a slot machine, and was sentenced to one month on Deer island. He has about 12 years more to serve on the term of 25 years imposed on him 13 years ago as an habitual criminal.

Said to Have Confessed Stabbing

Boston, Oct. 27.—Two important points were brought out in the preliminary examination of Fred Watson and Eugene Sennott, the two artillerymen who are charged with the murder of Larkin W. Hall. One was that Hall had a premonition that the Japanese sword, with which he was killed, would be the instrument of his death, and the police claim that Sennott told, when arrested, that Watson had confessed to him that he had stabbed Hall. The hearing is expected.

Woman Suspected of Poisoning

Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 27.—A report from Professor Wood of the Harvard Medical school, who has under analysis the piccalili believed to have contained Paris green, and through which an attempt was made to poison patrons of boarding houses here, is expected within a day or two. The police have a woman under surveillance on the theory that the attempted poisoning was directed against a male boarder at one of the boarding houses, through a motive of jealousy.

Bishop Loses Jewelled Cross

Boston, Oct. 27.—Bishop Coadjutor Osborne, who was consecrated only last Sunday, has reported to the police the loss of his large gold cross, set with four amethysts. When or how the bishop lost it he does not know, but the police are inclined to believe that it was stolen, as the large jewel would be an easy object for a thief while hanging loosely from the clergyman's neck. The cross was worn only at important services.

Dartmouth Cornerstone Laid

Hanover, N. H., Oct. 27.—The corner stone of a new Dartmouth hall, to replace the historic building burned last winter, was laid by the Earl of Dartmouth, from whose ancestor the college received its name and first donation. Hundreds of the alumni attended the ceremonies in the college church, watched the formal lowering and cementing of the stone and participated in the festivities last evening.

Sentence of Bank Burglar

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 27.—J. F. McCarthy of Detroit, Mich., arrested in connection with the robbery of the Newfane Savings bank last summer, waived his exceptions in the supreme court and was sentenced to seven years in the state prison. McCarthy turned state's evidence in the lower court.

Grounds For Appeal Not Stated

New London, Conn., Oct. 27.—Notice of appeal in the case of Gershon Marx, convicted last week and sentenced to be hanged in January for the murder of Pavol Rodecki, has been filed in court. No statement of the grounds for the appeal is made.

Maine Man Gored to Death

Rockland, Me., Oct. 27.—Phineas Ginn, aged 60, was gored to death by a bull at Vinalhaven. Ginn was attempting to lead the animal into the barn, but the bull knocked him down and attacked him.

Failed For Nearly $300,000

Boston, Oct. 27.—Frank S. Colton, a stock broker, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. The liabilities are placed at $298,056, of which only $13,000 appear to be secured. Assets amount to $00,914.

THE LICENSE VOTES.

The "No" Vote Increasing and the "Yes" Vote Decreasing.

Last year the total vote of Quincy on the license question was the largest in the history of the city, and the majority against license was considerably larger. The "yes" vote was 1,170 and the "no" vote was 2,734.

A COMBINED TOAST

Roosevelt and King Edward Potent Apostles of Peace

TRIBUTE FROM CARNEGIE

Expects Heads of English-Speaking Race to Help Prevent "Killing of Human Beings by Human Beings"

New York, Oct. 27.—The annual dinner of the Iron and Steel institute, which was also the official celebration of the second meeting of the society in America, was held here last night in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria.

Along each side of the banquet hall the Stars and Stripes were intertwined with the British national colors, and during the evening repeated reference was made to the increasing friendship between the two great English-speaking countries.

Describing himself as an "humble disciple of the mighty apostles of peace," Mr. Carnegie proposed a toast to President Roosevelt and King Edward. "Your president upon such occasions has a most pleasant duty to perform," he said. "Individual members of the institute are expected to beat records; they have done so. I propose to you tonight that the institute as a whole break a record.

"We have as our patron and ruler of the older branch of the English-speaking race, the King of England. The ruler of the younger branch, the President of the United States, is to receive us on Saturday; thus we are the stars of the first magnitude in 'happy suggestive conjunction.'

"Many British kings have waged war upon the continent of Europe. It has remained for our august patron, the present king, to wage peace wherever he goes. Many kings have overcome their enemies; our patron overcomes the differences of friends; enemies he has none.

"The president, the ruler of the younger branch, recently did the cause of peace the greatest service of our day, next to that of the Emperor of Russia, who called the powers together in peaceful conference. He led five of the great powers to submit their differences to the high court of humanity, where all were peacefully settled.

"Therefore, gentlemen, in both rulers we have apostles of peace from whom further services may be expected in the first, highest and noblest of all causes—that of purging the earth of its foulest stain, the killing of human beings by human beings like wild beasts.

"Gentlemen, I give you the combined toast—probably never proposed before. To the two rulers of the English-speaking race; hailing them as potent apostles of peace."

Mr. Carnegie's toast was drunk by all standing and amid great applause. The assemblage sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" and "God Save the King."

Was Warrior and Statesman

Rome, Oct. 27.—Marquis Afan De Rivera, who for 14 years represented Naples in the chamber of deputies, became worried recently upon learning that Count Panzuti would be a candidate against him, dividing the monarchial party and rendering his re-election uncertain. Last night he was taken ill and died before morning. He as one of the best Italian artillery generals. He was under secretary of state for war in 1896.

Mayor Evidently Has Skipped

New York, Oct. 27.—A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Alfred M. Crotty, mayor of Montvale, N. J., who has not been seen in the village for 10 days. The mayor was also the local postmaster and a federal official is now examining the postoffice accounts. Residents of Montvale are also anxious to learn what became of $5000 in bonds authorized by the village for street improvement, which have disappeared.

Big Task For Wreckers

New York, Oct. 27.—The wrecking steamer I. J. Merritt left here this morning with a force of 100 expert divers and wreckers bound to the wreck of the steamship Massachusetts, now on Crossing Rocks, Abaco. The Massachusetts was bound from Cardiff for New Orleans when she was driven ashore.

Life Sentence For Two Murders

New York, Oct. 27.—Charles W. Johnson, who confessed to the murder of George F. Abbott, an old junk man, and Frederick VanBuskirk, his assistant, in Chapel alley, Brooklyn, pleaded guilty of murder in the second degree and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Trains Running In New Subway

New York, Oct. 27.—Using a silver key, Mayor McClellan turned the electric current into the motors on the first train in the subway here today. Immediately preceding the starting of the train there were formal exercises in the aldermanic chamber of the city hall.

Brothers' Double Suicide

Athens, Tenn., Oct. 27.—Two young men about 20 years old, locked in each other's embrace, law down on the railroad tracks near here and let a train pass over them. It is not known who the young men are. Every indication is that they were brothers.

WHEAT BINS EMPTY

Not a Bushel In Any of Boston's Grain Elevators

Boston, Oct. 27.—Wheat bins in Boston elevators are empty. Steamship Alexandra, which sailed on Oct. 17 for Copenhagen, took 8000 bushels and cleaned out the elevator store. This lot, with 16,000 bushels of wheat and 21,429 bushels of corn carried by the L. P. Hemblad for Copenhagen on Oct. 2; 38,077 bushels of wheat taken by the Cambrian, for London, on Oct. 7; 24,000 bushels of wheat taken by the Sarmatian for Glasgow on the same day; and the 42,857 bushels of corn which the Alexandra had, in addition to her wheat, is the total amount of grain shipped from Boston for European ports so far this month.

The Sagamore is expected to get about 8000 bushels of wheat before she sails Saturday, but in any event the total for the month will not reach 200,000 bushels, which is just a fair single shipment.

Grain played the greatest part in developing Boston's export trade, which reached its height of success in 1901, and now grain leads in Boston's commercial decline, which in the last two years has been fast and sure.

New Wireless at Nantucket

Washington, Oct. 27.—The navy department expects tomorrow to have in successful operation from the Nantucket lightship its new system of wireless telegraphy, with which it is intended to communicate with all passing steamers, and especially to give advance orders to naval vessels going up or down the Atlantic coast. Tests made with a temporary plant have satisfied the operators that they can not only communicate with Newport, the shore nearest to the lightship, but even as far as Navesink, on the New Jersey shore, nearly 200 miles distant.

Parker to Speak In Three States

New York, Oct. 27.—Judge Parker's program and speaking itinerary until election day have been completed. He will speak in three states—New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, and in addition there have been arranged receptions in his honor in this city and Brooklyn. The schedule calls for a change of the candidate's plans heretofore announced, in that he has been dissuaded from his determination not to make speeches elsewhere than at his home at Esopus.

Jury Followed Judge's Instructions

Boston, Oct. 27.—John M. Barry, manager of the North American Trust, was arraigned before Judge Sherman on an indictment which charged him with larceny in 160 counts. In overruling a motion to quash, Judge Sherman said the jury would be warranted in returning a verdict of guilty in 160 counts, which they did without leaving their seats. Counsel filed a bill of exceptions, and the case will go before the full bench of the supreme court.

Dying Man Punished In Prison

Columbus, O., Oct. 27.—Thomas Hale, colored, a life convict, died at the penitentiary last night of opium poisoning. Hale was bitterly disliked by many prisoners whom he had caused to be reported for infraction of rules, and it is supposed the poison was placed in his food by one of his fellow-prisoners. Hale complained of being sick yesterday, but was believed to be shamming, and was punished by the electric battery.

To Seek Hospital Information

Washington, Oct. 27.—The army general staff has decided to dispatch army surgeons as attaches to the Japanese and Russian armies operating in the far east, providing the consent of the authorities can be secured. There has been almost a revolution in field hospital methods, and it is desired the American medical department of the army should profit by the experiences of the belligerent nations.

Twelve Hundred Men Cut Off

Washington, Oct. 27.—In one of the appropriation bills passed at Manila the strength of the Philippine constabulary has been reduced at one stroke by 1200 men. The reduction will leave the strength of the force at 6000 men.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER

is stigmatized by The Morning Post and other papers as apparently that of a lunatic, whose continuance in a position of responsibility is a menace to every vessel that navigates the seas.

The Daily Telegraph, representing the government view, says: "There is no doubt whatever of the government's seriousness. No responsible minister would order a fleet athwart the path of vessels of a foreign power without recognizing the responsibility of such a grave step; yet, this is what his majesty's government has done with its eyes wide open."

An equally bellicose tone characterizes the British correspondents' dispatches from St. Petersburg, which openly impute the Russian delay to the belief that Great Britain is determined not to risk war and express the conviction that the Russian government is determined not to punish the offending officers.

Madrid dispatches comment severely upon the attempt of the Russians at Vigo to defy the Spanish government by the pretense that their vessels have been damaged and by proceeding to coal from German steamers, and also on Admiral Rojestvensky's alleged explanation that firing on an approaching vessel was necessary for the protection of his squadron.

YARNS DISAGREE

Admiral Rojestvensky and Prince Keretelli Talk

Vigo, Spain, Oct. 27.—In an interview with Admiral Rojestvensky, he stated that the North sea occurrence was purely accidental. The weather the night in question was rather hazy. About 1 a. m. two torpedo boats, which the Russians supposed were Japanese craft, suddenly appeared between the two divisions of the squadron and seemed to discharge torpedoes. The Russians immediately opened fire. They saw no fishermen and were not aware that any damage had been done. Evidently, the admiral said, the fishermen had shown no lights. The admiral repeated that he greatly regretted that any injury had been done fishermen, and added that he had no doubt the Russian government would make ample compensation.

Prince Keretelli, an officer of the battleship Alexander III, has been interviewed and gives the following explanation of the attack by the Baltic squadron upon the British trawlers off Dogger Bank:

"The transport Anatol, which was steaming ahead of the squadron, was suddenly surrounded by eight torpedo boats and requested assistance, whereupon the battleship division advanced and signalled to the unknown vessels to leave or disclose their nationality. The vessels refused to obey and advanced among the Russian battleships. Suddenly a cannon shot was heard from an unknown vessel. Then the admiral formed in battle line and replied to the fire, afterwards continuing his voyage."

Prince Keretelli added that the Russians feared the strange torpedo boats were Japanese, as the admiral was aware that the Japanese had purchased such bots in England.

To Keep Tabs on Russians

Gibraltar, Oct. 27.—The battleships Victorious, Illustrious and Majestic (flagship of Vice Admiral Beresford) and the cruisers Lancaster, Theseus and Endymion are under orders to sail tomorrow morning. It is reported that the purpose is to shadow the Russian Baltic squadron, which is expected to go by way of the Cape of Good Hope. The Russian Baltic squadron's cruisers and torpedo boats are expected to pass through the Straits of Gibraltar on the way to Suez. The whole of the Gibraltar torpedo flotilla has been commissioned.

Thought They Saw Torpedo Boats

Madrid, Oct. 27.—A telegram from Vigo to The Correspondencia says: Officers of the Russian squadron give the following explanation of the North sea incident:

While steaming by night they saw two torpedo boats within the lines of the squadron. Supposing a Japanese attack was impending, they opened fire. They say they did not see any sailors looking like fishermen aboard the two boats fired at. The officers say they do not know if any members of the crews were wounded. They express regret at the error.

Looking For Japanese Advance

Mukden, Oct. 27.—The appointment of General Kuropatkin as commander-in-chief is received with universal approval. A Japanese attack is now expected shortly. The Russian batteries continue to harass the Japanese. Otherwise all is quiet.

Good Offices Appreciated

St. Petersburg, Oct. 27.—The American embassy here has received from the Japanese minister at Berlin a letter of warm thanks for the aid rendered by Ambassador McCormick in getting Chinese refugees from Russia into Germany.

A Thousand Alleged Repeaters

New York, Oct. 27.—State Superintendent of Elections Morgan has applied to the supreme court to have the names of 1000 alleged repeaters stricken from the local registry lists. Justices Bischoff and Clarke each took 500 cases and will make one case the test for 100 in which the main issues are the same.

RUSSIA'S AUTOCRATS

Effect of Influence of Grand Dukes Upon the Czar.

THEY FORM A SECRET COUNCIL

A Prominent Russian Officer Tells How the Dukes Use the Emperor For Their Own Ends—Says Grand Ducal Ring Is the Russian Governing Syndicate Unlimited.

A high Russian officer, writing in the World's Work for October about the czar and the influence of the grand dukes upon his majesty, says:

"Who, it may be asked, influences the autocrat whose personal rule is thus absolute? If his ministers are but his organs and even his women folk are powerless to move him, whose is the spirit that animates him? The answer lies on the surface. In the sweeping theories of autocracy, which he has made his own, M. Pobedonosteff and Prince Meshtshersky, the Torquemada and Cagliostro of contemporary Russia, were his teachers. The abstract aphorisms and personal appeals engendered a faith and fervor in the spirit of their plastic pupil which have become second nature, and he now measures every new idea by its bearing upon autocracy. The teaching of these masters is backed by certain grand dukes, who form a sort of secret council like that which regulates the life of the great lama of Tibet. Under Alexander III. they had no part to play, for that monarch kept them in their places. Nicholas II., on the contrary, is easily swayed by these self seeking members of his family. They paint their plans in the hues of his own dreams, present him with motives which appeal to his prejudices and always open their attack by gross flattery. They are consequently more than a match for poor Nickie, as they call him, and their influence over him is pernicious.

"One of them, who was for years the manager of the vast funds supplied by loyal Russia to build a church to the memory of Alexander II., has yet to account for enormous sums of money which disappeared mysteriously under his administration. The Grand Duke Sergius, governor general of Moscow, a man addicted to Jew baiting and other unworthy sports, is the czar's mentor in questions of religion, whether abstruse or practical. It was he who proposed to abolish the Juridical society of Moscow, which he suspected of liberal tendencies, and when it was objected that the members were scrupulously observant of every law and regulation he answered, 'That's my point. They are for this very reason all the more dangerous to the state!'

"The Grand Duke Constantine offers brilliant suggestions on questions of public instruction and military affairs. The Grand Duke Alexis, whose foreign mistress, a French actress, causes ministers to tremble, is the great palace oracle on the navy, of which, however, he expresses a very poor opinion in private. Perhaps the most influential of all is the Grand Duke Alexander Mikailovitch, who has for a considerable time been the alter ego of his majesty.

"This grand ducal ring is the Russian governing syndicate unlimited, and no minister could withstand it for a month. It is able to thwart his plans in their primary stage, to discredit them in the czar's eyes during the discussion or to have them canceled after the emperor has sanctioned them. Obviously, Russia has more autocrats than one."

Discovery In Sun Spots.

Sir Norman Lockyer, the British astronomer, has advanced a remarkable new theory concerning the utility of sun spots, says the Scientific American. Our knowledge of sun spots is distinctly limited, and Sir Norman Lockyer contends that the discovery and understanding of these phenomena will prove one of the most beneficial additions to the world in general. He advances the theory that such knowledge may enable astronomers to convert the sun into an agent to enable us to cope with droughts and famines and that the spots on the sun may render it possible to predict with practical certainty the coming of famine and the exact part of the world where it will take place.

Styles In Women's Boots and Oxfords.

Flat bottoms and wide outside extensions will be the vogue in many of the newest styles in oxfords and boots for women, says the Shoe Retailer. White kid will be much used for women's oxfords, because it doesn't soil, is easy in making and makes up neater than canvas or suede. One and one-quarter and one and three-eighths inch heels will be the big sellers, while many good judges claim that lower heels will probably sell better than they have for some seasons. Patent colt, patent kid and patent calf will be the favored shiny leathers—ranking in the order given.

Potted Flowers on Stockings.

With the departure of the lacework summer hose stockings of unusual designs are being shown, says the New York Press. Lace medallions are sewn on, giving a light, open work appearance to a stocking of really heavy texture. On black silk hose some fastidious Chicago girls have their favorite buds embroidered in the natural colors. But the climax has been reached by Miss Daisy Leiter. As she tripped across Madison avenue, in New York, one muddy day recently, it was seen that on one of her stockings was embroidered a flower pot with an entire rosebush.

Russia and England.

There will be no immediate serious results from the running amuck of the Russian Baltic squadron in the North Sea. That may be set down as a practical certainty. There may be delay, but Russia will make apology and reparation. She could do no less if she is to retain her place among civilized nations.

But the mischief is that this does not end the trouble. The most serious aspect of this affair is that which cannot be touched by diplomacy. It is the embittering of relations between the two countries. Russia's over-bearing course toward neutrals since the war began, and her attacks upon British commerce in particular, have aroused bitter animosity in England. The seizure of the Malacca in the Red Sea, the case of the Knight Commander, which followed almost immediately, and then the case of the Allanton and other British craft held up and detained by Russian war ships have irritated public sentiment in England to an extent not equaled since the Kaiser sent his sympathetic telegram to Krueger. The firing on the Hull fishing fleet was the last and most wanton in a long series of exasperating outrages.

International antipathies are easily aroused, and they die hard. The Russian officer, drunk or sober, who directed the firing on the fishermen, has done more to kindle international hatred than can be undone by reams of iplomatic correspondence. — Boston ournal.

A Victory for Him.

William J. Bryan's tour of Indiana ended at Hammond last evening, where an overflow meeting was held in addition to the regular one. There Mr. Bryan spoke as follows:

"Let no friend of mine imagine that he can help me by contributing toward the election of President Roosevelt. Judge Parker's election will hasten every reform in which I am interested. A victory for our national ticket will not be a victory for Parker alone, it will be a victory for me as well, because I made my canvas on imperialism four years ago, and stood then where Parker stands now. A victory for Parker will not be a victory for the gold Democrats alone, for they could not win the election without the support of the silver Democrats, so that those who voted for me can claim a share in the victory this year."

—The season of freak bets on the presidential election has begun. A Parker man in Brooklyn, in case of Parker's defeat, will roll a peanut across the Brooklyn bridge. But that will be nothing compared with the amusement which his opponent will offer should Roosevelt be beaten. He has agreed to shave only one side of his face for one month. Another equally absurd bet is that of a Democrat of Harlem, who agrees in case of Parker's defeat to walk bear fashion on his hands and knees from 42d to 34th street on Broadway, with his opponent seated on his back. The Roosevelt man has promised to sing once a week with the Salvation Army for a period of one year in case his candidate should be defeated.

Barry Convicted.

John Marshall Barry, late president of the North American Trust, was called in the Suffolk superior criminal court yesterday to answer the recent indictment of 160 counts found against him for alleged violation of the law against redeeming certificates numerically. The government and Atty. Sentence, which is a fine for each violation, will be stayed pending the supreme court decision on the case.—Boston Herald.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

Copyright, 1900, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SYNOPSIS.

Chapter I—Harry Wingfield, narrator of the story, is tutor to Mary Cavendish, a belle of the colony of Virginia in 1682, and accompanies her on a ride to church. He discovers her implication in a conspiracy against the king. She has imported arms and ammunition to aid in the plot. II and III—Wingfield's past life in England. Although heir to large estates and well educated, he is now a deported convict in Virginia. Wingfield is devoted to his pupil. IV and V—Sir Humphrey Hyde, in love with Mary, is with her in the plot, which is laid for the purpose of cutting down the young tobacco plants and thus depriving the king of his revenue under the unjust navigation act. VI and VII—Mayday frolics at Drake Hill, home of Wingfield and Mary. Catherine Cavendish beseeches the tutor to save her sister from participation in the conspiracy. VIII—Harry and Catherine conspire to keep knowledge of the plot from Madam Cavendish, the girls' grandmother, who is a stanch royalist. IX—Mary is deceived by Wingfield into thinking that Catherine has purchased finery for her, the real benefactor being Wingfield, his object being not only to please her, but also to prevent Madam Cavendish from learning of the disposition of Mary's own money, which has been expended for the arms. X—Catherine, who knows why Wingfield is unjustly exiled, upbraids him for deceiving Mary. Planning to hide the arms and ammunition. XI—Madam Cavendish, whose silence about Wingfield's innocence shields her own granddaughter. Catherine, wishes him to wed Mary. Wingfield is guided by a witch to a secure hiding place for the arms. XII—The grand ball at the governor's, with Mary as belle. She reveals her affection for Wingfield.

CHAPTER XVII—(Continued).

"I obey not the man who loves me, but the man who weds me, and that you will not do because you hold your pride dearer than love," said she.

"Nay, because I hold thee dearer than my love," said I.

"'Tis a false principle you act upon, and love is before all else, even that which may harm it, and thou knowest not the heart of a woman if thou dost love one, sir," said she. Then she gave a quick glance at my face, so close to hers in the midst of that hurrying throng, and her blue eyes gleamed into mine, and she said, with a bright blush over her cheeks and forehead and neck, but proudly as if she defied even her maiden shame in the cause of love, "But thou shalt yet know one, Harry."

Then, as if she had said too much, she pulled her bridle loose from my detaining hand with a quick jerk and touched her horse, and we were on that hard gallop to Laurel Creek.

Laurel Creek was not a large plantation, but the fields of tobacco were well set, and it was some task to cut them. Captain Jaynes essayed to form the cutters into ranks, but with no avail, though he galloped back and forth, shouting like a madman. Every man set to work for himself, and it was again bedlam broke loose as at the other plantation. Then, indeed, for the first time I saw Mary Cavendish shrink a little, as if she were somewhat intimidated by the fire which she had lighted, and she resisted not when Sir Humphrey and her cousin Ralph and I urged her into the house. And as she entered there was Catherine, having been brought thither by that stranger who had disappeared. And we shut the door upon both women and then felt freer in our minds. Captain Noel Jaynes swore 'twas a jade fit to lead an army, then inquired what brought her thither and why women were in the front in all our Virginian wars, whether they wore white aprons or not?

As he spoke Ralph Drake shouted out with a great laugh that maybe 'twas for the purpose of carrying the men, and pointed, and there was one of the black wenches bringing Nick Barry, who else had fallen, upon her back to the field. Then she set him down in the tobacco and gave him a knife, and he went to cutting, having just enough wit to do that for which his mind had been headed, and naught else.

The mob took a fancy to that new cry of Mary Cavendish's, and every now and then the field rang with it. "Remember Nathaniel Bacon! Remember Nathaniel Bacon!" It had a curious effect, through starting in a distant quarter, where some of the fiercest of the workers were grouped, then coming nearer and nearer, till the whole field rang with that wide overspread of human voice, above the juicy slashing of the tobacco plants.

We had been at work some little time when a tall woman in black on a black horse came up at a steady amble, her horse being old. She dismounted near me and her horse went to nibbling the low hanging boughs of a locust near by, and the moon shone full on her face, and I saw she was the Widow Tabitha Story, with that curious patch on her forehead. Down to the tobacco she bent and went to work stiffly with unaccustomed hands to such work, and then again rang that cry of "Remember Nathaniel Bacon!" And when she heard that, up she reared herself, and raised such a shrill response of "Remember Nathaniel Bacon!" in a high sobbing voice, as I never heard.

And after that for a minute the field seemed to fairly howl with that cry of following, and memory for the dead hero, always Madam Tabitha Story's voice in the lead, shrieking over it like a cat's.

"Lord, have mercy on us," said Parson Downs at my elbow. "She will have all England upon us, and wherefore could not the women have kept out of this stew?"

With that he went over to the widow and strove to quiet her, but she only shrieked with more fury, with Mistresses Longman and Allgood to aid her, and then—came in a mad rush upon us of horse and foot, the militia, under Captain Robert Waller.

THE CUNNING FOX.

Indian Legend of Why He Is Hated by the Wolf.

The wolf hates the fox. According to the Iroquois Indians, this is why: One cold, wintry day a fox who was prowling about looking to see where he might steal his dinner saw a wagon coming. It was loaded with fish and was driven by some fishermen who were taking home their day's catch. "Ah, ha!" said the cunning fox. "Here comes my dinner." And he fell down and pretended to be dead. The fishermen, seeing him, picked him up and threw him into the wagon among the fish. Then the fox slyly threw out some fish and when the fishermen were not looking jumped off himself and made off with the fish he had thrown out. Pretty soon afterward he met a wolf, who said, "I am hungry, and I guess I will eat you for my dinner." But the fox said, "Would you rather not have fish for dinner?" The wolf replied that on the whole he thought he would prefer fish. Then the cunning fox told him of the trick by which he had just got his own dinner and advised him to try it. The wolf was pleased with the idea, so he ran through the woods and headed off the team which the fishermen were driving, falling down in the road before it and pretending to be dead. But the fishermen, who had by this time discovered the trick the fox had played upon them, instead of taking him into the wagon, beat him with clubs so that he barely escaped with his life. And on a hillside near by sat the fox, who laughed and laughed.

LIGHT WAVES.

Different Kinds Brought Into Conjunction Produce Darkness.

Every light wave, as a wave of the sea, consists of two portions, in one of which the water is lifted above the general average level of the surrounding ocean and in the other is depressed below it. These two portions form the "crest" and the "trough" of the wave respectively.

If two or more sets of waves are caused to traverse the same surface, as by dropping stones into still water, for instance, a complicated network of ripples is produced. At certain points the crest of one wave will coincide with the crest of another, and the two will combine to form one crest of double the height, the trough also being twice the depth.

At other points the crest of one wave will fall on the trough of another, and as the same particles of water are called upon by equal forces to move in opposite directions at the same time they will remain stationary, and the surface will not be disturbed at those points.

Similarly, as light consists of waves in the ether, it has been shown by Fresnel that if one ray be caused to fall half a wave length behind another the troughs of one set of waves will combine with the crests of the other set to neutralize one another, so producing still ether, or dark patches, at those particular points in the midst of the surrounding light.

A Helpful Spirit.

There had at first been six names on the list of candidates to be sent by popular vote from the little seaport town to the great fair, but gradually the list had dwindled, for two of the candidates went so far ahead of all the others that it became a farce to retain the other names.

It was when affairs had been at this point for three weeks, and within twenty-four hours of the time set for counting the last votes, that Miss Mattie Hawley met one of the candidates on the street.

"I don't know what to do," said Miss Mattie with a distressed look in her eyes. "I want you to go, and I want her to go, so at last I bethought me how I could help you both. So I went into Jones' and bought ten dozen cakes of soap and put half the coupons in for you and half for her."—Youth's Companion.

MAYOR OF QUINCY.

In 1894 Third Mayor of City and First Elected by Democrats.
In 1895 Relected Mayor of the City of Quincy.

Hon. William A. Hodges, ex-Mayor of Quincy, passed away early this morning, after a lingering illness. He had a third shock last week, and has been unconscious most of the time since, so that death was momentarily expected. For many years Mr. Hodges was one of Quincy's most prosperous merchants, and probably no citizen of today has received so many honors in political life.

William A. Hodges, son of Dr. Jerry and Mary (Tucker) Hodges, was the tenth in a family of eleven children, and born at Petersham, Mass., May 15, 1834. His youth until fourteen, was passed with his parents, with the common-school advantages. In February 1848, he commenced life for himself, going first to Boston, and afterwards to Milton, where he served an apprenticeship of three years as a baker, a trade that he followed until a few years ago. After his apprenticeship he worked as journeyman at Milton, Roxbury and elsewhere until 1858. In that year he went to California, where he remained two years, engaged in mining and baking. Returning to Massachusetts he again engaged with his former employers at Roxbury, continuing with them until 1862, when he took a trip to the West in search of a location wherein to establish himself. He remained in McGregor, Iowa, five months, then returned to Roxbury and his former employers.

In May, 1866, he came to Quincy and purchased an interest in the business of a baker on Hancock street. After eighteen months he became sole proprietor, and by energy, attention to business, and care in producing good articles he much increased it, enlarged the buildings and capacity of production, and made money.

As a citizen, Mr. Hodges was enterprising and public-spirited; as a friend, strong, warm and faithful; as a man he was held in the highest esteem. Believing in the principles of his fathers, which were given by Thomas Jefferson and enunciated in the Constitution of the United States, Mr. Hodges was a Democrat of the most unswerving order. His devotion to principle, coupled with his personal popularity, brought him into prominence in local politics. In every year from 1872 to 1895 he has been nominated for some official position, and has nearly always obtained an election.

In 1872 he was elected selectman of Quincy. In 1873 he was chairman of the board. In 1874 again elected selectman (without opposition). He resigned this office six weeks after his election with the full determination of devoting himself entirely to business, but in the fall (1874), he was placed in nomination by the Democrats to represent Quincy in the State Legislature, and was elected. The next spring (1875) he was elected selectman.

In 1876 he was "alternate" to the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis which nominated Tilden for President. In the fall of 1876 he was nominated by the Democratic Senatorial Convention of the First Norfolk District as its candidate for senator, and was the first candidate placed in the field after the State was redistricted. The district was so strongly Republican that the nomination was merely complimentary, no Democrat having a possible chance of an election. In 1877 he was elected selectman by a very large majority, and became chairman. In 1878 he was again elected selectman, and was chairman.

The death of Mr. Barker, senator elect, caused a new election for senator. In this contest Mr. Hodges was the Democratic nominee, and was elected (April 1878) to fill the vacancy.

In 1879 he was not in candidacy for selectman, but in the fall of that year was nominated by the Democrats of the Second District as their candidate for councillor. This was also a complimentary nomination.

In the spring of 1880 he was again elected selectman and chairman. In the fall of 1880 he received the complimentary nomination of county commissioner from his party. In the spring of 1881 he was again re-elected selectman, and was chairman.

In the fall of 1881 the Democratic State Convention made him its candidate for State Treasurer. In 1882 he was again nominated for State Treasurer. In 1883, under the bright outlook for Democracy, Democratic political managers were looking for a man strong enough by force of character, experience in office, and personal popularity to make a successful campaign in this senatorial district, and Mr. Hodges was the one declared to be the most advisable to select, and he was placed in nomination by the Senatorial Convention and elected.

In 1886, 1887 and 1888 Mr. Hodges was again chosen selectman and served each year as chairman.

Mr. Hodges was the first Democratic candidate for Mayor, but was defeated in 1888 and again in 1889 by Hon. Charles H. Porter. Again in 1892 he lost to Hon. Henry O. Fairbanks. In 1893 he was more successful, being elected by 361 majority. He was re-elected in 1894. In 1898 he tried again for Mayor but was defeated by Hon. Russell A. Sears. In 1899 under Mayor Keith, Mr. Hodges was the Principal Assessor.

Mr. Hodges was married Sept. 15, 1868, to Miss Annie M. Wilson, daughter of the late George F. and Mrs. Maria (Stetson) Wilson of Quincy. He leaves a widow, three sons and a daughter. The sons are Francis Mason, Edward Tisdale Quincy and Willard; the daughter, Mrs. Mabel Stetson Hunt, wife of Dr. Alvin A. Hunt of Hartford, Conn., who have one son named for Mr. Hodges.

WARD THREE UNANIMOUS.

Will Support James Thompson As Republican Candidate for Mayor.

Says He Is Not a City Hall Candidate and Has Made No Promises.

Principal Assessor James Thompson was the unanimous choice of the Republicans assembled at Malnati hall last night as a candidate for Mayor. John L. Miller was the man who proposed his name and the motion was carried with a snap that left no doubt of the unanimity of the meeting.

Mr. Thompson who was present accepted the honor and announced that he would take out nomination papers the next day.

Harry S. Nicol called the meeting to order and John C. Murray was elected as chairman with Frank Tinney as secretary.

The meeting first busied itself in selecting candidates for councilmen, school committee and ward committee.

The name of Alfred O. Diack was presented for Councilman at large. Mr. Diack, however, said that he was not a candidate but thought it should go to Councilman Piper. Mr. Piper thought differently and spoke in favor of Mr. Diack. Upon a show of hands Mr. Diack was nominated.

The meeting then commenced to select names for ward councilmen. Many names were proposed but through declination the list resolved itself down to the following:

Walter E. Piper, William T. Spargo, Frank Tinney, Newman A. Savage, William T. Cummings, Lloyd W. Jones, and John C. Murray.

The name of John L. Miller was proposed for School Committee from the ward.

Mr. Miller did not want to take the nomination. He had consented to take it for the unexpired term of Miss Adams but he thought some others better fitted.

Alfred O. Diack believed he was the man for the place. A man like him is needed.

Chairman Murray thought we should have good men on that board. Mr. Miller was the right man in the right place.

Andrew Milne hoped Mr. Miller would stand.

Councilman Piper,—We, in the Council, have been up against the School Board during the past year. It needs a man like Mr. Miller. A man with a mind of his own and one who will fight for it.

The meeting refused to allow Mr. Miller to withdraw his name.

Mr. Miller then thanked the meeting for their support. What can one or two men do in an organization like that? I do not expect to accomplish anything, but I will do my duty.

The following names were then placed in nomination for Ward Committee.

Chairman Murray then said the meeting was open for discussion. The Mayoralty question will soon be up and there will be a strong pull in certain directions, and the candidate may not be acceptable to Ward Three. He believed Ward Three had a good candidate, and thought it a good idea to talk it over. We should try and get a Mayor from Ward Three.

John L. Miller believed Ward Three should have a candidate for Mayor. It was one of the best, if not the best ward in the city. It had never had the distinction of having a Mayor. The ward had timber enough. There was one whom he had not always been in favor of, but he believed him an honest man, and he would present the name of James Thompson.

The announcement of the name of Mr. Thompson brought out a round of applause. He was called to the platform by the chairman to address the meeting.

Mr. Thompson said that he was very much pleased to see so large a gathering, as it indicated that interest had not abated in political affairs. To be a candidate for any office and to have the endorsement of fellow citizens was an honor. This was a matter that had been presented to him since early in the year by gentlemen from the various sections of the city. I said that I did not want my name mentioned prematurely. I have said if there was a public sentiment for me, well and good. If not, well and good. Whoever the Republicans nominate I will support. I have not sought the office, but if this meeting endorses me I will take the necessary steps tomorrow to take nomination papers.

What has been said about my being a City Hall candidate, was malice a forethought. He had not had any conversation with any single head of department in City Hall to the effect, and they have said nothing to me. No pledges and no promises have been made. They are free agents. I ask nothing other than what I accord them, that is, American freedom to do as they think best.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

In the death of Hon. William A. Hodges Quincy loses the first from the list of its Mayors. For sixteen years we have been a city but with this exception all our ex-Mayors are hale and hearty and in active business today. With the exception of Hon. Charles H. Porter, Mr. Hodges was the only selectman of the old town government who has been executive of the city. Mr. Hodges at the time of his death had served more years as selectman of Quincy than any one living, many years were with the late William N. Eaton who recently passed away, and others with J. Q. A. Field, the late Joseph W. Robertson, the late Ensign S. Fellows, the late Wyman Abercrombie, the late John Chamberlin, Hon. Charles H. Porter, the late Alfred Sampson, George Harvey Field and Walter H. Ripley. Mr. Hodges served in all eleven years as Selectman, and he was Mayor two years.

Drift of Opinion.

☞Haverhill will have an armory worth $40,000. Haverhill must have money in stacks just at this time. Talk of spending that sum of money for an armory or anything else in Brockton just at this time would cause an outbreak of something like anarchy.—Brockton Enterprise.

☞About as absurd as anything that is put forth in the way of political prediction in the statement of the Douglas managers that this state will vote for Roosevelt and Douglas. Roosevelt, of course; but the Brockton man must get the satisfaction for his candidacy in the fun of running.—New Bedford Standard.

☞Eighty-two per cent. of the taxes paid before the day when interest charges are due is a splendid record, and speaks well for the taxpayers of Bridgewater. ☞It is the October weather that makes you dream and forget business and trouble and drift away back to the barefoot days and happiness. Which would you rather have—a million dollars or boyhood again? Forty years ago, on a day like this, you crawled out of bed at 5 a. m., ate half of a cold apple pie, stuffed some cookies in your pocket and slipped out of the house without disturbing anybody, for a chestnutting expedition with other boys. Two Torpedo Boats Advanced to Attack Russian Warships

FIRE AT ONCE OPENED

No Aid Rendered Little Steamboats Because They Were Suspected of Complicity--Russian Naval Staff Gives Out Two Reports From Rojestvensky

St. Petersburg, Oct. 28.—The naval general staff publishes two dispatches from Vice Admiral Rojestvensky. The first one says:

"The North sea incident was caused by two torpedo boats advancing to attack without lights under cover of darkness against the vessel leading the detachment.

"When the detachment turned on its searchlights and opened fire the presence of several small steamboats, resembling steam fishing boats, was discovered. The detachment endeavored to spare these, and ceased firing as soon as the torpedo boats were out of sight.

"The English press is indignant because a torpedo boat left by the detachment on the spot until morning did not aid the victims. Now, there was not a single torpedo boat near the detachment and none was left behind; consequently the vessel remaining near the small steamboats was that torpedo boat which was not sunk, but only damaged.

"The detachment did not aid the little steamboats because we suspected them of complicity on account of their obstinately cutting into the orders of the positions of our vessels. Several of them showed no lights and others only very late."

The second dispatch says:

"Having met several hundred fishing boats the squadron showed them every consideration except when they, in company with foreign torpedo boats, of which one disappeared, while the other, according to the fishers' own evidence, remained among them until morning.

"They supposed it was a Russian and were indignant because it did not aid the victims, but it was foreign and remained until morning, seeking the other torpedo boat, its consort, either to repair damage or through fear of betraying itself to those who were not its accomplices.

"If there were also on the spot fishermen imprudently dragged into the enterprise, I beg in the name of the whole squadron to express my sincere regret to the unfortunate victims of circumstances under which no warship, even in time of deep peace, could have acted otherwise."

Rojestvensky's Statement Refuted

Hull, Eng., Oct. 28.—The simplicity of the funeral rites over the bodies of the victims of the North sea incident was in strong contrast to the deep feeling displayed by the enormous concourse of public mourners. Admiral Rojestvensky's statements are dismissed as absolutely inaccurate and unworthy of the slightest consideration. The fishermen are emphatic in declaring that it can be proved beyond doubt that there were no Japanese torpedo boats in the vicinity of Dogger Bank. Further, they point out that the Baltic squadron was 30 miles out of the proper course, with the result that the vessels steamed into the midst of the trawlers.

Fired on Norwegian Steamer

Copenhagen, Oct. 28.—The master of the Norwegian steamship Skaatol reports from London that he was fired on by a Russian ship in the English channel. The firing ceased when the Skaatol hoisted her flag. Soon afterwards 18 Russian men-of-war passed the Skaatol.

Rojestvensky Called a Lunatic

Rome, Oct. 28.—The Italian Anglophile feeling is voiced by The Tribuna, a leading government paper, which calls Admiral Rojestvensky a lunatic, adding that if complete and prompt satisfaction is not given, war will be inevitable.

May Make Repairs at Vigo

Madrid, Oct. 28.—The government has authorized the Russian warships at Vigo to remain in port and complete repairs, on condition that they leave immediately after repairs are completed.

Russians Failed to Hit Fisherman

Geestemune, Oct. 28.—The fishing vessel Senntag, which has just arrived here, reports that it was fired upon for 2½ hours off Dogger Bank, but was not hit.

Reduced From $16,000 to $6567

New York, Oct. 28.—The jury in the suit of Joseph Leiter of Chicago against the stock broking firm of Thomas & Post to recover $16,000, the value of 500 shares of International Power stock, brought in a special finding upon which was directed a verdict for Leiter in the sum of $6567.

Nearly 5000 Men Laid Off

Schnectady, N. Y., Oct. 28.—Over 100 office employes of the American Locomotive company have been notified that their services are no longer required. With this cutdown only about 200 men of the 5000 in the local plant of the concern four months ago remain at work.

SOLDIERS ACQUITTED

Not Considered Responsible For the Killing of Larkin Hall

Boston, Oct. 28.—Fred Watson and Eugene Sennott, the two members of the coast artillery, stationed at Fort Warren, who were charged with the murder of Larkin W. Hall, a milliner, at the latter's apartments, were discharged by Judge Parmenter in the municipal court late yesterday at the conclusion of a three day's hearing. In discharging the soldiers, Judge Parmenter said that, in his opinion, Sennott was blameless, while Watson acted in self-defense.

Hall was found dead in his room on Oct. 16, with a wound made by a Japanese sword over the heart. From letters found in the room suspicion was directed toward the two soldiers and they were arrested. Watson admitted to the police that Hall had tried to kill him with the sword and he parried the blow and the point of the weapon entered Hall's body.

Sennott testified that he believed that Hall drugged the liquor which he gave Watson and himself. The witness testified that he was asleep at the time Hall was killed and knew nothing of the circumstances further than what Watson had told him.

New Move by Master Builders

Boston, Oct. 28.—All workmen employed by the members of the Master Builders' association were given, upon leaving their work last night, a registration card, which they were directed to fill out and sign. These cards contained spaces for the workman's name, age, place of apprenticeship, length of service and name of last employer. There is also appended a declaration that the signer will not allow any affiliation he may have to work to the injury of any member of the Master Builders' association.

Rewards Not Forthcoming

Hartford, Oct. 28.—Judge Roraback of the superior court, in deciding the matter of a claim for a reward offered for the capture of a chicken thief, said that a police officer was not entitled to and should not expect a special reward for doing his duty. An officer who arrested the thief applied for the reward. The court also ruled that B. J. Sullivan, a hackman, was not entitled to the $3000 offered for the capture of Joe Watson, the negro who murdered Mr. Osborn. He ruled that the police caught Watson.

American Pitch For Italy

Boston, Oct. 28.—Within a few days a new export staple will be added to the many which the United States now boasts, and the first shipment is to be made from this port. It is a cargo of pitch which the National Coal Tar company will send to Genoa, to be used there in the manufacture of briquettes, a fuel in common use in Italy and some other European countries. The pitch is used as a cement for moulding coal dust into the shape of bricks or balls.

Pugilist Wolcott Locked Up

Boston, Oct. 28.—Joe Walcott, the negro pugilist, who is charged with the murder of Nelson Hall at a dance, was last night discharged from the city hospital. At the time a bullet from Walcott's revolver entered Hall's heart, Walcott was wounded in the hand and taken to the hospital. Immediately upon his discharge from the hospital he was locked up for the night.

Valuation of Boston Gas

Boston, Oct. 28.—Engineer Humphreys has submitted to the state board of gas and electric light commissioners the estimate and appraisal which he was asked to make of the valuation of the machinery and other property of the Boston gas companies, not including real estate. He places the whole valuation at $20,276,598.

Slashing Over Half a Dollar

Boston, Oct. 28.—John Ford was arrested last night for an assault with intent to kill on Thomas Green. The men became involved in a dispute over 50 cents and it is alleged that Ford attacked Green with a razor. Green received a serious cut in the neck and was taken to a hospital.

Twenty-One Years as President

Hartford, Oct. 28.—The Connecticut W. C. T. U. chose Mrs. Caroline B. Buell as its state president in place of Mrs. Forbes, who had served for 21 years. The gifts of the state union to its retiring president were a diamond ring and brooch.

Woman Burned to Death

Fairhaven, Mass., Oct. 28.—Mrs. Arthur Cumming was lighting a fire last night when a spark fell on her dress, which blazed up instantly. She ran out upon the steps of her house, where she became unconscious, dying in a short time.

Life Sentence For Murder

Boston, Oct. 28.—William A. Parker, a negro, was given a life sentence in the state prison for the murder of Eleanora Cobb. Parker shot and instantly killed the woman after a trivial dispute over money matters.

Half a Million Dollar Fire

New York, Oct. 28.—Fire which began early this morning destroyed a pier in Brooklyn and the steamer City of Palermo, which was lying at the pier. Five or six lighters loaded with cotton were also burned. A policeman and a fireman are reported as missing. It is estimated that the loss will reach $500,000.

Large Enterprise For Virginia

Baltimore, Oct. 28.—For several months experienced miners and manufacturers of pyrites have been investigating pyrites deposits near Pulaski, Va., and the results are so satisfactory that a company has been chartered with a capital stock of $500,000 to develop about 80 acres of land containing the ore.

Slight Advance by Japanese

Mukden, Oct. 28.—The Japanese yesterday assumed the offensive on the east front and made a slight advance. It is rumored that the Japanese have taken all the Russian positions at Erdagou, on the road from Mukden to Bentslaputze, but the report has not been confirmed and looks improbable.

Miners' Widows Bring Suits

Pittsburg, Oct. 28.—Eighteen widows have entered suits against the Allegheny Coal company as a result of the Cheswick mine disaster. Each plaintiff lost her husband and each sues for $10,000 damages, making an aggregate of $180,000. Negligence on the part of the company is charged.

Failure of Commission House

New York, Oct. 28.—The firm of J. W. Labaree & Co. has closed its offices in this city. Labaree & Co. advertised as a commission house, with about 70 out-of-town offices. The assets are stated as being probably between $6000 and $7000, with liabilities of $123,000.

DANGEROUSLY CLOSE TO WAR

Peace of Whole Europe Menaced by North Sea Incident

ENGLAND IN ANGRY MOOD

Rojestvensky's Story of Being Assailed by Torpedo Boats Characterized as Amazing and Bearing Refutation on Its Face --Word Now Rests With Russia as to Whether There Will Be War -- Diplomatic Usage Compels Less Urgent Action Than Was First Contemplated

London, Oct. 28.—One of the most complicated diplomatic situations in recent history and one that is attended with the most dangerous possibilities for the peace of the whole of Europe exists, with no sign of immediate solution.

Admiral Rojestvensky's report on the North sea incident states that he was attacked by two torpedo boats coming out from the cover of the English fishing boats. He opened fire and says he thinks he sank one, the other returning to cover behind the fishermen. He claims that he did not know that he damaged any neutral vessels.

It may be true that the Russians thought they were being attacked by torpedo boats, but the fact that they were in neutral waters thousands of miles from the theatre of war should have made them hesitate to open fire until thoroughly convinced of the hostile intentions of the craft sighted.

The story that a number of Japanese recently were in Hull and suddenly disappeared and the report that the North sea fishermen sighted two strange torpedo boats is used in St. Petersburg to fortify the report of the Russian admiral.

Admiral Rojestvensky's report seemed to stagger almost everyone. Its statements were received with incredulity and evidently the reply was regarded as merely an adroit counter in order to gain time. The text of the admiral's telegrams are calculated to inflame instead of allaying the resentment of the British public. His statement that he "endeavored to spare the trawlers and ceased to fire as soon as the torpedo boats were out of sight," together with the virtual accusation of complicity with supposed Japanese torpedo boats against the fishermen, is hardly likely to reconcile an angry nation to the possibility that there is another side to the case calling for investigation.

Commenting upon the continued delay of the Russian government and what is characterized as the amazing story which Rojestvensky presents in defense of his action, little disposition is displayed to listen for a moment seriously to the admiral's story. Some St. Petersburg special correspondents even go so far as to suggest the explanation "home manufactured."

The most serious of the morning newspapers confess that the country is under the shadow of war and that the word is now with Russia. The Standard editorially describes Rojestvensky's whole story as the creation of a disordered imagination, bearing its refutation on its face, and says: "For Russia to enter into a controversy with England on the basis of such a tissue of misstatements can only lead to trouble."

The Daily Telegraph says: "If the admiral believes his own story, all that can be said is that the sooner he returns home and is looked after the better it will be for himself, his family and his country."

These extracts well represent the opinion of the country and press. The fact that the second Pacific squadron appears to have fired on vessels of various nationalities is regarded as proving that its officers were in a condition of nervous panic, rendering the squadron a danger to the world's commerce.

The tension that arose when the dispute between Great Britain and Russia resolved itself into the simple question whether Russia would or would not guarantee in advance that some punishment should be administered to the offending officers of the Baltic squadron has been modified by the introduction of an entirely new set of contentions contained in Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's report, yet even the most astute diplomats, who recognize a temporary improvement in conditions, are puzzled by the complications that so curiously cause it. However, there is at the embassies of powers not concerned in the dispute a very strong conviction that a way out will be found other than in recourse to war.

The foreign office, apparently as puzzled as the onlookers, pursues the policy of silence, and the British press is almost totally uninformed. The voluminous exchanges daily occurring between London and St. Petersburg continue, the statement that no reply from Russia has been received adding to the implication that Russia is intentionally ignoring the British representations. It is this misconception which is chiefly responsible for the stirring up of a popular agitation against which the government may find it hard to stand out in the possible event of Foreign Minister Lansdowne withdrawing the demand that Russia guarantee punishment before inquiry is instituted.

Had Admiral Rojestvensky's report not arrived it is probable the dispute would have been settled one way or the other last night. Its terms, however, are generally held to prevent the presentation of the ultimatum which Great Britain undoubtedly intended to send. Although Lord Lansdowne has frankly said that the circumstances reported by Rojestvensky are to him inconceivable, the foreign minister is not prevented from seeing that new light has been thrown on the "outrage" and that diplomatic usage now compels less urgent action than the British government at first contemplated.

In the present temper of the British nation it is not at all likely that preparations for hostilities will be relaxed or that the popular outcry will be diminished by Rojestvensky's report, but it is understood that Great Britain would run the risk of forfeiting in some degree the good will of France, and certainly that of Germany, if she proceeded to substitute warlike for diplomatic steps, of which intention there is no indication in Lord Lansdowne's communication.

The attitude of France is held of the highest importance. It is said by the representative of another great power that if France had given definite assurances that she would not support Russia in the event of war growing out of the North sea incident, a hostile issue would be almost inevitable, as the temptation to crush the Russian naval power after such provocation could scarcely have been refused by Great Britain.

It is pointed out that it is greatly to France's interest to preserve peace, and her efforts in that direction obviously will be strengthened by not committing herself except at the last moment. So long as Great Britain is not sure whether France will help Russia, she will not be likely to engage in war; while Russia, with France neutral, would, so it is thought at most of the embassies here, scarcely invite defeat.

The most probable solution of the rumors regarding France's position is said by a high authority to be that she has given both disputants to understand that she does not desire to become involved, but has reserved her final decision.

Ambassador Cambon of France has been unceasingly active, not only in visiting Foreign Minister Lansdowne and Ambassador Bengendorff, but other of his diplomatic colleagues.

Baron Hayashi, the Japanese minister, after reading Admiral Rojestvensky's report again, reiterated his statement that it was impossible that any Japanese torpedo boat could have been where the Russian admiral thought them. He declared that Rojestvensky's own statement of indiscriminate firing after such slight investigation proved that the Russian fleet was likely to menace the safety of all neutral seas and make international law merely a farce. War between England and Russia, Baron Hayashi frankly admitted, would be greatly to Japan's advantage; yet, as a friend of England, he would be sorry to see it come, though such a war could hardly consist of more than one naval engagement, the result of which would be a foregone conclusion.

Exactly what method can be taken to investigate Rojestvensky's statements does not clearly appear. The Russian embassy here can throw no light upon the alleged presence of torpedo boats in the North sea, the British admiralty has no information, and fresh inquiry among the trawlers elicits no new facts. The Russian embassy thinks that a further and more elaborate inquiry is proceeding at Vigo, where the testimony of the officers participating in the affair is being minutely recorded.

No representations have been made either by the Japanese or the British government regarding the action of the Spanish authorities in connection with the Baltic fleet, both governments being perfectly satisfied of the correctness of the Spanish attitude.

So far as is known here the United States is not moving in the present dispute, statements alleging expressions of accord with the British attitude on the part of the United States being emphatically denied by Charge White in the absence of Ambassador Choate, who is in the country.

British Fleets In Readiness

London, Oct. 28.—Notwithstanding the diplomatic check in consequence of Admiral Rojestvensky's report, it is evident that Great Britain is preparing for the possibility of war. Tremendous activity is reported from all dockyards where vessels under repair are being made ready for sea under urgent orders from the admiralty. The Mediterranean fleet is hastening in the direction of Gibraltar, and it is announced that the channel squadron, with decks cleared, will leave Gibraltar today. The home fleet, likewise, is concentrating. In fact, almost the entire British navy is pointing in the direction of the Baltic fleet, a portion of which is expected to sail from Vigo during today.

Situation Extremely Grave

Berlin, Oct. 28.—While most of the newspapers avoid editorial discussion of the Anglo-Russian crisis, breathless interest is felt by the public regarding the developments of the next 24 hours. The press partly indulges in optimistic hopes, reflecting the government's views. Others, like the weighty Kreuz-Zeitung, regard the situation as being extremely grave, since the negotiations must proceed with unprecedented rapidity because otherwise the Russian squadron will get beyond reach.

Michigan Suffragists Move

Jackson, Mich., Oct. 28.—Acting upon advice given in a letter of greeting from Susan B. Anthony, the Michigan Equal Suffrage association, now in annual session here, adopted a resolution demanding that the word "male" be eliminated from the section of the state constitution bearing on elections and specifying what requirements must be met to entitle "male" inhabitants to vote at elections.

Polly Screamed For Help

Chicago, Oct. 28.—Excited by shrill cries for help coming from a burning building last night, firemen fought their way through flames to save a supposed person, and returned with a parrot that belonged to H. S. Fewer, whose rooming house was damaged $5000 by the fire. Dennis Hogan was burned to death and Morris Burns was severely scorched by the fire.

SUCCESSFUL FLIGHT

Benbow's Airship Takes Part In Aeronautic Concourse

St. Louis, Oct. 28.—Floating gracefully in the air at an average height of 30 feet, above the heads of the several thousand spectators, the airship designed and built by T. C. Benbow of Columbus, Mont., made what the inventor declares was a successful trial flight in the aeronautic concourse at the World's Fair.

The big cigar-shaped balloon, bearing its burden of car, motor, machinery and operator, rose from the ground at 5 o'clock last evening and, after navigating the air for 15 minutes, during which Benbow directed the prow of his vessel toward all points of the compass, slowly descended to the ground near the starting place and was secured by attendants without a break to mar the success of the flight.

While Benbow appeared to have absolute control over the machine, an anchor rope about 50 feet long was used, one end of which was held by an assistant during the entire flight.

Woman Confessed to Murder

Hartford City, Ind., Oct. 28.—Indicted yesterday by a grand jury for the poisoning of her stepdaughter, Mrs Rae M. Krauss, after demanding an immediate trial, pleaded guilty to murder and handed to Judge Vaughn a signed confession. The jury at once returned a verdict of guilty. Judge Vaughn then sentenced Mrs. Krauss to imprisonment for life. Within half an hour the prisoner was on the way to prison. The confession pleads that the crime was committed while the defendant was dispossessed of her senses.

Boy Mixed Up In Kidnapping

Philadelphia, Oct. 28.—George W. Wahl, aged 15, whose testimony has formed the bulwark of evidence against the gypsies suspected of the abduction and murder of Michael Miorski at Phoenixville a few days ago, was arrested last night. His arrest and arraignment followed closely upon the hearing of the gypsy suspects, who were committed to prison without bail. The boy is charged with aiding and abetting in the abduction. He claimed that he saw the gypsies steal the boy.

Lose Faith In High Priced Cotton

Memphis, Oct. 28.—The declining tendency in the cotton market has frightened some farmers in the south who were disposed to hold cotton for higher prices, and they have weakened perceptibly. Cotton is arriving freely at interior points and the movement seems close to its height. Many who were confident of higher prices, especially smaller farmers, have lost faith to some extent and are offering cotton for sale or asking bids.

Peace Conference Must Wait

Vienna, Oct. 28.—The foreign office believes that nothing is likely to result at present on the subject of the proposed new peace conference at The Hague. It points out that the war in the far east is constantly opening new and important questions of international law which cannot be satisfactorily dealt with until hostilities are over.

NURSING MOTHERS

"A richer milk than milk" is good food for nursing mothers. Scott's Emulsion is the rich cream of cod liver oil, and contains ten times as much cream as milk does.

The nursing mother must eat with the purpose of producing good, nourishing milk for her baby. A little Scott's Emulsion is often a very wise addition to her daily diet. If through nervousness or weakness her milk is a failure, Scott's Emulsion will help make it a success.

The baby gets the benefit, too, when the mother takes Scott's Emulsion. The same remedy brings new strength and nourishment to both.

A LYNCHING CHECK

Alabama Indictments Will Aid In Abolishing Mob Law

FEDERAL JUDGE'S CHARGE

His Support of State Authorities Hailed With Delight by Conservative Element--Old Prejudices Are Shelved

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 28.—The action of the federal grand jury at Huntsville, Ala., in returning indictments against alleged lynchers whom the state courts had failed to punish has aroused this portion of the south to a fever heat of interest which is far greater than any interested manifested in politics, local or national.

This practical result of the recent charge of federal Judge Jones has been hailed with delight by the conservative elements, which have been making an earnest crusade against mob law and the lynching evil, while it has brought something very like consternation to the radicals whose views find most pronounced expression from the Tillmans, Vardamans and others. From one end of the south to the other comes a mighty protest against the "interference" of the United States courts in the internal affairs of the states.

The old and familiar effort to stir up the prejudice of the people against the federal courts have been brought to the front, and the changes are being rung on the "infamy" of interference with the legitimate work of the state courts, without mention, of course, of the failure of these state courts in bringing to punishment the men whose participation in the lynching at Huntsville is known. These men escaped punishment in the state courts upon some technicality; and it was this failure which prompted Judge Jones to insist that the federal grand jury had a duty to perform.

The grounds upon which Judge Jones placed his charge—the necessity of the federal courts coming to the support of the state authorities when the power of the state to administer punishment had been proven inadequate—put a new phase upon the problem of suppressing mob lawlessness at the south. Coming as this did from a man who was a brave soldier of the Confederacy and only recently Democratic governor of his state, it has proved a mighty factor in shaping the better public sentiment in all these states. The efforts to awaken the old prejudices against the federal courts have fallen flat in the face of the personality of Judge Jones. There is no room in the discussion for the cry of carpetbagism, once so potent in arousing prejudices. While the radicals are crying aloud, the better element throughout the south has hailed the action of this federal grand jury as a ray of light.

Everybody understands that the insurmountable difficulty in bringing the lynchers to punishment in the state courts has been the local fears or sympathies or prejudices which have influenced the juries, and too often the judges and prosecuting officers. These necessarily have less weight with the federal juries, grand and petit, since these are drawn from a wider field. And if the example of Judge Jones is followed by other federal judges, there will not only be prosecutions, but, what is more important, the possibility of prosecution in the United States courts will act as a mighty deterrent upon lynchings and mob uprisings of every character.

So far this action is the most important development of the crusade against lynching which has been waged by press and pulpit at the south since the Huntsville and Statesboro affairs. Of lesser importance, but not to be overlooked, is the action of the military courts in punishing the militia commanders responsible for the disgraceful failures of the Alabama and Georgia troops.

At Statesboro the grand jury of the state court is in session, and, with the mass of testimony which has been placed in the hands of the court, ought to bring a lot of indictments. It is undoubtedly true, however, that public sentiment at Statesboro was so strong against the victims of the mob's wrath there, and some of the men implicated are so strong politically, that prosecution in the state courts will be difficult. Should it fail, there is every reason to expect that Judge Speer will follow the example set by Judge Jones in Alabama, and if he does he will find the better sentiment of Georgia strongly supporting him.

The attractions of the fair are numerous, and everything one can desire is on sale.

The first floor is devoted to men patrons, and there are to be found the cigar and tobacco booth, and the always popular pool table.

On the second floor are the flower and candy tables, and nearby a booth devoted to yachtsmen's needs, containing, anchors, club hats and flags, etc. For the ladies there is a fancy table, with everything useful and ornamental they can desire. Beside this is the linen table, with a large array of goods. For the children there is a grab bag, and the large number of people who are trying to win the excellent Winchester rifle offered for the best shot, keep the manager of the shooting gallery busy.

The fair would not be complete without the cafe where frankfurts, coffee, and ice cream are on sale, and the cake and preserve table offers a large supply in its line of goods.

At the stationery booth one may take a chance at winning a box of stationery and a fountain pen. Each box has only twenty shares.

The canned good table offers a varied assortment, and as the gentleman in charge said, "You take no chances, there, but pay your money and take your goods."

Before leaving the fair everyone should try the novel game, "The Devil among Sailors" and run a chance of winning a dollar each evening.

A vaudeville entertainment, arranged by Mr. Robert Fraser, was enjoyed by all present Thursday evening. Among the numbers on the program was a tenor solo by Mr. Vernon A. Lyman of Boston; parlor magic and sleight of hand by Professor Floyd, and mandolin, banjo and guitar selections by Mr. Basil Barton, of Boston.

During the three evenings of the fair one can buy chances for very valuable prizes including, a centre table, an excellent leather dress suit case, an expensive billiard cue, and last but not least a gasoline engine.

Among those at the booths and tables last evening, were the following:—

Cigars,—F. F. Taylor and Miss Mabel Wilson.

Flower table,—Misses Bertha Given, Inez Jefferson, Ruth Page, Mamie Brown, Susie Page and Mr. Dill.

Candy table, — Mrs. Robert Frazer, Miss Leona Robbins, and Miss Davidson.

Stationery,—Misses Rena Grant, Millie Linnell, Susie James, Minnie LeBlanc, and Mrs. James.

Canned goods,—Messrs. James and Robbins.

Cake and preserves,—Mrs. H. R. Smith and Mrs. Dr. Merrill.

Fancy table,—Mrs. John Given, Miss Dority, Miss Mary Chase.

Linen table,—Miss Abbie Baker and Mrs. Miller.

Cue alley,—Mr. Harold Winslow.

Cafe,—Miss Julia Page and Mr. Page.

Yachtsmen's goods,— Miss Fannie Frazer and Miss Klingenhargen.

Grab-bag,—Messrs Robert Comins and Ernest Merrill.

Shooting gallery,— Mr. Hamilton Chase.

Those who had charge of the chance prizes were Messrs Whittier, Stebbins, Sadlier, Hunt, and Winslow.

"Devil among Sailors" game,—John Given.

The Lutheran Fair.

The Swedish Lutheran fair opened at Faxon hall Thursday evening and was very largely attended. There were many attractions, including a shooting gallery, fishing pond, cane toss, ball toss into barrel, a Laplander as a grab bag, a fancy table, a refreshment table, ice cream table, tonic table, etc.

A novelty at the fair was the art museum in the gallery in charge of W. R. Lofgren. It was an exhibit by the Old Century club and included antiques and novelties from all parts of the world, particularly the Philippines, Africa and Sweden.

Early in the evening the six characters in charge were introduced individually to those assembled in the hall below. The drummer boy escorted each. Uncle Sam was there and also two men and two women in mask. Later these were busy in the old time employments of carding wool, knitting stockings, reading and explaining the exhibits. There was music by a phonograph.

Foresters' Anniversary.

John Ericssen Court, Foresters of America, celebrated its fifth anniversary Thursday evening at Hancock hall. The feature of the evening was a grand Swedish banquet, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the large number present. Several of the grand officers of the order were present and made brief addresses on the order and the good work which it was doing.

UNANIMOUS.

If I should be elected I promise that the business affairs will be conducted, as far as in my power, on a business basis. I have no favors to grant. Citizens will be treated fairly and alike. A public officer is a public servant. If it is agreeable and satisfactory I should be pleased to receive your endorsement. I thank Mr. Miller for mentioning my name. It was through no solicitation of mine, but I appreciate it.

From my point of view the financial question is the one of the day. It is a vital question to this municipal corporation of which every man, woman and child is a shareholder. To keep our expenditures within our means. There is the meat in a nutshell. When we became a city we inherited no improvements or debts. The debt has piled up, but we have got much to show for it.

The pure water we are receiving was expensive but was a great blessing. Every dollar for the public sewer so far has come from the abutters, but in a short time must come in the tax levy. We are taxed for Metropolitan parks for which we receive little benefit. The State and Metropolitan levy represents $3.43 of the $18 tax rate.

Next year the Quincy Point and Atlantic bridges will come into our taxes. We cannot go on extending the services of the city without due regard as to how to pay for them.

This year I said if there was a public sentiment favorable to me I would say yes. I stand in a position not enthusiastic for it, but I will not retreat.

John L. Miller said that he had gone so far as to say he would vote against Mr. Thompson. But the thought had come to him, "why it was that Ward Three never got anything," and a small voice said because, "you are never united." Did you ever notice how united they are in Ward Five, that is what Ward Three wants to be. Let us lay down our differences and work for the election of our candidate. I believe he is honest and will enforce the laws. He has all the qualifications and what he states about the financial question I believe.

If property was assessed for its value things would be different. It cannot be different until we exercise economy. We should have a Mayor who is in Quincy during the day time. Ward Three should be unanimous and support our candidate.

The motion to endorse Mr. Thompson for Mayor was unanimously carried.

Henry H. Faxon was called upon, and said that the matter of Mayor came close to him—except the last one. He was confident of one thing, and that was the Mayor has a big job on his hands. We want a man who has a mind of his own. He would like to ask Mr. Thompson if he favored no-license and its vigorous enforcement.

Mr. Thompson replied, yes.

Continuing, Mr. Faxon said, I know the liquor law has not been enforced during the last year as it ought to have been. It was an important matter to enforce the license law, but after expending thousands of dollars he did not like to be insulted and not be appointed a constable without pay. The blessing of no-license in this city has been immense. He never regretted the money he had expended to enforce the law. It was an insult to serve any man as the present Mayor has served me.

He hoped they would put good business men in the council. Some of those we have had, have not had the ability to run a peanut stand.

John L. Johnson considered it a privilege to say a word in favor of Mr. Thompson. He had considered for several years if any man should have that office it should be Mr. Thompson. He is a man we need not be ashamed of. He knew of none better fitted for the office and we should take pride in having a candidate willing to serve.

Harry S. Nicol thought the time had come for Ward Three to get together. There is no reason why we should not get together for Mr. Thompson. He hoped every Republican voter in Ward Three will put sentiment aside and support Mr. Thompson.

Edward J. Lennon had a few words to say in regard to an insult which had recently been given him by a certain city official.

Other remarks were made by John P. Bigelow and Andrew Milne.

☞A Poll-parrot has just died in a New York town, of appendicitis. Now if the birds are really wise, they will learn to add the description of a pain in the little inside, as an appendix, as it were, to the rather ancient and hackneyed repertoire on the cracker question. —Lowell Citizen.

FURNACE COLD.

People who live in furnace-heated houses may have noticed the prevalence of supposed colds, coughs and throat ailments immediately after the furnace has been started in the fall. As a matter of fact, experts declare that these epidemics are largely caused by the dust and germs which gather in the registers and hot-air pipes during the summer and are blown into the air of the house when the furnace is started. In addition to the ordinary dust, which is certain to settle in such places during the summer months, there is also danger that it may become impregnated with poisonous vapors from the cellar, which may be released by the current of hot air rising from the cellar. In view of the large number of houses which are heated by furnaces, the question of properly cleaning the pipes has an important influence on the health.—Healthy Home.

CAUTION.

The above article is from a reliable source, and we do not believe the danger from this cause is over estimated.

It has been stated before by different authorities that a large per cent. of the throat and lung trouble in the winter months, in the northern states, was caused by the hot, dry, dusty air from the hot-air furnace and registers. To avoid this danger use the more modern method of HOT WATER, or STEAM HEAT.

Spreading Gloom.

No accusation is commoner among intimates than that of spreading gloom. Each member of a family privately feels how cheery he or she would be if only the others would make an effort to be cheerful too.

"I am naturally of a gay disposition," said a young man to his friend as they walked sadly along together, "but I require an echo."

"And I can be very gay, too," said the other, "but I also require an echo!"

They continued their walk in dreary silence.—London Outlook.

The pupils of the Belcher school were given a fire drill last week. While the teachers had an intimation that an alarm might be sounded some day they did not know when, and the three hundred children were in ignorance of the fact. There was some nervousness when the alarm sounded one day but the children behaved well. They marched out in order into the yard and then back into the building the whole time consumed being but three and one-half minutes.

A social whist party was the attraction at the Thursday Evening club this week.

Summer's toiling now is past;
Harvest now hath sent her last—
Her last, last load.
If the field containeth more,
Master give it to the poor,
Abroad—abroad.

While we welcome harvest-home:
Songs shall sound and ale-cups foam,
While we welcome harvest-home.

SUDDEN DEATH.

William C. Seelye, the Building Inspector, Passes Away.

William C. Seelye, a well known resident of Wollaston, had a shock of appolexy yesterday morning and passed away early in the evening. Mr. Seelye has been a resident of Wollaston for many years. From 1876 to 1888 he served as a town constable and since that time has served as a constable and special police officer.

He was for many years connected with the volunteer fire department. First as a foreman of the John R. Lovell Chemical Engine Co. and as an assistant engineer for twelve years.

His trade was that of a carpenter and he had been employed by the city at various times as inspector of new school buildings during their erection. He was a vetran of the Civil war, and a member of the Abraham Lincoln Post, G. A. R., of Charlestown. He was also a member of Rural lodge of Masons. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. W. Parker Gould. He was 63 years of age.

WELL SATISFIED.

Quincy High Held the Strong Wellesley Team to a Touchdown.

Quincy High expected defeat yesterday from the Wellesley High team, which has a long string of victories to its credit. The game was the closest which has been played at Merrymount park this season, and the visitors had no walkover, although they won 5 to 0.

The Wellesley boys were very rough in tackling. Their best rushes were made by Dedrickson, Johnson and Reed. The score was made in the first half, but they failed to kick a goal. The Quincy goal was again in danger when time was called.

The best plays for Quincy were by Percival and Jordan in rushing, Jefferson's long run and the tackling of Campbell. Quincy also blocked a drop kick by Wellesley for a goal. The Wellesley goal was in danger twice.

Berraud—Ratcliffe.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Ratcliffe of Commercial street was the scene of a very pretty home wedding Wednesday evening, when their oldest daughter, Ida C., was united in marriage to Ernest S. Berraud of Brookline, Rev. Robert Cochrane of the Union Congregational church performing the ceremony.

The bride was beautifully gowned in white crepe de chene with tulle veil caught with bride roses and carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums. She was attended by Miss Agnes Maguire of Brookline, who was tastily attired in white organdie with pink garnitures and carried a bouquet of pinks. Mr. James Brown of Cambridge was best man. After the ceremony a reception was held and a dainty lunch was served.

The happy couple were the recipients of many beautiful gifts from their many relatives and friends, and although the wedding invitations were strictly limited to relatives, they will be pleased to greet their many friends, upon their return from their wedding trip, at their home on Commercial street, Weymouth.

License at Braintree.

The selectmen gave a hearing Braintree at the town house Tuesday morning at 10.30 o'clock relative to the granting of a sixth class license, for the sale of intoxicating liquors, to Charles A. Leach of the Whitcomb Pharmacy, South Braintree. There were about twenty gentlemen present and the hearing continued an hour and a half. There were two lists of signers presented, one in favor of the granting, the other opposed. No personal remarks were indulged in. Mr. C. C. Mellen owner of the block in which the pharmacy is located favored the granting and his arguments were very good.

Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern, Rev. A. E. Legg, Rev. E. C. Stover and several others were opposed to giving the license purely and simply because one druggist, Mr. W. A. Torrey, was enough in So. Braintree to supply the medicinal needs and not because there was any friendship for Mr. Torrey or any thing that could be said against Mr. Leach.

CHAPTER XVIII.

I HAVE seen the same effect when a stone was thrown into a boil of river rapids—an enhancement and marvelous entanglement of swiftness and fury and spread of broken circles which confused the sight at the time and the memory afterward.

It was but a small body of horse and foot which charged us whilst we were cutting the tobacco on the plantation of Laurel Creek, but it needed not a large one to put to rout a company so overbalanced by enthusiasm and cider and that marvelous greed of destruction. No more than seven gentlemen of us there were to make a stand, and not more than some twenty-five of the rabble to be depended upon.

As for me, the principal thought in my mind when the militia burst upon us was the safety of Mary Cavendish. Straight to the door of the great house I rushed, and Sir Humphrey Hyde was with me. As for the other gentlemen, they were fighting here and there as they could, Captain Jaynes making efforts to keep the main body of the defenders at his back, but with little avail. I stood against the door of the house, resolved upon but one course—that my dead body should be the threshold over which they crossed to Mary Cavendish. It was but a pitiful resolve, for what could I do single handed, except for the boy Humphrey Hyde, against so many? But it was all, and a man can but give his all.

I knew if the militia were to find Mary and Catherine Cavendish in that house grave harm might come to them, if indeed it came not already without that. So I stood back against the door, which I had previously tried and found fast, and Sir Humphrey was with me. Then came a hush for a moment whilst the magistrate, with Captain Waller and others sitting on their horses around him, read the riot act and bade us all disperse and repair to our homes, and, verily, I wonder if ever there hath been in all the history of England such a farce and mummery as that same riot act, and if ever it were read with much effect when a riot were well under way.

Scarcely time they gave the worthy man to finish, and indeed his voice trembled as if he had the ague, and he seemed shrinking for shelter under his big wig, but they drowned out his last words with hisses. Then there was a wild rush of the rabble and a cry of "Down with the tobacco!" and "A Bacon, a Bacon!" Then the militia charged, and there were the flashes of swords and partisans and the thunder of firearms.

I stood there, feeling like a deserter from the ranks, yet bound to keep the door of Laurel Creek, and I had a pistol in either hand, and so had Sir Humphrey Hyde, but for a minute nobody seemed to heed us. Then as I stood there I felt the door behind me yield a bit, and a hand was thrust out, and a voice whispered: "Harry, Harry, come in hither. We can hold the house against an army."

My heart leapt, for it was Mary, and quicker than a flash I had my mind made up. I turned upon Sir Humphrey and thrust him in before he knew it through the opening of the door and called out to him to bar and bolt as best he could inside while I held the door. He, whether he would or not, was in the house and, seeing some of the soldiers riding our way with Captain Waller at their head, was forced to clap to the door and shoot the bolts, but as he did so I heard a woman's shrill cry of agony ring out.

I stood there, and Captain Waller rode up with his soldiers and, flashing his sword before my face like a streak of fire, bade me surrender in the name of his majesty and stand aside. But I stood still with my two pistols leveled and had him full within range. Captain Waller was a young man and a brave one, and never to my dying day shall I forget that face which I had the power to still with death. He looked into the muzzles of my two pistols, and his rosy color never wavered, and he shouted out again to me his command to surrender and stand aside in the name of the king, and I stood still and made no reply. I knew that I could take two lives and then struggle unarmed for perhaps a moment's space and that all the time saved might be precious for those in the house. At all events, it was all that I could do for Mary Cavendish.

I held my pistols and watched his eyes, knowing well that all action, through having its source in the brain of man, gives first evidence in the eyes. Then the time came when I saw his impulse to charge start in his eyes, and I fired, and he fell. Then I fired again, but wildly, for everything was in motion, and I know not whom I hit if any one. Then I felt my own right leg sink under me, and I knew that I was hit. Then down on my knees I sank and put one arm through the great latch of the door, and thrust out with my knife with the free hand, and stout arms were at my shoulders striving to drag me away, but they might as well for a time have tried to drag a bar of steel from its fastenings.

I thrust out here and there, and I trow my steel drew blood, and I suppose my own flowed, for presently I was kneeling in a widening circle of red. I cut those forcing hands from my arm, and others came. It was one against a multitude, for the rabble, after hitting wild blows as often at their friends as at their enemies, had broken and fled, except those who were taken prisoners. But the women stayed until the last and fought like wildcats, with the exception of Madam Tabitha Story, who quietly got upon her old horse and ambled away, and cut down her own tobacco until daybreak, pressing her slaves into service.

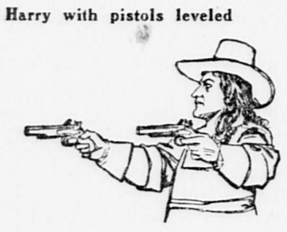

As for the other gentlemen, they were fighting as best they could, and all the time striving vainly to gather the mob into a firm body of resistance. None of them saw the plight I was in, nor indeed could have helped me had they done so, since there were but seven gentlemen of us in all, and some by this time wounded, and one dead.

I knelt there upon the ground before the door, slashing out as best I could with one hand, and they closed faster and thicker upon me, and at last I could no more. I felt a stinging pain in my right shoulder, and then for a minute my senses left me. But it was only for a moment.

When I came to myself I was lying bound, with a soldier standing guard over me, though there was small need of it, and they were raining battering blows upon the door of Laurel Creek. Somehow they had conceived the idea that there was something of great import therein by my mad and desperate defense. I know not what they thought, but gradually all the militia were centered at that point, striving to force the door. As for the shutters, they were heavily barred and offered no easier entrance. Indeed, the whole house had been strengthened for defense against the Indians before the Bacon uprising and was near as strong as a fort. It would have been well had we all entered and defended it, though we could not have held out for long, through not being provisioned.

At last Captain Jaynes and the other gentlemen began to conceive the situation, and I caught sight of them forcing their way toward me and shouted to them with a falling voice, for I had lost much blood, to come nearer and assist me to hold the door. Then I saw Captain Jaynes sink in his saddle, and

Harry with pistols leveled

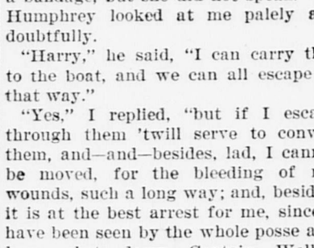

I caught a glimpse of a mighty retreat of plunging haunches of Parson Downs' horse, and indeed the gist of the blame for it all was afterward put upon the parson's great fiery horse, which it was claimed had run away with him first into the fight, then away from it, such foolish reasons do men love to give for the lapses of the clergy.

However, to do the parson justice, he did not fly until he saw the day was lost, and, I trow, did afterward better service to me than he might have done by staying. As for the burgesses, I know not whither nor when they had gone, for they had melted away like shadows by reason of the great obloquy which would have attached to them should men in their high office have been discovered in such work. Ralph Drake was left, who made a push toward me with a hoarse shout, and then he fell, though not severely wounded, and then the soldiers pressed closer. And then I felt again the door yield at my back, and before I knew it I was dragged inside, and, in spite of the pressure of the mob, the door was pushed to with incredible swiftness by Humphrey Hyde's great strength and the bolt shot.

There I lay on the floor of the hall well nigh spent, and Mary Cavendish was chafing my hands, bandaging my wounds with some linen got I knew not whence, and Catherine was there, and all the time the great battering blows upon the door were kept up, and also on the window shutters, and the door began to shake.

Then I remembered something. There was behind the house a creek which was dry in midsummer, but often, as now, in springtime, swollen with rains, and of sufficient depth and force to float a boat. And when it was possible it had been the custom to send stores of tobacco for lading on shipboard to England by this short cut of the creek,

Harry beseeches Sir Humphrey to save Mary which discharged itself into the river below, and there was for that purpose a great boat in the cellar, and also a door and a little landing.

I, remembering this, whispered to Mary Cavendish with all the strength which I could muster.

"For God's sake," I cried, "go you to the cellar—the boat—the creek!"

But Mary looked at me, and I can see her face now.

"Think you I did not know of that way?" she said. "And you think I would leave you here to die? No, let them come in and do their worst."

Then I turned to Sir Humphrey Hyde. "For God's sake, lad," I cried, "if you love her, save her! Only a moment and they will be in here. Hear the door tremble, and then 'twill be arrest and imprisonment, and—I tell thee, lad, leave me and save them."

"They can do as they choose," cried Mary. Then she turned to Sir Humphrey. "Take Catherine, and she will show you the way out by the creek," she said. "As for me, I remain here."

Catherine bent over me and tightened a bandage, but she did not speak. Sir Humphrey looked at me palely and doubtfully.

"Harry," he said, "I can carry thee to the boat, and we can all escape in that way."

"Yes," I replied, "but if I escape through them 'twill serve to convict them, and—and—besides, lad, I cannot be moved, for the bleeding of my wounds, such a long way; and, besides, it is at the best arrest for me, since I have been seen by the whole posse and have shot down Captain Waller. Whither could I fly, pray? Not back to England. Me they will take in custody in any case, and they will not shoot a wounded captive. My life is safe for the time being. Humphrey"—With that I beckoned him to lean over me, which he did, putting his ear close. "Seize Mary by force and bear her away, lad," I whispered; "down cellar to the boat. Catherine will show thee the way."

"I cannot, Harry," he whispered back, and as I live the tears were in the boy's eyes. "I cannot leave thee, Harry."

"You must. There is no other way if you would save her," I whispered back. "And what good can you do by staying? The four of us will be taken, for you can do nothing for me single handed. Captain Jaynes is killed—I saw him fall—and the parson has fled, and—and—I know not where be the others. For God's sake, lad, save her!"

Then Sir Humphrey, with such a look at me as I never forgot, but have always loved him for, with no more ado turned upon Mary Cavendish and caught her, pinioning both arms, and lifted her as if she had been an infant, and Catherine would have gone to her rescue, but I caught at her hand, which was still at work on my bandage.

"Go you with them and show the way to the boat," I whispered. She set her mouth hard and looked at me. "I will not leave thee," she said.

"If you go not, then they will be lost!" I cried out in desperation. For Mary was shrieking that she would not go, and I knew that Humphrey did not know the way and could not find it and launch the boat in time with that struggling maid to encumber him, for already the door trembled as if to fall.

"I tell you they will not harm a wounded man," I cried. "If you leave me, I am in no more worse case than now, and if you remain, think of your sister. You know what she hath done to abet the rebellion. 'Twill all come out if she be found here. Oh, Catherine, if you love her, I pray thee, go."

Then Catherine Cavendish did something which I did not understand at the time and perhaps never understood rightly. Close over me she bent, and her soft hair fell over my face and hers, hiding them, and she kissed me on my forehead, and she said low, but quite clearly, "Whatever thou hast done in the past, my scorn henceforth shall be for the deed, not for thee, for thou art a man."

Then to her feet she sprang and caught hold of Mary's struggling right arm, though it might as well have struggled in a vise as in Sir Humphrey Hyde's reluctant but mighty grasp.

"Mary," she said, "listen to me. 'Tis the best way to save him, to leave him."

Then Mary rolled her piteous blue eyes at her over Sir Humphrey's shoulder from her gold tangle of hair.

"What mean you?" she cried. "I tell you, Catherine, I will never leave him!"

"If we remain we shall all be in custody," replied Catherine in her clear voice, though her face was white as if she were dead, "and our estates may be forfeited, and we have no power to help him. And he must be taken in the end in any case. And if we be free we can save him."

"I will not go without him!" cried Mary. "Set me down, Humphrey, and take up Harry, and I will help thee carry him. Do as I tell thee, Humphrey."

"Harry will be taken in any case," replied Catherine, "and if you take him you will be arrested with him, and then we can do nothing for him. I tell thee, sweet, the only way to save him is to leave him."

Then Mary gave one look at me.

"Harry, is this the truth they tell me?" she cried.

"As God is my witness, dear child," I replied. Then she twisted her white face around toward Sir Humphrey's, who stood pinioning her arms with a look himself as if he were dying.

"Let me loose, Humphrey," she said, "let me loose. Then I swear I will go with you and Catherine."

Then Sir Humphrey loosed her, and straight to me she came and bent over me and kissed me. "Harry," she said in a whisper which was of that strange quality that it seemed to be unable to be heard by any in the whole world save us two, though it was clear enough, "I leave thee because thou tellest me that this is the only way to save thee, but I am thine for life and for death, and nothing shall ever come forever between thee and me, not even thine own self, nor the grave, nor all the wideness of life."

Then she rose and turned to Sir Humphrey and Catherine.

"I am ready," said she, and Sir Humphrey gave my hand one last wring and said that he would stand by me. Then they fled, and as I lay there alone I heard their footsteps on the cellar stairs and presently the dip of the boat as she was launched, and heard it above all the din outside, so keen were my ears for aught that concerned her.

Then that sound and all others grew dim, for I was near swooning, and when the door fell with a mighty crash near me it might have been the fall of a rose leaf on velvet, and I had small heed of the fierce faces which bent over me, yet the hands extended toward my wounds were tender enough. And I saw as in a dream Captain Robert Waller, with his arm tied up, and wondered dimly if we were both dead, for I verily believed that I had killed him and I heard him say, and his voice sounded as if a sea rolled between us: "'Tis the convict tutor, Wingfield, who held the door, and unless I be much mistaken he hath his death wound. Make a litter and lift him gently, and five of you search the house for what ever other rebels be hid herein."

And as I live, in the midst of my faintness, which made all sounds far away as from beyond the boundary of the flesh and beyond the din of battle, which was still going on, though feebly, like a fire burning to its close, I heard the dip of oars on the creek and knew that Mary Cavendish was safe.

A litter they fashioned from a lid of a chest while the search was going on, and I was lifted upon it with due regard to my wounds, which I thought a generous thing of Captain Waller.

But when I was on the litter, breathing hard, yet with some consciousness

Captain Noel Jaynes lay dead

he bent close over me and whispered: "Sir, your wounds are bound up with strips torn from a woman's linen. I have a wife, and I know. Who was in hiding here, sir?"

My eyes flew wide open at that.

"No one," I gasped out. "No one as I live."

But he laughed, and bending still lower, whispered: "Have no fear as to that, Master Wingfield. Convict or not, you are a brave man, and that which you perchance gave your life to hide shall be hidden for all Robert Waller."

So saying he gave the order to carry me forth with as little jolting as might be and stationed himself at my side lest I come to harm from some over zealous soldier.

The grounds of Laurel Creek and the tobacco fields were a most lamentable sight, though I seemed to see every thing as through a mist. Here and there one lay sprawled with limbs curled like a dead spider or else flung out at a stiff length of agony. And Captain Noel Jaynes lay dead with better look on his gaunt old face in death than in life.

In truth Captain Noel Jaynes might almost have been taken for a good man as he lay there dead. And the outlaw who lived next door to Margery Key was doubled up where he fell in a sulky heap of death, and by his side wept his shrewish wife, shrilly lamenting as if she were scolding rather than grieving, and I trow in the midst of it all the thought passed through my mind that it was well for that man that he was past hearing, for it seemed as if she took him to task for having died.

Of Dick Barry was no sign to be seen, but Nick lay not dead, but dead drunk, and over him was crouched one of those black women with a knife in her hand, and no one molested her, thinking him dead, and she was wounded herself, with the blood trickling from her head, unable to carry him from the field as she had brought him.

WHY?

Some Questions That Answer Themselves.

[Written by Walter J. Ballard.]

Why does Democracy rage and its people imagine a vain thing (Parker's election)?

Why do the Democrats hope to accomplish any good for the country while their congressmen and senators are not committed to cling to the gilded plank which their presidential candidate threw out as a life preserver as soon as he discovered the unseaworthiness of the Democratic ship?

Why do the Democrats complain that our export business is not increasing fast enough and at the same time object to our building a navy sufficient to protect the foreign trade we already have?

Why do the Democrats seek, as their platform states, to so reduce our brave army that it would be hard to suddenly turn out a trained "corporal's guard" in time of need?

Why do the Democrats find fault with the Republican policy of caring, to the fullest possible extent, for the men and those dependent on them who fought for the honor of their country's flag?

Why do the Democrats always fight among themselves when any grave issue is before the country, as now?

Why do the Democrats imagine they could handle the national finances better than do the Republicans when the ledger of the country shows that their last four years' try at that big job resulted in adding $262,000,000 to our bonded debt simply to pay ordinary running expenses?

Why do the Democrats fail to see that the want of business confidence which would follow the election of their untried candidate would result in a worse paralyzation of American industries than that which followed the election of their tried candidate in 1892?

Why do the Democrats in their platform set themselves up as economizers of the national finances when in their last four years of control they had in a time of peace to go in debt $262,000,000 to square their cash account?

Why do the Democrats prate in their platform about the "Jeffersonian simplicity of living" when it is a well known fact that Mr. Jefferson was an aristocrat and lived as well and as expensively as did any prominent man of his day?

Why do the Democrats insist in their latest platform for "liberty of personal contract" when the silver plank, still in force, of their two preceding presidential platforms sought in effect to destroy the "liberty of personal contract" by making it illegal for a personal contract to be made payable in gold?

Why do the Democrats in their latest platform demand the "sacred fulfillment of public and private obligations" when by reason of the absence of a gold money plank in that platform their representatives in congress, bound by the free silver plank of the two preceding platforms, could justly, from a party standpoint, seek the enactment of a law covering that plank, and that law, if passed, would destroy the "sacred fulfillment" business by enabling a debtor to pay in dollars worth 50 cents or less a contract for which he had received full value in 100 cent gold dollars?

Why do the Democrats falsely denounce the Republican party as playing into the hands of the so called trusts and they put forward a presidential candidate backed by Wall street and a vice presidential candidate who has become enormously wealthy through the profits of so called trusts?

Why do the Democrats say in their platform (so called) that "protection is a robbery" and in the same paragraph carefully refrain from proposing its abolition or even any drastic changes in the tariff?

Why do the Democrats shout aloud that Roosevelt was "imperialistic" in acquiring what the people wanted—the rights and property of the Panama canal—in face of the fact that the Democratic senators who tried to block the way were by many southern mass meetings called off from further opposition?

Why do the Democrats expect the intelligent voters to cast their ballots for a party whose platform is a series of negations and contradictions from the first word to the last?

Why do the Democrats indulge in such a pipe dream as the thought that the people of the United States want to put that party out of power whose policy enabled the country to export $578,000,000 worth of goods more in 1904 fiscal year than in even the very best Democratic year?

Why do the Democrats fondly indulge in the illusory fancy that with a candidate of no political record and of no positive opinions they can come within a million votes of defeating that American American, Theodore Roosevelt?

Radical Disaffection.

[From the New York Times.]

The returns from Arkansas show a falling off of the Democratic vote in that state which is hardly to be accounted for wholly by local disaffection. It is probable that the so called "radicals" who were disappointed at the national convention and whom Mr. Bryan claimed to represent have expressed their disappointment and resentment by staying at home. That would be likely to lead in November to their voting the Populist ticket.

The Democratic Vaudeville.

[From the Caledonia Advertiser.]

"Our policy is continuous," said President Roosevelt in his speech of acceptance. The Democrats follow the plan of the vaudeville managers and present a new policy at each appearance.

How Balfour Regards Story of the Russian Admiral

PHANTOM TORPEDO BOATS

Premier Enters Emphatic Protest Against Allowing Rojestvensky to Proceed Unscathed Through Commercial Channels

Southampton, Eng., Oct. 29.—Premier Balfour addressed an immense meeting in Artillery hall last night. His appearance on the platform was the signal for a great cheering, which was again and again renewed. The Marquis of Winchester presided. Mr. Balfour said:

"By no will of mine this great assemblage coincides with a moment of national difficulty. Since the assembly was arranged events have happened which have stirred to the depths every section and every class of the community, every subject of his majesty and the conscience of the English-speaking peoples of the world, as well as the general sentiments of civilized Europe."

Continuing, Mr. Balfour said he believed the lamentable and deplorable tragedy of Oct. 21-22 would not end in war. The matter had been referred to an international commission. There would also be a Board of Trade inquiry with, he hoped, the assistance of representatives of the Russian government. Consequently, so far as he was able to see into the future, the result would not be one of those great, national struggles which, though they might occasionally be necessary, always left behind a deplorable mark and always retarded the progress of humanity and civilization.

The report of the North sea incident in the first instance was received with universal horror, indignation and surprise by the whole civilized world. Two stories had been put before them, as a result of which this matter was to be made the subject of impartial, international inquiry, although it was impossible to doubt which of the stories was true. As the ally of Japan Great Britain was bound to assist Japan, but as they should make it a point of honor to use their whole national power in fulfilling this obligation, it was also a point of honor that their duty as neutrals should be scrupulously performed.

The premier said it was incredible that a fishing fleet could be engaged in hostile operations and ridiculed the idea of a torpedo boat attack. The Russian fleet was 30 miles out of its course and it was absurd to suppose that the commander of the alleged torpedo craft would choose a position for attacking the Russian fleet in the centre of a fishing fleet. The premier expressed disbelief in the existence of these Japanese ships and said the nearest Japanese warship was 14,000 miles away. Such a story as that told by the Russian admiral was the purest fancy.

The premier hoped the truth would be made manifest when the inquiry took place. The Russian government had not at any time underrated the gravity of the crisis or failed to do what it could to diminish it. At the same time recklessness or indifference to cruelty ought to be avoided by every man who had the interests of civilization or his own conscience at heart. It could not for a moment be supposed that throughout all the channels of commerce from St. Petersburg to Vladivostok and the narrow ways of commerce, like the English channel and the Red sea, an admiral of another power should be allowed to pass under such circumstances unscathed, unchallenged and unpunished after such a deed as that of the night of Oct. 21. It would be a position which it would be impossible for Great Britain as a neutral to tolerate. Hence the Russian government had promised to make an inquiry and had ordered the detention of part of the Russian squadron at Vigo.

The Russian version of the occurrence of the night of Oct. 21 was equivalent to an attack on Great Britain's national honor. The torpedo boats spoken of by the Russian admiral were phantom ships—creatures of pure fancy—against which Mr. Balfour entered a most emphatic protest. He was glad to say that the Russian government had agreed with Great Britain concerning the necessity for an investigation. The responsible officers would not be permitted to proceed to the far east and the persons found guilty would be adequately punished. In agreeing to these things, Russia had taken the view which commended itself to other civilized nations. Russia had given a pledge that she would prevent a recurrence of the tragedy which filled all hearts with sorrow and the hearts of most men with indignation.

The Russian ambassador had authorized the statement that the Russian government, on hearing of the North sea incident, at once expressed profound regret and the Russian emperor telegraphed to the king in similar terms. The Russian government had also promised the most liberal compensation and had shown a desire that truth and justice in this matter should prevail. The entire facts must be brought out at the investigation which, Mr. Balfour pointed out, would be made by three distinct bodies—first, by the international commission; second, by the board of trade inquiry, and third, by the coroner's inquest.

"I hope I have said nothing which can in the smallest degree impair international relations, and though I have spoken under a heavy sense of responsibility and under considerable difficulties, I do think the events of the last few days, though they can never wipe out the tragic occurrence of last Friday, will not bring in their train any of these widespread calamities which at one time we almost feared they would bring with them.

"I congratulate this country and Russia, Europe and the world, on what I believe will be the result of the last few days' negotiations."

Buttercups And Daisies

By Kate M. Cleary

Copyright, 1904, by Kate M. Cleary

Jocelyn glanced at the tiny clock on her dresser.

"Seven ten!" she said. "I'll have time to answer that letter after I get the dishes washed!"

Her task was accomplished with brisk dexterity. To be sure, there were not many dishes to be washed—one cup, one saucer, one spoon, one plate, one knife, one fork.

"Quite an old maid's outfit!" she said, with a little grimace as she rinsed out the diminutive teapot and set it on the shelf with the china. "Now to tell Ned, dear old Ned, that—that—oh, how would a girl in a story refuse to marry a man that was quite the best fellow she knew, only—only"—

She read Edward Ford's letter through again, as though seeking some suggestion as to the most delicate and decisive manner in which she could decline his proposal.

It was a charming letter—simple, manly and straightforward. He loved her—he had always loved her. She must know that. There never had been another girl for him. There never could or would be while life lasted, whether she made him happy or bade him wait or—or even should she answer no. He had wanted to speak when she came up to work in the city, but had not felt free to do so, having others dependent upon him. But now that his dear mother's sufferings were ended and that his sister had married and possessed a home of her own he was able to follow the dictates of his heart. The old place needed a mistress. It was very beautiful just then, he added. The syringa hedge was white with blossom. You couldn't see the road for the clematis and seven sisters rose across the porch.

The girl, sitting at the window of the lodging house, looked out at the dirty Nottingham lace curtains of the lodging house across the street and then afar over a wilderness of irregular brick walls and smoking chimneys with eyes grown suddenly wistful. How she hated it all! Even if she could keep this fresh and dainty—this tiny room she called her own!

Maplewild! The big, comfortable country house, set back in rich orchard lands! She used to laugh at the quaint, prim, low ceiled rooms, with their air of rigid order, of sedateness. Now she fancied them as a sweet, cool refuge. If there were only some fresh swisses and silkoline draperies around, and magazines and a lot of light, cretonne pillows, what an ideal home it would be! She would do the dining room in yellow, as it was on the north side of the house, and—

The clanging gong of a fire engine passing in the street below startled her from her dream. She straightened up with a little jerk and glanced around the shabby little room, with the crude paper, the aggressive carpet, the cheap pine furniture, and her trunk in the corner. It was here she was going to remain—here. She had no intention of marrying Ned Ford. So she hastily dipped her pen in the ink bottle on the window sill, steadied her portfolio on her knee and began to write:

Dear Ned—I have your letter, and I'm sorry, sorry, so sorry you wrote it! Not that I don't want you to be fond of me. I do. It seems sometimes as if I'm millions of miles away from every one who ever cared a pin for me. But it isn't any use your loving me—that way. Don't think there's any one else. There isn't. Two men have asked me the same question since I've been earning my living in town. But I couldn't care for either the tiniest bit. And I do care for you—only, not in the way I ought to if—

She shot a look at the little clock—jumped to her feet.

"Seven ten, still!"

She grabbed her hat, hastily put it on, adjusted her veil with a glance at the pretty, pale face that looked back at her from the glass with quite a frightened expression, and caught up her gloves.

"Mercy! I must have forgotten to wind the clock. I was so tired last night. I'll be late as sure as fate!"

The cars were crowded, and she had to stand all the way to the store. She was late and was not only docked, but received a reprimand from the head of the department. There was a convention of some sort in town, and the great establishment was thronged with sightseers and shoppers. The heat of the day increased, and what with the close, sultry warmth, the worry over the episode of the morning and the incessant demands upon her attention a splitting headache began to torture the girl. She found it hard to retain her usual calm courtesy of manner when a fashionably dressed woman upon whom she had been waiting announced loudly and with a suspicious glance in her direction that she had missed her pocketbook.

"I had it a moment ago. I just laid it down here!" she explained to the floorwalker who had hurried up. "This young lady was waiting on me!"

"It may have been taken to the lost and found department. If you will come with me, madam."

She reluctantly accompanied him. And when a few minutes later she repassed the counter carrying her reclaimed property the look she sent Jocelyn Duane was as vindictive as though she still harbored doubt of her innocence.

"Pleasant life, this!" the girl murmured. Being independent was not all it was cracked up to be she was deciding when a gentle voice spoke, "Gloves—5¾!"

"Yes, madam! What shade do you pre"—

"Goodness," cried the new customer, "if it isn't Jocelyn Duane!"

A plump little woman, holding a plump little baby, sat beside the counter. The wholesome tan of the country was on her cheek, and the joy of living shone in her soft brown eyes.

"Why, Mary Andrews!" Jocelyn greeted her gladly. "It does seem good to see any one from Maplewild! I heard you were married soon after I left. And this is your child? What a darling!"

"Isn't he!" said the mother proudly. "John thinks there never was such a boy. He came up to the convention, and of course we had to come along. You look awfully stylish, Jocelyn—and pretty. You're prettier than ever. But—my, you're thin!"

"How is every one at Maplewild?" Jocelyn asked hastily, busying herself with the gloves.

"Blooming—all that are left. We've had some deaths, you know. Poor Mrs. Ford is gone. They do say that Ellie Moore would willingly be mistress of Ned's fine old house now"—

"Ellie Moore!" repeated Jocelyn. She flushed hotly. There was a queer ache in her throat. What right had Ellie Moore—or any other girl—

"She's a rich girl—and not bad looking! Tan, please! How queer it seems to be buying gloves from you! Yes, those will do. I must hurry. This young man is getting impatient. I suppose you'll never condescend to come to Maplewild again, Jocelyn?"

Jocelyn laughed in a sudden, breathless, happy fashion.

"Perhaps I shall!" she said.

When she opened the door of her ugly little room that evening a miracle of loveliness met her gaze. In the pitcher on the window sill was an immense bunch of daisies and buttercups—a blaze of snow and gold.

"A splendid looking young gentleman brought them," the maid said when questioned. "He said I was to put them in water in your room. And he left a card with writing on."

Jocelyn's tired face glowed as she read the penciled lines:

I couldn't bear to read your answer. I followed my letter in person. Will call at 8 this evening.

Jocelyn went to her portfolio, took out a half written sheet of note paper and tore it into minute pieces. Then she knelt down by the window and laid her hot cheek against the cool velvet of the flowers. And all the dull, monotonous, dreary present fell away from her. She was not an independent young working woman. She was a happy girl again among the fields at home—loved, admired, protected.

Such magic had they wrought!

And when she dressed herself in her prettiest gown of blue and silver it was a girl with starry eyes and rose red cheeks who smiled proudly back at her from the mirror.

"Ellie Moore," she said—"Ellie Moore, indeed! The very idea!"

She looked so radiant and so lofty when she swept into the parlor that the stalwart young fellow striding across the room to meet her felt his heart sink.

"Jocelyn," he said, "I've come for my answer."

She smiled tenderly and touched the blooms thrust in her belt.

"Oh, Jocelyn!" he whispered, his eyes kindling. "Oh, Jocelyn—dearest!"

The Worst Wind of the World.

"What is the worst wind of the world?" said the captain of a trading ship that pokes her nose in almost every spot of the world during her curious wanderings. "Well, I'll tell you first of other winds, so as to lead up to it artistically. I've been through a Kamchatka, which is what they call the storms of that country, and I've seen it blow drifts fifty feet high in an hour. I put in three days in a typhoon, which is the great-grandfather of all the hurricanes. It blew every sail out of the bolt ropes and swept the deck so clean that it looked as if it had been scraped. Down in St. Vincent, in the West Indies, I lay on the beach during a West Indian hurricane, the black storm that sweeps over the Caribbean, and I had to dig my hands into the earth to hold tight.

"But worse than all these is the wind that they call the woolly, or the willy, or the willy willy, according to locality. You get it at its best in the strait of Magellan, but a great part of the country around the southern end of the south temperate regions enjoys its blessings."—New York Press.

Couldn't Find It.

A young man having evolved what he considered a good joke forwarded it to a comic paper, but received no answer. Desirous of ascertaining the fate of his contribution he sent the editor the following letter:

Sir—I have carefully read your paper for the last month, but fail to find any trace of the joke I sent you on the 5th ult.

In due course he received this reply:

Sir—In reply to your letter, I deeply sympathize with you, for, since I received your MS. on the 5th ult. I have carefully read it several times, but up to date I, too, have failed to find any trace of the joke referred to.

Beecher and the Medium.

While in England Henry Ward Beecher was entertained by a gentleman who believed in spiritualism and was himself a medium. One day he asked if Beecher would like to talk with the spirit of his father, Dr. Lyman Beecher. Mr. Beecher replied that it would please him immensely. After the seance was over he was asked how it had impressed him, at which, with a twinkle in his eye, Beecher responded, "All I have to say is that if I deteriorate as fast for the first ten years after I am dead as my father has I shall be a stark naked fool."

GOOD AFTERNOON.

The political horizon has cleared considerably. The Hon. Peter T. Fallon is not to have a walkover for the Democratic nomination. Ex-Councilman George H. Wilson, who has made two excellent campaigns for Mayor, is not to be sidetracked, but will make a contest for the nomination. Principal Assessor Thompson has come out squarely with the statement that he has made no promises to City Hall officials, but, if the Republican party wants him he will accept a nomination. Ex-City Solicitor McAnarney is in much the same position, and whoever is elected it is probable that there will be some changes in department officials at City Hall.

It is now for each party to select its candidate, and it is not easy to predict the result of the caucuses. Will the Democrats nominate Wilson or Fallon? Will the Republicans nominate Thompson or McAnarney?.

As a City Hall candidate it is probable that either Republican would be defeated on election day by either of the Democrats, as there would be sufficient bolters who would vote with the Democrats. But with the City Hall feature eliminated, the vote will be more on party lines with good prospects of the election of the regular Republican nominee, be it Mr. McAnarney or Mr. Thompson.

The Republicans are fortunate in having two such good candidates, as both are successful in their private business and are not without experience in city affairs. Mr. Thompson is a member of the present city government, and has been a Councilman and president of the City Council. A few years ago Mr. Thompson was also a member of the Legislature and served one year or more on the committee on Ways and Means. Mr. McAnarney is an ex-City Solicitor, a position which gives one a good insight into the workings of city governments. He has had large experience with the granite industry as a lawyer, while Mr. Thompson is a granite manufacturer.

Messrs. Fallon and Wilson have both demonstrated their strength as vote-getters, but on each occasion they have profited by Republican dissensions.

The total vote at the City election will probably be considerably larger than was ever cast in Quincy, because of the fact that it is Presidential year, and because of the large increase in registration.

Every one who attended the Quincy Historical society reception on Tuesday afternoon at the birthplaces of presidents John and John Quincy Adams were much pleased. It was a most delightful and informal affair, calling together representative people of Quincy and vicinity. Every year the two old Adams houses grow dearer and dearer to Old Braintree, and their preservation is now a certainty.

Dana J. Flanders, the successful general passenger agent of the Boston & Maine R. R., was on Thursday elected grand commander of the Knights Templar of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Wonder if he will take them all "Down East?" Many are waiting for the call from labor.

Drift of Opinion.

☞ Firemen used to complain of bicyclists running to fires on an alarm and jeopardizing their own lives, and those of the men of the department. With the subsidence of the bicycle craze, the trouble has almost entirely ceased. Now the auto car is making trouble. Monday night Chief Goodhue, of the Beverly Fire Department, was driving to a fire, and just ahead of him were two auto cars which raised so much dust the Chief could not see his way, and he ran into a grocery team, and had a narrow escape from serious injury. It is hard for some people to realize that the firemen have the right of way when an alarm is given.—Lynn Item.

NEW TIMETABLE.

Changes for Nearly Every Train.

To Leave Boston a Minute Earlier.

Two Expresses Dropped and But One Added.

A new timetable will be in effect Sunday on the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., and it will be one of the greatest changes that has taken place in Quincy weekday trains for some time. Only seven of the trains for Boston will run at the same time as at present, and the changes in trains from Boston will be equally numerous.

Most of the trains from Boston will leave one minute earlier but will arrive at Quincy at the same time as at present, requiring 22 minutes for the running time. That is they will leave at 27 minutes past the hour, and arrive at 11 minutes of the hour.

Those who have found the 6.13 A. M. from Boston a little early may now leave at 6.27. The 12.45 P. M. express has been dropped. Instead of the 3.45 P. M. train there will be one at 4.12. The 4.45 will leave at 4.50. The 5.15 will make two less stops and arrive two minutes earlier.

Concerning the inward week day trains, the 7.23 A. M. train will leave at 7.26 and the 7.29 express will be dropped. There will be a new express at 10.01 A. M., to accommodate those having cases in the Quincy court, which will make the run in sixteen minutes. There are several other minor changes which should be noted in the Ledger timetable.

Sudden Death at Braintree.

Charles H. Thayer a citizen of South Braintree passed away suddenly at his home, the Hampton house, Thursday night, at 11.40 from an attack of neuralgia of the heart. He was the son of Henry and Angelina Thayer born in Randolph, October, 10, 1845. He was a resident of Randolph, about forty-two years, of Brockton, sixteen years, and South Braintree one year.

In 1870 he was married to Miss Charlotte A: English of Randolph, who with a son Howard Thayer of Quincy, a daughter Mrs. H. E. Fuller of Brockton, three grand-children, and one sister survive him. In 1861, at the age of sixteen years he joined the Fourth regiment, Company D, as a drummer boy.

Mr. Thayer comes from a family of musicians and was for several years a member of the Randolph band. He was a leather cutter by trade and employed at the D. B. Closson shoe factory. He was always an honest man in every respect and liked by all who knew him.

Mr. Thayer was a member of Rising Star lodge I. O. O. F. of Randolph, Odd Fellows Death Benefit and Relief Association of Brockton.

Funeral services will be held from the Randolph Baptist church, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Many Floral Tributes.

The funeral of Mary Veronica Burns, daughter of Mrs. Annie M. Burns, was held Wednesday, the burial being in St. Mary's cemetery.

There was a profusion of flowers, including the following:

Wreath, from Mother.
White pinks, from Grandmother.
Chrysanthemums, from Mr. and Mrs. Angier.
Basket of flowers, from Otis and sister.
Basket of flowers, from a friend.
Red and white pinks, from Burns boy.
White pinks, from friend Bessie.
Bouquet of roses, from Mrs. White.
Bouquet of mixed pinks, from Mrs. Mullany.
Bouquet of pinks, from Mrs. Coyle.
Bouquet of asters, from a friend.
Bouquet of roses and pinks, from a friend.

Quick Verdict.

A Portsmouth item in the Herald says: John O'Neil, claiming Quincy, Mass., as his home, was tried before a jury Thursday afternoon, charged with breaking and entering the house of Charles Blaisdell on Maplewood avenue. The jury were out just three minutes when they brought in a verdict of guilty. He will be sentenced later.

Those who are fond of Baker's chocolate will be interested to know that the grand prize for superiority of cocoa and chocolate at the World's fair was awarded to Walter Baker & Co. This makes forty-three awards the firm has received from the great expositions of Europe and America.

The Second Night.

The Wollaston Yacht club had favorable weather for the second night of the grand fair last evening, and there was a large attendance, mostly from Wollaston, the Park and Downs, but some from Quincy, Atlantic and Boston.

There is a pretty display of salable articles at the fair ranging from alarm clocks to violets. The hall and tables, of which there are ten, are decorated with purple and green crepe paper arranged in loop-trimming from the centre of the ceiling, and curling across the booths in twisted folds. All the donations were well chosen and reasonable in price. There was a bright variety entertainment which captivated the young folk. A large attendance made the prospects appear as if the financial end would be satisfactory.

Surprise Party.

Miss Emma R. McDonald was pleasantly surprised at her home, 31 Bridge street, last evening, by a party of young friends.

Shortly after their arrival Miss Lucy Barry presented Miss McDonald with a turquoise ring as a token of the high esteem in which she is held.

The musical part of the program was furnished by the Misses Bessie Mahoney, Eva Hubert, Sadie McAuliff, Nina Bates and Mr. John Finlay.

During the evening a light collation was served.

Among those present were: Misses Ethel Sanginet, Louise McLaughlin, Rosabel Kelly, Nina Bates, Teresa Connelly, Sara Harkins, Ethel Elcock, Eva Hubert, Sadie McAuliff, Katharine Taylor, Julia Sullivan, Loretta McDonnell, Lucy Barry, Bessie Mahoney, May Ford, Louise Driscoll, Ida Rennie.

Roy Cobb, Henry Sullivan, Robert Mitchell, John Finlay, Lawrence Pratt, James Robie, William Morrison, Charles Haggerty, Henry McDonnell, Joseph Driscoll, Victor Malcolm, Joseph Rooney, Theodore Muer, Richard Simmons.

Showered with Gifts.

Miss Minnie M. Jameson of this city completed her duties as instructor of music in the public schools at Plymouth, on Thursday, when her resignation took effect. During the day she was presented by different grades at the grammar schools with silver ware, flowers and other gifts. At the High school Miss Jameson was presented with a rich tea cloth of Mexican work and a beautiful cut glass cracker plate. In the evening she was tendered a reception by the teachers of the public schools of Plymouth, who presented her a case of solid silver. There was universal regret at the resignation of Miss Jameson, who was a success as a teacher of music and a friend of all.

Needle Work Guild.

The Quincy branch of the Needle Work Guild of America holds its annual meeting, Thursday, November the third, at the home of its president, Miss Abby B. Wood. It is earnestly requested that all members send in their garments not later than October the thirtieth. The needle work guild of America was organized in Philadelphia, April, 1885; and was modelled after a society in England by Lady Wolverton. It is non-sectarian. The object of the guild is to furnish new suitable garments to meet the needs of hospitals, homes, and other charities. Our Quincy branch, last year, collected three hundred and eighty-eight garments and distributed them as needed. It is desirous that this branch be extended; and that all parts of Quincy take hold of the work which provides so many people with warm, comfortable clothing for the winter.

Thayer Academy Reunion.

A reunion of the former pupils will be held at Hotel Brunswick, Boston, corner of Boylston and Clarendon streets, on Friday, Nov. 18, 1904, from five to nine o'clock P. M. Reception at five; collation at six; addresses at seven. Tickets can be procured at the hotel that evening, $1.25 for each person. Mr. Asa Palmer French will preside. Secretary Long, Prof. Sewall and Mr. Gardiner, of the Board of Trustees, will be present.

The Engineers' Ball.

The second annual ball of the Steam Engineers local 79 was held last evening at Quincy Music hall. The affair was largely attended and a good sum will be netted for the relief fund. Fiske's orchestra gave a promenade concert from 8 to 9 o'clock and also furnished music for the dancing which continued until 4 o'clock in the morning.

West Quincy Fire.

The alarm from Box 46 at 5.55 last evening was for a slight fire in the grocery store of James McDonnell on Copeland street. The fire was caused by a hanging lamp setting fire to the wood work. The damage was slight.

An Express Load.

An express load of liquor that had been seized by the police from various places in Quincy and forfeited by the court, was turned over to the State yesterday.

Tonight is the last chance to attend the yacht club fair. Don't miss it. Old fashioned baked bean supper and everything that goes with it.

Owing to the repairs at the Unitarian chapel, the meeting of the Fragment society on Wednesday will be held with Mrs. J. H. Emery of Adams street at 2 P. M.

The Democrats announce a grand rally to take place in Quincy Music hall next Tuesday evening. Thomas J. Gargan, Charles S. Hamlin and others will be the speakers.

Mrs. Henry C. Rodgers of Edwards street, who has been ill for several months, was able to get out doors for a little while on Friday. Her friends are now hoping for a speedy recovery.

"The call of young Japan" is the subject of an interesting program prepared for a Sunday school concert at Bethany Congregational church Sunday evening at 7.30. Everyone is invited.

The funeral of Hon. William A. Hodges will be held on Sunday at 2.30 P. M. from the Unitarian church. It will be a simply service, and none of the organizations to which he belonged will attend in a body.

The First Church Social club course of entertainments begin Friday evening, Nov. 25th, with a dance at Faxon hall. There are to be seven evenings this season, three dances, a pop concert, two entertainments and a children's party.

The ladies of the Quincy Day Nursery association are to hold a rummage sale about the middle of November to raise money to carry on the work of the nursery. Housekeepers are asked to set by things for the sale. Articles of any kind will be accepted with thanks. The ladies say they will take anything big or little.

The cantata Ruth is to be given in Bethany church early in December by the King's Daughters, with Mr. Arthur Raymond of Weymouth conductor and Mrs. Harriet R. Morgan, Miss Sara Belle Huff and Mr. Charles Delmont as soloists. There will be seventy voices in the chorus with organ and piano accompaniment. It will certainly be one of the finest production ever given in Quincy.

Braintree Chief Surprised.

The home of Braintree's gallant fire-fighter in the east part of the town was the scene of much gayety and hand-shaking on Monday evening of this week it being the forty-eighth anniversary of the chief's birth, an occasion which invariably arouses much enthusiasm in the hearts of his friends. At eight o'clock the Hose and Hook & Ladder companies formed at the fire station and marched to the home of Mr. Whitmarsh. About fifty were present including the fire companies.

After the many congratulations were disposed of the guests were ushered to the dining room where an elegantly prepared collation was served after which Mr. and Mrs. Whitmarsh were led into the kitchen where a grand Magee range had been set up as a gift for them. It took the chief so by surprise that it was some time before he could respond which he did in a few well chosen words.

The evening was passed with music and speechmaking and at a reasonable hour the host and hostess were given a parting salute by the guests who then went merrily homeward.

ECHOES FROM THE WAR

A Russian View of the Enemy's Fighting Tactics.

RECOVERY OF WOUNDED JAPANESE

Remarkable Display of Nerve by the Soldiers When Under Treatment. An Incident of the Battle of Liaoyang—Horrors of the Conflict—Russian Volunteers.

Yes, we were greatly mistaken when we called them "little Japs." We have never before had to deal with such skillful opponents, says the Russkoye Slovo. They have included in their tactics all modern methods, strictly adapting them to their own national peculiarities. For instance, knowing the weakness of their cavalry, they never allow it to go out unsupported. There is always infantry behind it, and our cavalry often runs against it, not expecting its presence.

The Japanese reconnoissance is effected thus: A compact force of riflemen marches, sustained by screens, and patrols move about five versts ahead. At a distance of three versts the scouts are preceded by a number of Chinese. These last come to the Russian lines, examine the camp and make signals to the Japanese concerning the whereabouts of the cavalry patrols. As the country is mountainous, they advance at the rate of seven versts a day, intrenching and fortifying every step they take. Their path is an uninterrupted row of fortifications. Knowing the excitable, impressionable temper of their soldiers, they never pursue the enemy before settling down in good order upon the position occupied, because during a pursuit troops often become disarranged. Judging by their operations, one could imagine they are the most phlegmatic and methodical people in the world—so strong in their military education and their knowledge of the art of war. They very reasonably avoid the bayonet. Their leading ranks run away to the right and left, opening the front for the fire of the succeeding lines. Running round these to the rear, they again form their ranks, thus taking the place of reserves.

If the troops uncovered are unable to stop our attack by fire they repeat the maneuver. What self control, what discipline, are required in order to do this, and what a consciousness of strength! When they are on the march it is all but impossible for them to meet with any surprises. In addition to the men detached for guard, they surround their columns by chains of scouts, who advance along the crests of the elevations. Movement under such conditions may be slow, but it is sure.

One of the most interesting points brought out in the present war is the way the Japanese wounded heal, says Will Levington Comfort, the correspondent of the Chicago News in Japan. A dispatch from Tokyo states that there are 45,000 wounded now under care in the various Japanese hospitals and that the results of treatment are most gratifying. This can readily be believed. The writer returned from Manchuria to Moji, a port of southern Japan, last May as the wounded were being brought in from the battle of the Yalu and passed some time in the Japanese hospitals. The way the soldiers bore up under wounds and recovered was astounding. Patients with fresh bullet holes through their breasts tumbled out of their cots to be examined standing. There were no screams of pain. One could not avoid the conclusion that a wound capable of racking white flesh with the extremist torture merely itched the Japanese.

Operations and blood poison cases are hardly known. I saw a soldier who has been shot through the left eye, the bullet emerging from the base of the brain, stand before the surgeon and relate in a low, monotonous voice how it all came about. Meanwhile the surgeon was removing the tightly adhering lint from the wound with the carelessness of one who is tearing plaster from a statue. There was no softening with hot water, but the patient didn't mind. Great rents in the brown flesh from lance and saber thrusts drew together and knitted by first intention, almost under the eye. Watch a severed earthworm unconcernedly working out its unity, and you have a parallel of healing.

John F. Bass, writing to the Chicago News from Yokohama, relates the following incident of the battle of Liaoyang:

"A correspondent saw a wide circle of Japanese soldiers on the morning of Sept. 4 intent on some object. Pushing forward, he tried to enter the ring. A soldier seized him violently by the arm and threw him back with a stern exclamation. Just then a shot came as if from the ground. A soldier who spoke English explained: 'There are Russian soldiers in a cave, and they will not surrender. Whenever any one attempts to approach the entrance of their retreat a shot comes out.'

"After a time the Japanese got some matting and, throwing it over the mouth of the cave, attempted to smother the occupants into submission. The trick succeeded, for after a time a rifle with a bayonet was shoved up into the air. A soldier got a piece of wire, reached cautiously over, hooked it on to the Russian rifle and drew it to him. In a moment the wild, savage head of a Russian protruded. He stepped out of the hole and stood glaring about him with folded arms. A second rifle was handed out in the same way and then a third and fourth until six Russian soldiers, maddened and grim with battle, stood defiantly side by side glaring first at the Japanese and then at the white man standing in the midst of them. The correspondent snapped his camera. It was the best picture of the war."

A story comes from Moscow which shows pretty clearly the different views that the government and the common people take of the war, says the St. James' Gazette. Two men were out walking when they saw a crowd jostling and shoving, while from within the crowd came loud sobs, cries of pain, oaths and blows. "What on earth is the matter?" said the first man. "Oh," said his companion indifferently, "it is only a government officer forcing a peasant to turn volunteer."

In a letter from a Russian officer read by Rabbi Charles Fleischer of Boston before his audience at the Baptist temple in Philadelphia the other night an account was given of the atrocities practiced by both Japanese and Russians, and it stated that the men, throwing aside their weapons in many cases, choked their Japanese opponents to death.

SONG FOR ANNAPOLIS.

One From Emile Bruguiere's Pen For the Naval Academy.

The United States Naval academy is to have an alma mater song, says the New York Globe. Emile Bruguiere, the composer of "The Baroness Fiddlesticks," has been asked to write it, and the other day the lyrics were submitted to the president of the academy and the admiral of the navy and approved. It is a remarkable fact that ever since the Naval academy was established in 1848 the superb school at Annapolis has had no college song. The song, written at the instigation of John C. Sweeney, is as follows:

ALMA MATER O!

Come, gather round, my classmates, and join our greeting song.
With books we've done, our swords we've won, our hearts beat high and strong.
We've formed the tie, 'twill never die, wherever we may go.
It breathes the old academy, our Alma Mater O!

CHORUS.

Our Alma Mater O! we'll hail thee as we go.
On every sea we'll cherish thee, our Alma Mater O!

Come, join our song, my shipmates from cruisers far and wide.
We've borne the flag on many a ship o'er ocean's boundless tide.
We've seen our arms triumphant where'er the conflict calls;
The trophies of our victories deck our Alma Mater's walls.

Come, comrades all and messmates, raise every seaman's voice.
In Mater's cheer and memory dear let every heart rejoice.
We'll consecrate the quarter deck, the altar of her fires.
In youth, in age, we'll foster there the genius she inspires.

A USE FOR STRAWBERRIES.

Society Women Find Canned Product Good For Cleaning Teeth.

Purveyors to society have been amazed during the last few days at the extraordinary demand for canned strawberries, says the New York Press. Why women able to purchase the untinned fruit direct from hothouses should want the commoner article of commerce was not apparent until one of them learned the canned goods were not eaten. In fact, the tin gets no further than madam's dressing table. Confidentially, the contents are used as a dentifrice.

An enterprising woman discovered last spring strawberries were good for the teeth, not only in whitening and preserving them, but to harden the gums and, of course, sweeten the breath. She made the most of her knowledge and shared it with her friends while the season for the fresh fruit lasted. Then she was about to make arrangements for delivery of strawberries from the hothouses of gentler climes when, on experiment, she found the canned fruit even better for her purpose. She kept her second secret all summer, but her friends wormed it out of her; hence the tremendously increased demand for the tins and the possibility of a rise in price prohibitive to the poor.

Labor Union on Novel Plan.

A unique union has been formed by Louisville (Ky.) carpenters, says a special dispatch from Louisville, Ky. It will be known as Independent Carpenters' Union No. 1. Its objects are:

A union that believes in the open shop.

A union that will have no walking delegates and no members except first class mechanics.

A union whose first object is to prevent strikes and lockouts.

It will be independent of all central organizations and will not affiliate with the international body, but will accept all recommendations made by the Employers' association of Louisville and work in harmony with that body.

King Edward's Latest Title.

At a farewell banquet given the other night to a number of leading French physicians who have been visiting London hospitals, Dr. Sir William Broadbent, physician in ordinary to the king, in toasting his majesty conferred a new title upon him, says a special cable dispatch to the Chicago Tribune. Referring to the king's influence upon international politics, Dr. Broadbent said he had shown himself to be the "lightning conductor of Europe."

Fancy Lights For Mountain Trains.

Locomotives on the Denver and Rio Grande are to be fitted with adjustable electric flashlights by which trains approaching each other on curves in the mountains may give warning by throwing rays into the air, says a Denver dispatch. The lights will be red.

MAKE MR. OLNEY STOP

"Let Real Democrats Do the Talking"—"Plutocratic Has Beens Make Republican Votes."

A New York Democratic Newspaper Prints a Caustic Editorial. Quickly Stifled.

[From the New York Journal, Dem.]

Take Olney off the stump.

Democrats of his type make no votes for the party. Last night in his speech at Cooper Union the former attorney general and later secretary of state under President Cleveland offered a characteristic keynote.

In his argument against imperialism he spoke of "our needless scrimmage with Spain over Cuba," and subsequently referred to "that development of jingoism and militarism which brought on the scrap with Spain."

That is a keynote to which the country will not respond in the way expected by Mr. Olney. It is not Americanism, and certainly it is not Democracy.

The war for the liberation of Cuba had the heart of the people behind it. It was chivalric, unselfish and glorious. Limited and careful gentlemen of the Olney type found themselves incapable of rising to the height of the popular enthusiasm, but whether in or out of office they were swept along with the tide of noble sympathy for an oppressed people. History will record that the United States in expelling Spain from the new world reached a moral eminence quite unparalleled in the action of nations.

We owed nothing to Spain. Her occupation of Cuba had been a continuous crime, as was her whole career in this hemisphere. We had been patient too long. The Virginius infamy should have been the signal for her eviction from this side of the globe. The culmination of her atrocities was the blowing up of the Maine riding at anchor at what was supposed to be a friendly port.

And after that unexampled outrage Olney speaks of our "needless" war with Spain!

No American who is as broad as his country can look back upon the Spanish war without a thrill of pride.

Mr. Olney speaks for a kind of Democrats who are infinitely hurtful to the Democratic party. They seem to be without capacity for entering into the feelings of the people, sharing their patriotic ardors or sympathizing with their national aspirations. He is an able man, no doubt, an excellent lawyer and means well, but he damages Democracy and the candidacy of Judge Parker when he puts himself forward as a spokesman at once of "little Americanism" and the party which is historically that of expansion.

A great people are not to be cribbed, cabined and confined within the cold blooded and petty limitations of the Olney conception of national duty and destiny. The votes of young men, of men of spirit, cannot be won by sneers at one of the loftiest deeds in the nation's life.

Democrats, real Democrats, are not to be deprived of their share in the glory of freeing Cuba. It is to the everlasting honor of the party that through its representatives in congress and in the press—the Evening Journal foremost in the fight—it forced a reluctant administration to declare the war. Had Cleveland been in the White House and Olney in the cabinet we may be quite sure that the heroes of the Maine would have perished in vain and Cuba continued to be a Spanish shambles at our door.

The Democracy has no quarrel with any man who took part as a soldier or civilian in rescuing Cuba, and it is not to be tolerated that the party should be placed in such a position. Theodore Roosevelt, as one who took part in that brief conflict, has reason as a candidate to congratulate himself upon Mr. Olney's presence on the stump. Judge Parker and his managers ought to lose no time in revising the list of campaign speakers and eliminating from it the Olneys, the Clevelands and all other discredited plutocratic, narrow minded and hard hearted Democrats, so called, who are responsible for the apathy among the people of which complaint is made at Democratic headquarters.

How can the workingmen, for example, be expected to grow enthusiastic in a canvass which numbers among its conspicuous orators the attorney general who discovered the sacredness of a Pullman car and a president who ordered troops into Illinois against the protest of her governor for the purpose of crushing a strike?

Olney has spoken for Parker, and it is announced that Cleveland is also to mount the platform. If Judge Parker understands the American public as well as we think he does he will put his foot down and avert that crowning calamity.

Let real Democrats do the talking from now on.

Election Day Is Coming.

[From the New York Press.]

Do honest Republicans approve the appointment of Mr. Cortelyou as chairman of the national Republican committee?—Times.

Well, they will tell you their answer on election day, and it will be so emphatic that it will ring in your ears for the rest of your natural life.

THE EASTERN WAR.

Can the Japanese Finance a Long War?

Editors of the Daily Ledger:

One of the most important topics of the day, and one that is taking the attention of the whole world is: Can Japan finance a long war?

This is a subject that one must concentrate all his thoughts upon, and give a thorough investigation in regard to the financial and also industrial standing of both countries, viz., Russia and Japan.

Some peoples, as history shows us, have shrunk so much from hostilities in the presence of a powerful enemy as to surrender to it their integrity as separate nationalities. They have submitted to wrong and injustice through being either unable or unwilling to defend themselves.

But it is not among such peoples and by such acts of self surrender that the Japanese are to be classed. Japan did not hesitate to assume all the responsibility of a costly, a terrible, and devasting war; nor did she take up arms without fully realizing the difficulties, as well as the duties, which the situation imposed upon her. Japan not unused to conflict in the past, was keenly aware of all the sufferings and sorrows that would result from the operation of her forces in the field. Yet she did not shrink from the great task forced upon her. The moral ends she had in view made it impossible for her to consider the cost. It was not only her right, it was also her duty, to maintain peace, justice and liberty within her own realm. It was her bounden obligation, in the presence of foreign aggression to conserve by every means available her own integrity and independence as a nation.

To such an extent have the Japanese distinguished themselves in the present war that we have never yet known them to be on the defensive. Not only have they won victories from the beginning, they have everywhere taken the offensive against the Russian troops. Not once have they retreated. On the contrary, their campain has been a steady advance. When we recall where the Japanese forces are today, we can not help remembering the fact that throughout the war Japan has never at any time been brought into contact with an antagonist who may fairly be called formidable and dangerous to her.

Meanwhile the tactics pursued by Japan have won admiration the whole world over, and we must recall the brotherly way in which the Japanese have treated the Russian wounded and prisoners that have fallen into their hands.

Many have expressed the idea that Japan ought to give to the world the spectacle of a decisive victory over the Russians, holding that if the campaign shall continue for two or three years the present physical struggle between the two nations will become merely financial competition, resulting, after the exhaustion of their resources, in the withdrawal of the Japanese armies from Manchuria, and of their garrisons from Korea, in a victory; that is to say, for the Russians. But, not so, for in the present war the Japanese have determined to fight to the last man, also to spend their last penny in carrying it to a successful conclusion, that, it being the intention of that government to vigorously prosecute military operations against Russia, utterly regardless of financial consideration, also that government will trust to the patriotism of its people to supply the resources needed for the war, and that it has no apprehension whatever as to the financial necessities, either of the soldiers or sailors now fighting in Manchuria or of the families at home.

In regard to the finances of the war, I have been able to procure a copy of a budget dealing with this subject which was submitted to the Japanese Government.

In this budget both revenue and expenditure amount to $190,000,000.

The sources of revenue are as follows: 1st. Increased receipts expected from the imposition of extraordinary special taxes, and from the establishment of the tobacco manufacture monoply, $31,000,000. 2d. The amount set apart out of the surplus of $24,000,000; obtained by furthur retrenchments of the budget to be actually carried out in the present year; also through some funds having become unnecessary for ordinary naval and military expenditure, an additional $4,000,000. 3d. Loans from funds under special accounts, $15,000,000. 4th. Funds to be obtained by means of public loans and temporary loans, $140,000,000.

Besides all these funds there are the expenditures needed for other matters connected with national affairs, as they may be defrayed from time to time according to the requirements of the developing situation. The total reserve fund for this purpose has been put at $20,000,000.

The next question which arises to the mind is: What will the war cost Japan?

As to the total amount of war expenditure, that necessarily depends upon the number of soldiers and sailors engaged; on the area of the field of operations, as well as on its nearness or distance from the home country, on the number of battles, and on the length of the war in point of time. Keeping in mind all these more or less indefinite factors, it is nearly impossible to figure anything like the exact amount which Japan will need for the present war.

Yet taking into consideration the amounts expended in carrying out such wars as the Crimean war, the Franco-German war and the Russo-Turkish war, an approximate estimate may be given.

The average monthly expenditures in those wars, for an army of 100,000 men, ranged from $12,000,000 to $25,000,000.

In the war between Japan nnd China the Japanes spent on an average per month the sum of $5,500,000. But since then the price of goods has advanced in Japan and Manchuria. The Japanese armies are now much larger than those employed against the Chinese; and again, the Japanese are unable to utilize for the present war the same organization and plans of operations which suited well enough in their war with China, but they have had to make complete changes.

Taking then the experiences taught from the above named wars, and Japan's experience in the Japan-China war it may be said that were Japan to send 200,000 soldiers to Manchuria at the present time their support for each month would cost $12,500,000. It must also be kept in mind that there are also heavy expenditures in regard to naval operations. Expenditures for this purpose will amount per month to $3,000,000.

At the beginning of hostilities, the Japanese government had special expenditures which are no longer necessary, such as the mobilizing of soldiers and sailors, buying of guns and ammunition, provisions, horses and other material, the requisites of transportation, service and so forth. Since June of the present and Japan has been and will be in receipt of revenues from several sources to the amount of $175,000,000.

In addition to the above amount the Government has authority to raise $40,000,000. Its fixed monthly revenue ranges from $9,500,000 to $32,000,000, and their war expenditure for the year does not exceed $15,830,000 monthly, it is plain to the average person that Japan can easily support the financial burden of the war, and will be able, from its financial resourses to tide the country over any difficulty in the near future. Should hostilities continue into the next year the Government will prepare another budget, and is sure to be granted all neceserry supplies.

Even before the war the people of Japan did not hesitate to contribute everything that was needed.

Live and Let Live.

The man who patronizes his home merchant instead of the catalogue houses of the large cities, is not only doing justice to himself but to the community in which he dwells, and from whom he gains his worldly possessions.

What portion of the local taxes do the Montgomery Wards and Sears Roebucks pay? How much do they contribute to the support of the local churches hospitals, schools or charities?

A man or woman who has the means, and prefers sending out of town for what may be purchased right at home at the same price, quality considered, and less the freight charges, must be mean at heart, and their very avarice usually works to their own loss, although they may think they are the gainer. The catalogue houses are not in business for their health, no more than the home merchant.—St. Paul Trade Journal.

FROM FASHION'S WORLD.

Some New Materials—Dress Skirts Lined Once More.

From Paris comes the edict that hats must match the costume this season. This means a good deal to the woman with a moderate dress allowance. An artful way of serving fashion and economy at the same time is to select a certain shade as the basis tone of the entire wardrobe and have a hat developed in many shades of the same color, one of them matching each gown.

There will be a decided fancy this winter for smooth faced cloths. Chiffon broadcloth is promised a great vogue for afternoon costumes, while for walking and shopping frocks rough tweeds and homespuns are the choice. Zibelines for fall wear have a panne finish.

Scorched onion is a new autumn color, but it is too daring for an entire costume. Hats of this are very pretty and are a smart finish to black, blue gray and brown toilets.

Skirts are to be lined. It is claimed by dressmakers that the action in walking is much more free than when the skirts are separate. Another old feature to be revived is the use of binding on skirts, and a very sensible one it is in every respect.

The gown illustrated is an autumn promenade toilet of old green satin cloth. The blouse jacket has an attached undulating basque and wide gathered shoulders. A silk braid trims the smart little jacket, and revers of the velvet in the same shade as the cloth show buttons of passementerie and buttonhole imitations. The folded belt is of old green satin. The skirt is laid in opposite plaits, falling out free, and is trimmed with two bias folds of velvet.

PASSING OF CRISIS

British Population Was Certain of War With Russia

MANY ARE DISAPPOINTED

Had Expected an Immediate Attack on the Czar's Navy—Rulers of the Two Nations Involved Had Much to With Preserving the Peace

London, Oct. 29.—All danger of war between Russia and Great Britain has been averted and the settlement of the only points in dispute regarding the attack by the Russian Baltic squadron on British trawlers Oct. 21 has been referred to an international commission under The Hague convention.

The day was an eventful one in the metropolis. The population, stirred by flaring headlines in the morning newspapers, seemed convinced that war was inevitable. The cabinet meeting, which was held at noon, served to increase rather than allay anxiety. Throughout the country there had spread a deep-rooted, though perfectly erroneous, idea that Great Britain had given Russia a time limit in which to reply and "Charley" Beresford, England's naval idol, was on the spot. Many, indeed, thought it was only a question of hours when he would be demolishing Russian ships. Without the least national desire for war, a great naval excitement had been worked up.

In the streets last night many expressions of disappointment might be heard because the crisis had not developed into hostilities. This merely voiced the opinion of the thoughtless, though a large section of the public.

No further difficulties are expected, either from popular feeling here or diplomatically. Foreign Minister Lansdowne and Ambassador Benkendorff probably will be able to decide the constitution of the international commission and its date of sitting. In view of the circumstances, neither Japan nor Spain is likely to object to the temporary prolongation of the stay of the section of the Baltic squadron at Vigo, and the inquiry will be expedited as much as possible.

St Petersburg Breathes Easier

St. Petersburg, Oct. 29.—There was a feeling of profound relief in higher government spheres and diplomatic circles, where the knowledge existed that the grave crisis in the relations between Russia and Great Britain over the North sea incident has been happily avoided by a decision to submit the issue to a commission to be created under the articles of The Hague convention.

This prompt and satisfactory outcome, which will ensure a definite establishment of the facts and locate the responsibility, is attributed in diplomatic circles mainly to the direct interposition of Emperor Nicholas and King Edward. The British government, in the face of an excited public opinion, which was demanding the most extreme measures, proposed the submission of the issue to a commission under The Hague convention, while the Russian government was preparing a similar proposal to Great Britain. Neutral powers, notably France, and, it is believed here, the United States, were using all their influence to avoid a world catastrophe.

Fears For Port Arthur

St. Petersburg, Oct. 29.—Alarmist reports from foreign sources of the alleged critical situation of the Port Arthur garrison and of a renewal of the Japanese attack upon that stronghold have created considerable popular anxiety over the fate of the fortress. The government simply states that it is without direct advices, though it realizes that the situation in the fortress must be growing daily more difficult.

Activity at War Front

St. Petersburg, Oct. 29.—More activity is being manifested south of Mukden, the Russians being the aggressors. A dispatch from General Sakharoff describes a Russian reconnaissance far south of Erdagou, thus putting an end to the rumor that the Japanese had taken it. He also reports the capture of two villages southwest of Sinchinpu.

Japs Got Meat Bought by Russia

Sioux City, Ia., Oct. 29.—Intended for the use of the Russian soldiers in Manchuria, a shipload of 2,000,000 pounds of beef, one-fourth of which was shipped from the Sioux City plant of a local packing company, was captured by the Japanese. The order was received by the packing company from the Russian government late in the summer. The value of the cargo was close to $200,000. Undaunted by the fate of the first cargo, the Russian government has placed a second order for 2,500,000 pounds of beef. The meat must be on its way within the next 40 days.

Jap Reserves' Services Needed

Cheyenne, Wyo., Oct. 29.—G. Wakimoto, who is in charge of hundreds of Japanese employed on the Union Pacific railroad, has been notified by the Japanese consul that all members of the first and second army reserves are ordered to return home at once for active service.

THE USUAL RESULT

No Indictments Against Lynchers of Negroes at Statesboro

Statesboro, Ga., Oct. 29.—The grand jury has failed to return any indictments against the lynchers of Reed and Cato, negroes, burned some time ago. Some of the jury commissioners say all the names of those who composed the grand jury will be taken out of the jury box. Others are of the opinion that the federal court, under Judge Speer, now will take the matter up and indict the lynchers in Savannah. The jury's presentments say:

"We deplore the recent acts of lawlessness in our city and community. We have investigated the matter in the light of information coming under our personal knowledge and obtained by the examination of a number of witnesses, but we have not been able to find sufficient evidence to warrant indictments."

Says Goat Butted Too Hard

Oskaloosa, Ia., Oct. 29.—An old man named McKinzie is at Eddyville trying to substantiate a claim against the Masonic lodge there for $65,000 for injuries alleged to have been sustained 40 years ago. He says he was solicited to join the Masons, and that in going through the initiatory services he was seriously injured. Upon his return to consciousness the lodge, being short of funds at the time, agreed to pay him $65,000 when he arrived at the age of 65. An examination of the roster of No. 74 fails to show that McKinzie was ever a member of that body.

Society Club Raided by Sheriff

Washington, Oct. 29.—The Chevy Chase club, devoted to country sports and located in Montgomery county, Md., across the district line, where local option is in force, was raided by the county sheriff, several hundreds dollars' worth of liquors seized and the bartender placed under arrest. The club is made up largely of society people of Washington, including members of the diplomatic corps, supreme court and congress.

Won't Collect Increased Rates

Indianapolis, Oct. 29.—At a meeting of the agents of the 81 insurance companies doing business in Indianapolis it was decided to refuse to make a proposed increase of from 10 to 20 percent in rates in the fire district of this city, which was ordered by the companies to become effective Nov. 1. The companies were notified that the agents would refuse to collect such increased rates.

Parker Predicts a Victory

Esopus, N. Y., Oct. 29.—Judge Parker made his first public prediction as to the outcome of the election by saying, during a speech to delegations composed largely of farmers: "I want to assure you that if we work hard enough we can win this fight. I have not felt like saying so until lately, but we are growing so rapidly that if our people do their best I do believe victory will be ours."

Many Large Freighters Ordered

Marquette, Mich., Oct. 29.—Orders have been placed with the shipyards of the Great Lakes for no less than 19 coarse freight carriers, all of them, with one exception, being of great size, 500 or more feet in length. These ships will cost, it is estimated, $7,500,000, and their construction will give the fresh-water shipyards one of the busiest and most prosperous seasons in their history.

What a Stray Bullet Did

Crestline, O., Oct. 29.—William Heffelfinger fired a revolver last night to frighten two companions who were escorting him home. The stray bullet struck Mrs. Harry Kimley in the head. She died within a few minutes. Her friend, Mrs. Carry Shafer, on learning of the tragedy, fell dead from heart disease. Heffelfinger was locked up.

Doubt as to Kirkman's Sanity

Washington, Oct. 29.—The war department has ordered a medical board to examine Captain Kirkman, Twenty-fifth infantry, with a view to determining his sanity. Kirkman was arrested a few days ago in New York, being absent from his post at Fort Niobrara. He is at present confined on Governors island.

Young Wahl Under Heavy Bonds

West Chester, Pa., Oct. 29.—George W. Wahl, aged 15, who was imprisoned on the charge of aiding and abetting the abduction of Michael Miorski, aged 4, who was found dead near Phoenixville, was released on $5000 bail last night. Five members of a band of gypsies are under arrest in connection with the crime.

Indians Entertained Travelers

New York, Oct. 29.—William F. Cody returned to America on the Campania, accompanied by Chief Iron Tail and a band of Sioux Indians. At an entertainment at sea, a feature of the program was a war dance in which 50 of the Indians took part.

COST OF PHILIPPINES

Grossly Exaggerated Statements Reiterated by Judge Parker In Recent Speech.

Shows Narrowness or Obstinacy In Repeating Previous Errors Officially Corrected.

[Washington Dispatch to the New York Tribune.]

The avidity with which Judge Parker and ex-Secretary Olney swallowed the statement that the Philippines had cost this country $650,000,000 and the pertinacity with which they cling to it after its falsity has been proved again and again are past the comprehension of persons in Washington who are familiar with the real conditions in the Philippines.

That the cost of the Philippines, including the $20,000,000 paid to Spain, amounted, up to May 1, 1902, to $189,000,000 has been established beyond dispute. No Democratic member of either house of congress has dared to challenge Secretary Root's statement to that effect. The cost to this country for the following year has been shown to be $3,080,000, and for the year just ended $2,100,000, a total of $194,180,000. That has been the actual cost of the Philippines up to June 30, 1904.

The statement Mr. Parker permitted himself to repeat when he declared that "over 200,000 lives have been sacrificed" is equally false. The total loss of life of American troops and Filipinos in the American army from all causes has amounted to 4,067 privates and 155 officers, a total of 4,222 men. Even adding to this number the loss of Filipino insurgents, a liberal estimate of which is less than 10,000, the grand total aggregates 14,000 against Mr. Parker's 200,000. Moreover, the totals here given include deaths from wounds, sickness, drowning and other accidents, and, an important contributory cause, the contagious diseases which, unrestrained, ravaged Americans and Filipinos when American occupation began. Only 126,000 American soldiers, all told, have been sent to the Philippines.

As an offset to this loss of life should be set the magnificent work of the army medical corps and of the health officers of the Philippine commission, whose unremitting efforts have stamped out the plague, reduced smallpox and other contagious diseases to a minimum and rendered the Philippines as healthful as Cuba.

That unintelligent campaign speakers should voice the extravagant charges of the partisan press without taking the trouble to investigate them may not be surprising, but that men of higher standing should reiterate them, especially in the face of the testimony of high minded and unimpeachable witnesses, is a source of amazement. The insular bureau points to the interview with the Most Rev. J. J. Harty, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Manila, cabled from the Philippines, as indisputable evidence of existing conditions in the Philippines. Archbishop Harty's testimony agrees with that of Dr. Brent, the Episcopal bishop of Manila, who is now in this country. The archbishop, after returning from an extended tour through the islands, declared his hope that Theodore Roosevelt would be elected president of the United States and said:

"I was impressed during my journeyings by the progress of American institutions among the masses of the people, the general happiness, the security of person and property and the supremacy of order and justice. I believe that under divine guidance the beneficent rule of America is destined ultimately to place the Christian Malay race on a moral and political plane that as yet has never been attained by an oriental people. This task that the Americans have assumed they cannot shirk or abandon. This work that Governor Taft so auspiciously began and that Governor Wright continues must be carried to a triumphant conclusion."

Archbishop Harty is eminently qualified to judge of the situation. In his nine months' residence at Manila he has held exhaustive conferences with the bishops and provincial priests. He has spent months living with the people, traveling practically alone and unguarded even in the remotest provinces, inspecting parishes and visiting the people in their homes. In some of the districts he visited it had been thirty years since a bishop had been there.

Nor is the testimony of these churchmen isolated. Every one who has had an opportunity to judge of conditions in the Philippines as they actually exist brings to Washington the same story of progress. The Philippine government is being judiciously administered, the people are prosperous, Christianity is thriving under the freedom of American policies, and the pernicious influence on a few excitable Filipinos of the false assertions of Democratic candidates and speakers is now the only menace to uninterrupted peace and prosperity in the Philippines.

A Menacing Threat.

[From the Louisville Herald.]

The Democracy, by denouncing protection as robbery, has put the workingman's full dinner pail, his home, his children's food, clothing and schooling, his wife and family's legitimate comforts in jeopardy. It menaces likewise the enterprise and profits of capital. It threatens a return of the stringency and stagnation of ten years ago.

FURNACE COLD.

People who live in furnace-heated houses may have noticed the prevalence of supposed colds, coughs and throat ailments immediately after the furnace has been started in the fall. As a matter of fact, experts declare that these epidemics are largely caused by the dust and germs which gather in the registers and hot-air pipes during the summer and are blown into the air of the house when the furnace is started. In addition to the ordinary dust, which is certain to settle in such places during the summer months, there is also danger that it may become impregnated with poisonous vapors from the cellar, which may be released by the current of hot air rising from the cellar. In view of the large number of houses which are heated by furnaces, the question of properly cleaning the pipes has an important influence on the health.—Healthy Home.

CAUTION.

The above article is from a reliable source, and we do not believe the danger from this cause is over estimated.

It has been stated before by different authorities that a large per cent. of the throat and lung trouble in the winter months, in the northern states, was caused by the hot, dry, dusty air from the hot-air furnace and registers. To avoid this danger use the more modern method of HOT WATER, or STEAM HEAT.

SIXTY LIVES LOST

Probable Result of Explosion In a Colorado Mine

FIRE ADDS TO HORROR

Considered Likely That None of the Bodies Will Ever Be Recovered--Smoke, Timbers and Dust Belched From Air Shafts

Trinidad, Col., Oct. 29.—From 30 to 60 men lost their lives in a terrific explosion which occurred at mine No. 3 of the Rocky Mountain Fuel and Iron company at Tercio, 40 miles west of Trinidad. The exact number of dead may never be known, as the mine is burning and in all likelihood the bodies will be consumed.

A large number of mine officials left here as soon as word of the accident was received. Company doctors were picked up all along the line, as well as all other available physicians. F. J. Foreman, a government stock inspector, who was at Tercio when the explosion occurred, gives the following account of the affair:

"I was standing not more than 300 yards from the mouth of the tunnel when the explosion occurred. The explosion was preceded by a low, rumbling sound, resembling an earthquake, which made the earth tremble and startled the whole camp.

"I looked toward the mine and out of the mouth of the tunnel and two air shafts came a great volume of smoke and dust, which continued for nearly a minute. Out of the two air shafts, each of which are seven feet in diameter, timbers that were fully three feet in diameter were shot into the air and broken into splinters. Rocks were thrown over the camp for a distance of a quarter of a mile. In fact, it rained rocks, broken timbers and all kinds of debris for fully a minute, and many people were injured by being struck with these missiles.

"The explosion, which resembled a volcanic eruption, caused the wildest excitement. Men, women and children rushed to the mouth of the tunnel and women whose husbands were in the mine had to be brought away by miners to prevent their being killed by deadly fumes coming from the mouth of the tunnel."

The mine in which the accident occurred employs 80 men, and it is believed that at least 60 were in the mine at the time.

News of the explosion brought assistance from the adjacent camps and hundreds of men tried to enter the mine. Deadly fumes overcame the rescuers frequently, but their places immediately were taken by others ready to risk their lives. It was not thought possible that any one in the mine could escape death.

It is impossible to secure names of the dead and injured. Nearly all the miners employed are Slavs. The mine was opened only a year ago and extended 2000 feet into the hill. The explosion is supposed to have been caused by dust. All the mines within a radius of 20 miles have been shut down and the miners are on the way to assist in the recovery of the bodies.

Cortelyou to Make a Speech

New York, Oct. 29.—Chairman Cortelyou will make a speech in New York city on Nov. 4. Ever since the Republican national chairman has been in charge of the campaign he has refused to talk for publication, but intimated that he might make some statement before the election. It is likely that this statement will be in the form of the speech he is to deliver, in which he will answer some of the charges that have been made against him.

Retail Trade Doing Well

New York, Oct. 29.—R. G. Subsequently the temperature fell, restoring retail trade in wearing apparel, fuel and similar products.

NEW RAILROAD PLANNED

May Bring Undeveloped Maine Land Under Cultivation

Bangor, Me., Oct. 29.—The sale to a group of New England investors of a large block of Bangor and Aroostook railroad stock held by Lee, Higginson & Co. of Boston is said to ensure the building of the long contemplated branch of the road from Lagrange to Stockton harbor, on Penobscot bay, a distance of about 60 miles, to be known as the Northern Seaboard railroad. For many years the Bangor and Aroostook has been looking for an outlet on the seaboard, for the shipment of its vast volume of heavy freight.

By means of this line, affording an all-the-year open port on Penobscot bay, the projectors expect to develop an immense traffic in heavy and bulky freight from the regions reached by the Bangor and Aroostook in northern Maine. At present 20,000 carloads of this class of freight is shipped annually from northern Maine via the St. John river.

There are in Aroostook county about 7,000,000 acres of arable lands, of which only 400,000 acres are now under cultivation. The possibilities of production of potatoes, oats, hay and other important farm crops as the vast undeveloped area is brought under cultivation are vast beyond computation, while the lumber industry is rapidly expanding.

The wording of the instrument may call for legal construction.

Love and Lunacy

By Troy Allison

Copyright, 1904, by Troy Allison

"I hope you will remember it has been my pet scheme for the last five years," said young Dr. Hilyer, polishing his glasses with a vigor due less to necessity than to a desire to avoid his sister's flashing eyes.

Bettina gave her head a disdainful toss and helped herself to another chocolate.

"I know I shan't even like him," she said, finding it difficult to express disapproval with any great amount of dignity when one cheek was distorted by a chocolate drop.

"Now, Bettina, that's simply prejudice. He was the nicest fellow at college, and he is the only man on earth I would be willing for you to marry."

Bettina's fingers seized a candied violet which she discovered in the corner of the box.

"Of course I know he's a wonder," she said. "That's the reason I know I shan't like him. He is probably so perfect that he chews his food a regulation number of times before swallowing."

Hilyer laughed.

"I've seen him swallow sandwiches so fast it would take a lightning calculator to keep up with him. Now, Bettina, please be reasonable! I haven't seen Dent since we left college, but if he is as jolly a doctor as he was a medical student you certainly will not have cause to complain of his primness. He will be here in time for the dance tonight, and I simply want you to be nice to him. I don't know what it is women do to themselves when they want to be especially charming, but you can do it when you try, little sis."

Bettina balanced the somewhat depleted candy box on top of a skull that ornamented the doctor's desk.

"That's to keep the servant from eating the rest of it," she laughed. "Maggie wouldn't dare touch it now. Well, Brother Doctor, I'll see what effect the new pompadour silk will have on Dr. Dent. If it is immediate and startling and you see me sitting in the conservatory holding his hand don't be alarmed; it may be necessary to take his pulse."

Dr. Hilyer smiled as his erratic little sister flitted from the room.

He had been resident physician at the Burton asylum for two years, where it was customary to give an occasional dance for the inmates. Bettina found something unusual in these dances that she fairly reveled in, and she had not been known to miss one since her brother had been in charge. She would take the electric car from the city and arrive at the sanitarium triumphantly bearing a box containing her newest party dress, produced by home talent. The girl's mother encouraged her industry by giving her all the material for party dresses that she would make up, and her chic creations were the envy of her girl friends.

When she had arrived that afternoon she had shown her brother a gay little blue and pink pompadour frock that he had vowed would make it necessary to send all his harmless patients back to padded cells and leave a paucity of dancing men.

Dr. Dent's train was late. He hurried into his dress suit, and the two friends started down the hall toward the ballroom. An attendant came up hurriedly and whispered that Hilyer was needed immediately.

"I'm sorry, old man," he said, turning to go with the nurse. "You'll have to find your way in alone. There's no hostess, so go in and talk to any one you like. You'll find Bettina somewhere. Look for a yellow haired little girl in a blue and pink dress. I believe the little minx has sprinkled diamond dust in her hair and put a black patch on her cheek to be in keeping with her pompadour costume, so you will have no trouble in recognizing her."

Bettina was partly hidden by a group of palms when Dent entered the room. She saw him speak to several of the patients near the door and finally ask one dark eyed girl to dance.

Bettina recognized him immediately from the photograph in her brother's room and studied him calmly as he and his partner passed her.

Certain she was that Will had not told her Dent was a perfect Hercules and that even the photograph had been misleading. She acknowledged to herself the improbability of a man of his type masticating food according to set rules and was rather inclined to think Will might have mentioned his style of dancing as a point in his favor when he had given a list of his friend's many virtues that afternoon.

When she saw him coming toward her with the evident intention of speaking she thought he mistook her for a patient, and her eyes sparkled with mischief.

"May I introduce myself?" he asked, bowing before her.

Bettina raised a haughty little head. "It is somewhat unusual for royalty to be approached with so little formality," she said icily, "but of course the daughter of the lost dauphin of France has had to put up with a great many trials."

Dent looked startled. "Perhaps I have made a mistake"— he commenced.

"Oh, don't mention it," she interrupted, with an airy little wave of the hand. "'Tis within royal power to pardon, and even I, Princess Fleur-de-lis, feel that it is no condescension to talk to Alexander the Great on an equal footing."

Dent bowed again profoundly, so profoundly that when he stood erect he had gained control of the smile that threatened to convulse his countenance, for he knew he could not be mistaken about that patch and diamond dust. It was scarcely probable that two girls would be dressed just like this.

"Your highness, no battle trophy ever filled me with a joy that the effect of your approval does not far exceed. Permit me," he added, seating himself beside her.

"It's really a pleasure," she continued affably. "It is so seldom that one meets royal blood in this democratic America. It will positively be the cause of my being an old maid, for of course a princess could not marry a commoner, could she?" Bettina's wicked little dimple was now in evidence, and the patch on her cheek called attention to it in a way that seemed positively audacious.

"No, indeed," he assented eagerly; "of course princesses must marry—er—kings and things."

Bettina nodded approvingly. Her blue eyes looked into his with guileless expression that threatened Dent with a second attack of convulsions.

"Yes, of course," she smiled into his face with a confidential friendliness. "I rather think I would like a king myself, but I have met so few," sighing. "In fact, you are the first one."

He leaned over and took the fan from her hand.

"Fair princess, I feel that one could wish the first might be last and the last might be first."

"Oh, don't; please don't," she entreated hurriedly. "Don't wish for anything. I'm afraid you might—cry."

Dent stared in astonishment.

"Perhaps I ought not to have mentioned it"—she drew the corners of her small mouth down in an absurdly contrite manner—"but we heard about—Alexander the Great's weeping; it's really a matter of history. I would not start you to crying and spoil the evening for you—not for anything."

"I feel a lump in my throat right now," he declared. "I am perfectly sure that if you don't dance this next waltz with me I shall burst into tears according to history."

She rose quickly.

"Anything to please the ba—I mean anything to keep you from crying," she said as they joined the dancers.

Hilyer peeped into the conservatory an hour later. "I guess I'll not disturb that," he muttered and tiptoed away.

On the last day of Dent's holiday Bettina's maid carried a box into her room.

It contained delicate purple and white lilacs tied with a royal purple ribbon strangely decorated. On one streamer was a hand painted shield of strange device, and another end of ribbon was tied around a small scroll of paper.

The girl opened it eagerly.

Little Princess Fleur-de-lis—Alexander the Great feels another lump in his throat. He wants to call this afternoon and ask you that the fleur-de-lis shall be bound always by the royal ribbons of his house.

Later that afternoon Bettina smiled into his eyes admiringly.

"I certainly am glad to marry a man who knows so much," she said, pointing to the painted ribbon that she wore in a knot on her breast. "Now I was so ignorant that I had no idea how Alexander's coat of arms looked."

Dent drew the curly head over on his shoulder and laughed.

She asked him why he laughed.

He didn't think it necessary to tell her that he had paid a girl in an art store to copy the strangest looking shield he could find in the dictionary. A lion couchant or a charger rampant was all the same to him—he had trusted to luck that she would not know the difference, and he now added a touch of diplomacy that promised him great future success as a married man.

"What am I laughing at, little girl? You might know that a man who was emotional enough to cry for mere worlds would laugh when he found—heaven."

George Chambers, an artist, was once commissioned by King William IV. of England to paint a picture of the attack on a fortress on the Spanish coast by a frigate commanded by his majesty, who was then the Duke of Clarence. The attack took place at night. Chambers completed a beautiful picture from some rough sketches that were in the king's possession, and when submitted for approval his majesty was delighted with it, but Chambers had taken an artist's liberty with the picture and for the purpose of relieving the somber veil of night had introduced some sea gulls skimming the waves. "Hello, hello, Chambers!" said his majesty. "This will never do to have the birds flying about at night. They were all gone to roost." "So they were, your majesty," replied Chambers, "but you gave such a rousing broadside with your guns that they all woke up and flew about." "Ah, so I did; so I did, Chambers. I forgot that. Very good, very good!"

Japanese Playing Cards.

"Japanese playing cards," writes a correspondent who has given some study to the playing cards of different countries, "are unlike those of any other country on earth. In shape they resemble those used in France and other countries on the continent, but they are very much smaller than ordinary cards, being but two inches in length by one in breadth. The backs of the cards are almost invariably black and with true Japanese artistic instinct are pasted over the edges of the cards so as to leave a narrow rim to form a frame on the face of the card. The symbols are stenciled and the card varnished or enameled, thus causing it to be extremely slippery. The pack consists of forty-nine cards, the extra one, which has a plain white face, being used or not at option as a 'joker.'"

ADVICE TO FIRST VOTERS

A Young Man Who Values His First Vote "Next to His Life" Wants Help In Deciding.

The Answer Gives Six Good Reasons Why He Should Be a Republican and Stay One.

The Question.

23 Water Street,
Newburg, N. Y., Sept. 23, 1904.

Dear Sir—I write hoping you will find time to answer and enlighten me as to how I should vote this coming election. It will be my first vote for president, and I value it next to my life, for it means either a full or empty dinner pail to me. I have tried hard to find some sound conviction by reading the daily journals, but apparently they are striving to see which one can lie most sordidly in their criticisms of party and candidate; therefore I appeal to you for some sound reasons why I should vote the Republican ticket, and wish to add that with all my strength and mind I indorse your president in maintaining the army and navy and the progressive government we have enjoyed for the past eight years.

Hoping the best candidate will win, I remain sincerely.

JOSEPH L. COLEMAN.

The Answer.

Oct. 6, 1904.

My Dear Sir—Your favor of recent date stating that at the coming election you will cast your first presidential vote and asking for some good reasons why you should vote the Republican ticket has been referred to me for answer.

The reasons are many and strong why you should "start right" by voting the Republican ticket, yet it is impossible within the limits of an ordinary letter to state even briefly all of them. Here are a few of them:

First.—You should vote the Republican ticket because the record of that party for the fifty years of its existence has been so uniformly honorable and consistent that it is today a crown of glory to every man to say that he was one of its founders and has continued to act with it to this day. It is a privilege to any young man to come into such an inheritance. No other party has existed in our country for that length of time but its honorable members have at some time or other been obliged to admit that its principles were vicious and its candidates unworthy of their support.

Second.—You should vote the Republican ticket because that party was organized to make this the land of free men, free soil and free speech. Having accomplished its purpose, it is the party best fitted to preserve them.

Third.—You should vote the Republican ticket because the party is opposed to free trade and free silver and has consistently stood for protection to both labor and capital.

Fourth.—You should vote the Republican ticket because a man is known by the company he keeps, and no man is in bad company who is a member of the party of Fremont and Lincoln and Grant and McKinley and Roosevelt. All good men are not Republicans, nor are all Republicans good men, but the vast majority of Republicans are men of good repute. Look about in your own community and see whether this it not true.

Fifth.—You should vote the Republican ticket because its candidates now, as in the past, are honest, able and courageous men. As has been said, what more could any mother and father ask than that their son should follow the same high ideals as Theodore Roosevelt has followed and live the same honorable, loyal, pure life as his has been?

Sixth.—You should vote the Republican ticket because that party is distinctly the young man's party, for its future offers so much of promise for the upbuilding of the honor and glory of our country. If you wish to take part in this work, if you like to be doing things, if you are progressive, if you are ambitious for your own betterment and that of your native land, if you wish the world to be better for your having lived, then you should line up with the Republican party. If, on the other hand, you are always looking backward, always carping at what others do and afraid of the future and fearful that our country may become too great, then there is no place in the Republican party for you.

Vote the Republican ticket from top to bottom, and then on election night when the returns are announced you can throw up your hat and say, "I helped win the day." Sincerely yours,

CHARLES H. DUELL.

Mr. Joseph L. Coleman, 23 Water Street, Newburg, N. Y.

Pure Buncombe.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The Democratic party's promise to enforce "economy in expenditures" and to return to "Jeffersonian simplicity in office" is the purest buncombe. It is a glittering generality, a mere rhetorical extravagance; it is a pledge impossible of fulfillment, a pledge nullified by contrary party pledges more binding because more specific. In the Democratic platform itself this conflict of professions is obvious and glaring. Vague exhortations to "economy" are made ridiculous by an utter failure to indicate specific lines along which economies are desirable or practicable.

H. G. DAVIS'S BLUNDERS.

Cleveland Not President In Fiscal Year of 1892.

[Washington dispatch to the New York Tribune.]

Amazement is expressed here at the blunders made by Henry G. Davis in his letter accepting the Democratic nomination for vice president. The most striking are his selection of the fiscal year 1892 as one of the years of the Cleveland administration and his quotation of the total and per capita expenditures of that year for purposes of contrast with those of the fiscal year 1904. President Cleveland was not elected until November, 1892, four months after the close of the fiscal year which Mr. Davis selects as a sample of his administration, and was not inaugurated until March 4, 1893, almost the close of the fiscal year of 1893, so that the first fiscal year of his term, properly speaking, was that of 1894. It is pointed out that by selecting the third year of the Harrison administration he secured an advantage of $22,000,000 difference in the total expenditures of the government and a difference of 13 cents in the per capita expense. Mr. Davis also utterly fails to show the increase of expenditures of the Cleveland administration over those of the preceding Republican administration and leaves it to be inferred by the inattentive reader that increases in the expenditures are coincident with Republican rule.

Mr. Davis reiterates the usual campaign fulminations against trusts, but does not suggest a remedy. He was probably restrained from prescribing the Republican remedy of federal prosecution of contracts in restraint of trade by the Albany Democratic platform and the assurances of Parker's managers that the presidential candidate will hold that federal prosecution of corporations chartered by the state is a violation of the constitution. In fact, it is remarked, Mr. Davis follows his arraignment of the trusts with a paragraph on violations of the constitution, apparently intended to reassure any timorous contributors to the Democratic campaign fund.

Mr. Davis' charges of extravagance against Republican administrations have not even the merit of originality, having all been uttered by Judge Parker in more amplified form and effectually disproved by the sound thinkers and experienced economists whose attention was called to them by Parker's letter of acceptance.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

Mr. Wright Lorimer and his own company of 200 people are playing to crowded houses at the Majestic Theatre, Boston. In his third week the receipts exceeded $9000. and the advance sale indicates that "The Shepherd King" will remain in Boston for many weeks. Not in years has an attraction created such an impression in New England as "The Shepherd King.". It ranks with "Ben Hur" as a spectacle and dramatically is far stronger than the dramatization of Gen. Wallace's famous story.

TREMONT THEATRE.

It will be the brilliant event of the dramatic year when, on Monday evening next, David Belasco brings Henrietta Crosman and the entire company and production from the Belasco theatre, New York, to present for the first time in Boston the new comedy, "Sweet Kitty Bellaire," written by himself and founded on "The Bath Comedy" by Egerton Castle. The Tremont is the theatre which has secured this attraction, the most important and successfu that has been made in New York during the past year. Last season this Belasco play stood pre-eminent among the offerings of the metropolitan stage, because of its artistic as well as dramatic superiority. The present year has produced no new work that could rival even remotely this work of the master hand of the wizard-like Belasco. It is little wonder that he is the bright particular star of his own achievement, and that his theatre was crowded to the door night after night. Not the least important feature of the announcement is that which promises this quaint, fasinating play in all the completeness of production and cast that has made its New York career memorable. The comedy gives Miss Crossman the opportunity of her life, and she has honestly taken possession of the title "Queen of Comediennes."

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

William Gillette, presented by Charles Frohman in J. M. Barrie's comedy-fantasy "The Admirable Crichton," will begin a limited engagement at the Hollis Street theatre, Boston, on Monday, Oct. 31st, and as this engagement will positively mark Mr. Gillette's last appearance in this play in New England, the announcement should be of particular interest to theatregoers of this city. The play is described as a 'comedy-fantasy' for the lack of a better term to describe a production which stands absolutely unique in dramatic history. Much was to be expected of any play written by J. M. Barrie in which an actor of Mr. Gillette's rank appears but "The Admirable Crichton" is declared to be not only the best offering Mr. Barrie has made to the stage, while affording Mr Gillette a roll more powerful and artistic than any other creations which have made him famous, and the production which Charles Froham has given the play is magnificent.

BOSTON MUSIC HALL.

Boston Music hall, the famous birthplace of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now completely rebuilt and remodeled, will open next Monday, Oct. 31, under an entirely new management with a complete change of policy, which will include the presentation of All Star vaudeville" of the highest grade. The policy of Music hall will be radically different from that of any other theatre in Boston. The old "continuous performance" idea will be completely eliminated and instead two performances, one beginning at 2 and the other at 8 P. M., will be given every day. For the opening week a program such as never before was seen in Boston, has been arranged. Every act has at some recent time appeared at the top of a vaudeville program. All but one are new to Boston. The complete bill is not yet ready for publication but will include Gustav Kerker's new musical burlesque "Very Grand Opera" entitled "Singing to Burn or Burning to Sing" which will be presented by a company of six headed by the Boston favorites, J. K. Murray and Clara Lane. The balance of the bill will be made up of acts of full equal merit.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

Another long and varied list of vaudeville entertainers is announced for Keith's the week of Oct. 31. Newcomers in the bill include Emmet Corrigan, a well known actor, who will be supported by an excellent company in the presentation of a mirth provoking sketch entitled "Jockey Jones, or the Day of the Handicap;" Laura Millard, a well known operetic prima donna, formerly one of the leading sopranoists of the Castle Square Opera company, and Helen Reimer, an actress who is known to the patrons of the legitimate playhouses from Maine to California, and who will be seen in the varieties in a series of clever character sketches. Some of the others scheduled to appear are Fred Ward and John Curran, who have a practically new sketch in "The Terrible Judge;" the Maginlays, skilful aerial acrobats; Newell and Niblo in musical novelties; Press Eldridge, the favorite blackface monologue entertainer, and Collins and Hart, in one of the most amusing comedy acrobatic acts known to vaudeville. The bill, is one of the strongest offered at Keith's this season.

COLUMBIA MUSIC HALL.

No amusement enterprise has ever started in Boston under more favorable auspices than has the new Columbia Music hall. At every performance last week the beautiful house was filled to overflowing; so great, indeed, was the crowd on Saturday night that a number of police were necessary to clear the sidewalks and drive off ticket speculators—the first always to sent prosperity in business of this nature. The management is adopting strenuous methods to protect the public against them. Certainly at no other theatre can so much be enjoyed for the money as at the Columbia, and this is greatly added to by the atmosphere of good-fellowship in the great, handsome house, induced principally by the smoking privilege. This feature, somewhat to the suprise of the public, has proven objectionable to no one. The scientifically constructed automatic ventilation apparatus has anticipated and removed every annoying element. The audiences are continuously large this week and there is a strong advance sale of seats. Next week there will be an entire change of the vaudeville and the new burlesque, "The Japsky's," a satire on Russo-Jap events will be given with a fine new company of 50 people.

TODAY'S COURT.

Lewis Glover, Francis Silva, Carl Litchfield Harry O'Day and Roy Dunbar were arraigned for assault at Weymouth. Case continued until next Thursday.

Joseph Smith was fined $8.97 for assault at Holbrook.

Protection Makes No Monopoly.

[From the Iron and Steel Association Bulletin.]

Protection has not established in this country any manufacturing or other monopoly. The express and telegraph companies, the sleeping car companies, the railroad companies themselves, including the electric and street car companies, the gas and electric light companies in towns and cities and every other aggregation of capital to which exclusive privileges are granted or secured by legislation, are in their very nature monopolies, but none of these we have specifically mentioned is in any way protected by tariff duties. The only manufacturing monopoly in the supply of American markets that we have ever known to be properly chargeable to our tariff legislation was the Welsh tin plate monopoly, now happily ended, which for decade after decade absolutely controlled the supply of tin plates to the people of our country and the prices at which they were sold, but that was a foreign monopoly and not a creation of our protective policy. For years and years our tariff legislation fostered this foreign monopoly by means of low duties. It was always defended by American free traders. It was the protective tariff of 1890 which brought it to an end.

Speaker Cannon says the Democratic platform is like a woman's Mother Hubbard. "It covers everything and touches nothing."

FURNACE COLD.

People who live in furnace-heated houses may have noticed the prevalence of supposed colds, coughs and throat ailments immediately after the furnace has been started in the fall. As a matter of fact, experts declare that these epidemics are largely caused by the dust and germs which gather in the registers and hot-air pipes during the summer and are blown into the air of the house when the furnace is started. In addition to the ordinary dust, which is certain to settle in such places during the summer months, there is also danger that it may become impregnated with poisonous vapors from the cellar, which may be released by the current of hot air rising from the cellar. In view of the large number of houses which are heated by furnaces, the question of properly cleaning the pipes has an important influence on the health.—Healthy Home.

CAUTION.

The above article is from a reliable source, and we do not believe the danger from this cause is over estimated.

It has been stated before by different authorities that a large per cent. of the throat and lung trouble in the winter months, in the northern states, was caused by the hot, dry, dusty air from the hot-air furnace and registers. To avoid this danger use the more modern method of HOT WATER, or STEAM HEAT.

THEY WERE CHUMS.

Comments on Married Life of the Adamses.

John and Abigail Loving Friends.

Parson Smith at First Objected to Young Adams.

Mrs. W. T. Babcock of this city wrote interestingly in the Transcript of Wednesday of the marriage anniversary of President and Mrs. John Adams celebrated in Quincy on Tuesday. The Ledger reproduces the article.

It may well be a cause of lament that so many valuable hours must be given—able argument and conscientious effort made—compelled forth by the present lax condition of thought in regard to marriage and divorce. And those with old-fashioned ideas about married life, its obligations, privileges and compensations, will solemnly and joyfully welcome the anniversary day of the wedding of the man and woman so closely identified with the historical and public life of New England—and yet whose brightest star in their crown is the way they lived together as husband and wife.

Tuesday, Oct. 25, 1764, was the wedding day of John and Abigail Adams. It is a long stretch from then to now—and it was a wise thought to bring that day, and all it means to our remembrance just at this time—"lest we forget." Forget that after all a perfect marriage is the purest, happiest, holiest friendship this world can know. The French word "camaraderie" also describes the happy marriage. There is still another word, an American word, common to uncouthness, yet it means much after all, and fits the amiable, cheerful duality of "the daily round, the common task" of ordinary married life—the word "chums."

Loving friends, faithful comrades were John and Abigail Adams. The modern word cannot be used in connection with the familiar dignity of their intercourse—that word belongs more to the freedom and latitude of modern life. May be, after all, if it were possible to restore to some degree the reserve and formalities of those earlier days, marriage and the home would be happier and more stable. Perhaps what is really needed is a loftier conception by young men and women of the desirability of marriage. To John Adams was given this high ideal, even as a young man.

And what of her? What did the girl, Abigail, see when she stood where the "brook and river meet?" Her own words are best, written when twenty years John Adams's wife: "I look back to the early days of our acquaintance and friendship as to the days of love and innocence, and, with an indescribable pleasure, I have seen near a score of years roll over our heads with an affection heightened and improved by time, nor have the dreary years of absence in the smallest degree effaced from my mind the image of the dear, untitled man to whom I gave my heart."

The young people began in earnest, "Faint heart never won," and the man found he had need of all his courage, for Parson Smith proved a father with a mind of his own, which shared the distrust of the times in regard to law as a profession. It was too early for young Adams to have proved what he believed, and according to his diary, meant to prove "that the study and practice of law, does not dissolve the obligations of morality and religion." If he persisted in visiting the daughter, Abigail, he would do it with little or no encouragement from the father, and when he rode over to Weymouth from Braintree, his nag must be tied to an alien tree, for there was no shelter for the lawyer's horse in the parson's barn.

Surely there is no better safeguard for a young man's morals and ambitions than the love of a pure high minded young woman. John Adams future was safe in the hands of Abigail Smith. As for her, she showed the same grit and spirit amid the noise and trial of that small but vital domestic battle that she did when her heart ached and spirit was tried with the distress of the Revolution and contest of nations. And as peace came to their country, so at last one October day, Parson Smith raised his hands in blessing upon the union of John and Abigail. She put her hand in the hand of her husband, and together they walked that autumn afternoon the few miles that lay between her old home and the new one where began the happy married life of half a century.

All those years were, as John Adams prophesied they would be, trials of their and the nation's "faith, patience and perseverance." Through this farmhouse door, over whose threshold may none irrevent be allowed to pass, Abigail Adams and her boy John Quincy, a lad of seven, went to the hill nearby to watch the smoke of the battle and listen to the roar of cannon until head and heart ached together. Later in this room above, the lonely woman began her nightly vigil, while the "cannon continued firing and my heart beat pace with them all night." "The rattling of windows, and the jar of the house and the continued roar of twenty-four pounders" were all agony to the watcher.

The absent husband writes while longing for his wife, his children, his home: "the business before me is arduous. I have the characters and tempers, the principles and views of fifty gentlemen, total strangers, to study, and the trade, policy and whole interest of a dozen provinces to learn. I have multitudes of pamphlets, newspapers and private letters to read." He was torn with anxiety for his little ones and the wife of his heart; "his health was bad and his eyes poor," yet he was buoyed up by the hope of a noble, great future for his country and "a free constitution."

It is of these days the wedding anniversary held Oct. 25th in the old farmhouse will speak most eloquently. But after all it can tell but half the story. The twenty-fifth celebration of this happy marriage was amid far different scenes. Peace had been declared, independence obtained—and at St. James's Court Abigail Adams had taken her place as the wife of our first minister to England. Well might the re-united couple, amid the paraphernalia of glittering royalty, and with honor of place and position pray the prayer of Agur for humility and moderation "Lest we be full and deny Thee." To but few of us are given such variety and vicissitude of life.

BELLS TOLLED

For Two Former City Officials.

One an Ex-Mayor of Quincy.

The Other Had Served in Fire and Police Departments.

There was an almost constant tolling of the bells on the fire alarm circuit Sunday afternoon between 1.45 and 3.15. It was the signal of the laying away of two of the ex-city officials,—ex-Mayor William A. Hodges and ex-Engineer William C. Seelye.

The funeral of William C. Seelye was held at 1.15 from his late residence at 75 Central avenue, Wollaston. The services were largely attended including representatives from the Fire and Police departments, Abraham Lincoln Post, G. A. R., and Rural lodge of Masons.

The services were conducted by Rev. Edward A. Chase of the Wollaston Congregational church. The burial was at Mt. Auburn cemetery, the bearers being Messrs. George F. Pinkham, W. H. Brasee, Henry Barker and Albert G. Olney.

The funeral of ex-Mayor Hodges was held at 2.30 from the First church. The services were simple in the extreme and were conducted by Rev. Ellery C. Butler. They consisted of scripture reading and prayer, after which Miss Florence Emery sang "There is a Beautiful Land on High." The benediction followed after which an opportunity was given to view the remains of him who for many years had taken an active part in shaping the town and city affairs of Quincy.

The body incased in a black covered casket rested in front of the pulpit and was almost hidden beneath a wealth of beautiful flowers, which included standing wreaths, pillows, standing cross and crown, square and compass, and wreaths. These came from the family, Rural lodge of Masons, Boston Commandery of Knight Templar, the Democratic City Committee, and members of the present and past city and town governments.

The ushers at the church were from Boston Commandry Knights Templar. They were Dexter E. Wadsworth, Henry L. Kincaide, Horace E. Spear, William S. Stone and F. P. Rhodes.

The bearers were John Q. A. Field, George H. Field, Joseph H. Vogel, Thomas D. Pierce, Harrison A. Keith and Thomas Curtis.

Among the many present were Ex-Mayors Charles H. Porter, Russell A. Sears, Harrison A. Keith and John O. Hall, ex-City Treasurer, H. W. Gray, Postmaster Charles L. Hammond, ex-City Treasurer James F. Burke, City Solicitor Paul R. Blackmur, ex-City Solicitor W. G. A. Pattee, Principal Assessor James Thompson, Assessor Charles H. Johnson, ex-City Treasurer Clarence Burgin, Chief Engineer Peter J. Williams, Chief of Police Joseph W. Hayden, ex-Councilmen Jonas Shackley, William T. Shea, James H. Elcock, William F. Powers, ex-Chief Engineer Walter H. Ripley, Capt. Charles N. Hunt, Timothy J. Carey chairman of the Democratic City Committee, Dr. Henry C. Hallowell and Fred H. Smith of the School Committee. ex-Senator Eugene H. Sprague, ex-Commissioner of Public Works, John T. Cavanagh, Medical Examiner Dr. F. E. Jones, ex-Engineers Benjamin King, Eugene W. O'Connor of the United States Custom House, ex-Selectmen John Q. A. Field and George H. Field. Joseph H. Vogel for many years Chairman of the Public Burial Places department. Thomas D. Pierce who represented the bakery business and Thomas Curtis.

The burial was at Mt. Wollaston Cemetery.

TODAY'S COURT.

Lewis A. Crossett was arraigned for speeding an automobile at Milton. Case placed on file in payment of costs $1.55.

William Almy was fined $5 and Jacob Sampson $10 for speeding automobiles at Milton.

Frank H. Fitzgerald, Michael Mulkerin were fined $3 each, and Edward Sullivan $15, for drunkenness at Quincy.

George O'Connor was fined $3 and Fred J. McAvoy, Joseph O. Gillardet and David Bressnahan $15 each, for drunkenness at Weymouth.

The continued case of Joseph Shaw, for violation of the liquor law at Quincy, was heard, He was found guilty and fined $50.

FRASER WON CUP.

Voted the Most Popular Yachtsman in City of Quincy.

The third and last evening of the Wollaston Yacht Club fair proved to be the largest gathering of the three evenings. The entire club rooms up and down were crowded to their utmost capacity and even standing room was at a premium. About 9 o'clock the articles that were up on chances commenced to be drawn and everyone was interested to see who were the winners.

The contest for the silver loving cup that was open to members of all yacht clubs for the most popular member was open until 11 P. M. The contestants were: Dr. Merrill, Robert Fraser, Ernest Hendrie, A. C. Robbins. Mr. Fraser was awarded the cup as he received the largest number of votes.

Toward the last of the evening the few things left on the tables not sold were auctioned off to the highest bidder, many things going at a sacrifice. The fair proved to be the most successful that the club has run for years and a good sum will be realized when all returns are made.

Billings Family.

The Billings Family Association, which held its first gathering in Quincy twenty years ago, held its annual reunion on Saturday at the Westminster, Boston, a large number being in attendance.

Mrs. Lucy Billings Newton of Atlantic, one of the oldest members of the association present, recalled with pride the fact that she was born and brought up in the house that was built by Roger Billings, one of the four brothers who were among the earliest of New England settlers. Roger Billings settled in Quincy in 1635, and he was buried in the old grave-yard opposite the First church.

G. A. Billings was reelected president, and all the old board of officers were also reelected.

He Retracted and Paid.

Herbert Wardwell of Wollaston was in the Hingham court Oct. 28, charged with going in an auto Sunday at the rate of 18 miles an hour. He pleaded not guilty, conducted his own case, and told the court that his machine was not capable of going more than 10 miles an hour. Officer Creban told the court that he timed Mr. Wardwell over the measured course twice and his time was at the rate of 18 and 15 miles an hour. Mr. Wardwell was fined $10. He told the court that he would pay the fine, but the verdict was an unjust one. He was immediately given opportunity to retract what he had said to the court. He did, and paid his fine.

All Saints Day.

Tomorrow is All Saints day, a holy day of obligation in the Catholic churches. Mass will be said at St. John's church at 5, 7 and 9 o'clock. In the evening at 7.30, a solemn high memorial vespers will be celebrated for the dead of the parish. Wednesday morning at 9 a solemn high mass of requiem will be celebrated.

Base Ball Night.

Saturday evening was base ball night at the Merrymount club at Wollaston, and an open house was given to all members. A musical program was the chief feature of the evening together with a collation. Mr. John Kolson, who played many good games this past season, was presented with a purse of $50. He responded in a befitting manner.

Body of Messer Found.

The body of Harry W. Messer, missing since Oct. 10, was found Saturday morning in the water off T wharf, Boston. He was positively identified by papers and a key ring. Since the death of his wife at Norfolk Downs in 1900 he has led a lonely life and had hinted suicide. It was undoubtedly a case of suicide. He was 35 years of age.

☞Miss Ellen E. Thompson will teach the English course and dramatic interpretations through the speaking voice at Miss Spear's this winter. Miss Spear trains the voice for singing and speaking.

GOOD AFTERNOON.

The list of ex-Selectmen of the city is wonderfully small. Although Quincy became a city but sixteen years ago, and previous to that had a board of three each year, only six are living. The list follows with the year when each was first elected, and the number of years he served.

	First Elected.	Years Served.
Charles N. Ditson	1871	1 year
John Q. A. Field	1872	3 years
Charles H. Porter	1879	2 years
George H. Field	1882	5 years
Christopher A. Spear	1882	4 years
Walter H. Ripley	1887	2 years

It is a singular fact that there is not a Democrat in the list. All six are Republicans. Three are from what is now Ward One, two from Ward Three, and one from Ward Four. Mr. Ditson was oldest in service, and Mr. J. Q. A. Field oldest in years. Mr. Porter is the only one who has been Mayor of the city, and Mr. Spear is the only one now in the city government. Mr. G. H. Field has the distinction of serving the most years, and Mr. Ripley is the youngest in age and in service.

Quincy has the same number of ex-Mayors as ex-Selectmen, and will probably have more of the former after Jan. 1.

☞It sounds funuy for Grandpa Davis to lecture the country on extravagance just after he has invested $50,000 in the frivolous pastime of running for the Vice Presidency on the Democratic ticket.—Akron Journal

☞If the ministers could confine all the flirting to the church it would be a good thing for the young people who attend. It is better practiced there, and with less danger than anywhere else.—Beverly Times.

☞Another man with a universal language has appeared. What's the use of trying to invent something? If the rest of the world will learn English the trick will be done.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

☞In Oregon an unhappy woman is asking for a divorce because her husband has been under the influence of liquor for twenty-five years. She seems to have grown tired waiting for a dry spell.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

☞A decided coolness toward President Roosevelt in the Washington departments is reported because the administration has insisted that the employes shall work till half past four in the afternoon, according to law. A correspondent says that the order was most impolitic, as the people of the country care nothing about the matter. It was right, and honest, and just, however; and any reasonable man will think no worse of the president on its account.—New Bedford Standard.

President Sends Call to Powers to Confer on War Rules

THE RIGHTS OF NEUTRALS

Acts of Omission or Commission May Have Tangible Influence on War Actually In Progress--Danger From Belligerents

Washington, Oct. 31.—In a circular note Secretary Hay has carried out the president's instructions relative to proposing a second Hague conference. The note not only contemplates the reassembling of The Hague conference for the consideration of questions specifically mentioned by the original conference as demanding further attention, such as the rights and duties of neutrals, the inviolability of private property in naval warfare and the bombardment of ports by naval force, but goes further by practically endorsing the project of a general system of arbitration treaties and the establishment of an international congress to meet periodically in the interests of peace. The issue of the call while the present war is in progress is justified by the fact that the first Hague conference was called before our treaty of peace with Spain was concluded.

The note, which is addressed to all the governments signatories to the acts of The Hague conference in 1889, says:

"Among the broader general questions affecting the right and justice of the relation of sovereign states, which were relegated to a future conference by The Hague tribunal, were: The rights and duties of neutrals, the inviolability of private property in naval warfare and the bombardment of ports, towns and villages by a naval force. The other matters mentioned in the final act take the form of suggestions for consideration by interested governments.

"The three points mentioned cover a large field. The first, especially touching the rights and duties of neutrals, is of universal importance. Its rightful disposition affects the interests and well-being of all the world.

"The neutral is something more than an onlooker. His acts of omission or commission may have an influence—indirect but tangible—on a war actually in progress, while, on the other hand, he may suffer from the exigencies of the belligerents.

"It is this phase of warfare which deeply concerns the world at large. Efforts have been made, time and again, to formulate rules of action applicable to its more material aspects, as in the declarations of Paris. As recently as the 28th of April of this year, the congress of the United States adopted a resolution reading thus:

" 'Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, that it is the sense of the congress of the United States that it is desirable in the interest of uniformity of action by the maritime states of the world in the time of war that the president endeavor to bring an understanding among the principal maritime powers with a view of incorporation into the permanent law of civilized nations the principle of the exemption of all private property at sea, not contraband of war, from capture or destruction by belligerents.

" 'Approved, April 28, 1904.'

"Other matters closely affecting the rights of neutrals are:

"The distinction to be made between absolute and conditional contraband of war and the inviolability of the official and private correspondence of neutrals.

"As for the duties of neutrals toward the belligerent, the field is scarcely less broad. One aspect deserves mention, from the prominence it has acquired during recent times, namely, the treatment due to refugee belligerent ships in neutral ports.

"It may also be desirable to consider and adopt a procedure by which states non-signatory to the original acts of The Hague conference may become adhering parties."

GETS ONTARIO ROAD

The New Haven's Purchase Will Greatly Benefit New England

Boston, Oct. 31.—As a sequel to the sensational movements in the stock of the Ontario and Western railroad, which for a time puzzled Wall and State streets last week, the New York, New Haven and Hartford road last night announced definitely that it had secured control of the Ontario and Western road.

The first intimation of a deal by which the Ontario and Western was to pass into the control of some other railway system came a week ago today, when the stock of the company began to move in a sensational manner in Wall street, and was purchased in great blocks.

To Boston and New England the deal is one of the most important in New England railroad history, as, for the first time, it gives a great New England carrying corporation access to the coal mines on the one hand and to the Great Lakes on the other and, by virtue of the latter extension, the power of regulating and naming western trunk line rates. It should also add materially to the shipping of grain from this port.

Guatemala on Verge of Revolution

Mazatlan, Mex., Oct. 31.—The news that reaches Mexican west coast ports is that Guatemala is on the verge of another revolution. The cause is an alleged act of war on the part of the republic of Salvador. General Toledo, it is said, is now preparing to invade Guatemala at the head of forces furnished by the Salvadorean republic. Conditions in Guatemala are reported worse than in many years. An American dollar is worth $15 of the currency of the country.

Forty-Nine Men Perished

Trinidad, Col., Oct. 31.—No bodies have been taken from the mine at Tercio, where an explosion entombed 49 miners Friday, according to a statement of the coroner. So great was the explosion that huge boulders block the progress of the rescuers and make blasting necessary. The blasts cause further rock slides. It may be two weeks before the mine can be explored, on account of frequent cave-ins.

Death Followed Long Sleep

Newport News, Va., Oct. 31.—John Gardner was found unconscious on the beach a week ago. He was apparently sleeping soundly. His slumber, which ended in death, was unbroken for 128 hours. A post mortem diagnosis disclosed a clot of blood on the brain, caused by a heavy blow, evidently from a sandbag. The police claim to have information which will lead to the arrest of the murderer.

Russian Vessels Now at Vigo Are to Remain There

INVESTIGATION BEGUN

Commander of British Cruiser Has Conferences With Rojestvensky--Vessels Under Latter's Command Are Being Watched

Vigo, Spain, Oct. 31.—Inquiries here fail to obtain the slightest confirmation of the report published in the United States that Vice Admiral Rojestvensky has requested Emperor Nicholas to relieve him of his command. The Russian consul general here says that he is not aware that there is any question of replacing the admiral and that he does not believe such a proposition has ever been raised.

The admiral was interviewed and said that he could say nothing at present about the North sea inquiry at Vigo. Ten battleships and cruisers, he said, were now at Tangier, and the remainder of his fleet would stay at Vigo until further orders from St. Petersburg. In conclusion, the admiral reasserted the absolute truth of his version of the trawler incident.

It is believed that the international investigation here of the North sea incident has begun. The British cruiser Lancaster, which was here for some time Saturday and departed in the evening after her commander had conferred with Rojestvensky on board the Russian flagship Kniaz Souvaroff, returned Sunday, and there was another conference between the British and Russian naval commanders on board the flagship of the latter. Later in the day Rojestvensky went on board the Lancaster to return the visit of the British commander.

Admiral Rojestvensky is quoted as having told a reporter that his visit to the commander of the Lancaster was merely one of courtesy and not connected with the North sea incident.

The Lancaster sailed last evening for Villa Garcia, where it is supposed the British channel fleet has assembled.

There are five British warships cruising off Vigo, evidently keeping within observation the Russian vessels here.

The Spanish foreign office has given out a statement to the effect that Russia has asked Spain's permission for the ships of Rojestvensky's squadron to remain at Vigo until the investigation of the North sea affair shall have been concluded. Spain, according to the official statement, consulted with the representatives of the several powers, who gave their approval. The authorization, however, applies only to Russian vessels now at Vigo.

The British yacht Ventura is in this port, and appears to be watching the movements of the Russian squadron.

The Russian admiral and subordinate officers of the Baltic squadron receive ovations whenever they come ashore.

British Warships on the Alert

London, Oct. 31.—The feverish activity in naval preparations which characterized last week has abated, but naval reports show that British war vessels are so disposed as to keep a sharp watch on all movements along the proposed route of the Russian Baltic squadron. The Russians' own inquiry into the Dogger Bank affair has opened at Vigo. The British inquiry will open at Hull forthwith. The inquest will be resumed at Hull on Nov. 2.

Places Guilt on Trawlers

Paris, Oct. 31.—The Petit Journal's Lorient (France) correspondent says: "The captain of a Danish schooner, which has arrived here from the North sea, declares that when he was forced to put in at an English port, owing to stress of weather, he saw steam trawlers taking Japanese and explosives aboard, openly."

The Port Arthur Seige

Chefoo, Oct. 31.—In the third general attack on Port Arthur, according to unimpeachable authority, Japanese shells set fire to the only smokeless powder magazine there. Portions of the town caught fire, the conflagration continuing the whole day. The Japanese captured the Russian trenches on the slope of Riplung mountain, also a fortified position protecting the fortress. The Japanese consider the progress of the siege to be highly satisfactory.

Destroyers Eastward Bound

Gibraltar, Oct. 31.—Four Russian torpedo boat destroyers passed through the straits, eastward bound, yesterday, shadowed by a British torpedo boat. The British mobilization maneuvers at Gibraltar were brougut to a close yesterday. This is regarded as indicating that no apprehension is entertained of further complications with Russia.

BOTH DIED INSTANTLY

Wife Murder and Suicide on Road In a Lowell Suburb

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 31.—Henry E. Eaton of this city shot and instantly killed his wife late yesterday afternoon and then turned the revolver on himself and sent another bullet into his own head and expired at once. The shooting took place in the neighboring town of North Chelmsford, where the two met by accident, the couple not having been living together for the past two weeks.

The meeting took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William McClure. Mrs. McClure is a sister of Eaton. The couple ate dinner with the McClures and about 4:30 o'clock they left the house and passed out of the gate to the road, where they stopped and engaged in an earnest conversation. Suddenly Eaton drew a revolver and fired a 38-calibre bullet into his wife's head. She at once fell and, turning the revolver on himself, he sent another bullet crashing through his own brain. The revolver when picked up had three empty chambers and it is uncertain whether he fired a third shot or not, but if so, the bullet went wild.

Eaton was about 35 years old, while his wife was 10 years his junior. The bodies were later brought to this city and were taken in charge by a local undertaker.

Pastor's Wife Gets $400,000

Boston, Oct. 31.—Mrs. Mary C. Johnson, wife of Rev. Herbert Johnson, is a beneficiary in the will of her mother, the late Mrs. James B. Crane of Pittsfield, to the amount of $400,000. Mrs. Johnson has always been exceedingly active in all sorts of work connected with her husband's church—the Warren Avenue Baptist. For the purpose of tiding his church over financial difficulties, Rev. Mr. Johnson donated his salary of $3500 yearly to the church treasury. Rumor says that the addition to Mrs. Johnson's fortune will largely be used to perfect plans long cherished by her—plans that have to do with the future of the Warren avenue church.

Policeman Was Close at Hand

Chelsea, Mass., Oct. 31.—With two cuts five inches long in his throat, Thomas Coleman fell to the sidewalk on Third street shortly before midnight, while his assailants rapidly disappeared around the corner. Patrolman Spinney, who was in the rear of a nearby building, looking up a case, was surprised to see two men vault over a fence within a few feet of him. He grabbed the pair and took them to the station house. They were Alonzo C. Titus and Harry Higgins, negroes, who were identified by Coleman as the men who assaulted him.

Cave-In Suffocated Three Men

Hudson, Mass., Oct. 31.—Three Italian laborers were suffocated beneath 15 feet of earth at a railroad crossing here. Laborers were excavating a trench preliminary to tunnelling under the railroad tracks. Suddenly the walls of earth in one section of the trench caved in and the three men had no chance to escape.

Bean In Ear Killed Him

Still Cup Hunting

London, Oct. 31.—Sir Thomas Lipton, in visiting the United States cruiser Olympia to thank the crew for a loving cup which they presented to him, said he had received many trophies, but among them all this cup would occupy a prominent position; but, he added significantly, there was one spot which he was keeping vacant.

Moors Are Inviting Trouble

Tangier, Oct. 31.—An American, and two German sailors, while boating on the Laraiche river, were fired at. Their fate is unknown. A German was killed at Laraiche. Laraiche, or El Irish, is a seaport town of Morocco, about 25 miles south-southwest of Tangier, and at the mouth of the Laraiche river.

OIL FOR THE BODY

You can't lose an atom without feeling it. The body is like an engine, a watch, a machine; must be kept in good order to run right.

That's the reason Scott's Emulsion is so successful in all wasting diseases. It feeds, nourishes and strengthens when ordinary food won't.

Doctors say Scott's Emulsion is the best nourishment for those who are not as well as they should be.

We use the whole oil in Scott's Emulsion because the great reputation of cod liver oil as a food and medicine was made by using it in this way. Substitutes in the shape of wines, cordials, extracts, etc., should be carefully avoided.

FRIENDLY TO BOTH

France Had Much at Stake In the Russo-British Crisis

TRIUMPH FOR DELCASSE

Was Quick to See Impending Rupture and Immediately Conceived and Carried Out Plans For Honorable Solution of the North Sea Incident

St. Petersburg, Oct. 31.—The world will doubtless take particular satisfaction in according Emperor Nicholas, to whose initiative The Hague convention owed its existence, the honor and credit of having proposed an honorable solution of the North sea incident, which might have plunged Russia and Great Britain into war, by an appeal to its rules. Nevertheless, it is learned on very high authority that this diplomatic triumph belongs to M. Delcasse, the French foreign minister.

When the Yellow Book of France and the Blue Book of Great Britain, covering this incident, are issued, some very interesting diplomatic history will be disclosed. The great gravity of the situation, especially in Great Britain, where the inflamed state of public opinion might at any moment have driven the government to extreme measures, and the danger involved in delay, were keenly appreciated in the French capital.

France's stake is almost equal to that of the parties directly in interest, and the very peace of the republic was involved, as a rupture between Great Britain and Russia eventuating in war by putting Great Britain and Japan in the position of making common cause against Russia would inevitably result in an appeal to France to fulfill her obligations under the dual alliance.

M. Delcasse, therefore, at the very outset went earnestly to work, as a friend of both countries, to find an equitable basis of adjustment. The opportunity came when Admiral Rojestvensky's report raised a direct issue of fact. M. Delcasse at once suggested an inquiry to establish the facts through an international commission under The Hague convention, offering the suggestion simultaneously to both governments. The idea found instant favor both here and in London, and Thursday night the Russian and British propositions, identical in effect, actually crossed each other on the way to the respective capitals.

There was, however, this difference between them: Lord Lansdowne's instructions to Ambassador Hardinge authorized him to submit the proposition on behalf of the British government, whereas Count Lamsdorff's instructions were tentative and rather in the nature of a feeler, as Count Lamsdorff, although he knew the czar was favorable to the plan, had not yet secured his absolute consent, and he arranged to submit the matter finally on Friday afternoon.

In the meantime, on Friday morning, the British proposition duly reached the Russian foreign minister at Tsarskoe Selo and Friday afternoon the czar gave his approval. Tentative instructions had been cabled to Ambassador Benkendorff at London the previous night, and, without waiting to return to St. Petersburg, Count Lamsdorff cabled Ambassador Benkendorff specific authorization in the name of the czar.

The British proposition, presented earlier in the day, remained unanswered. Exactly what transpired in London when Benkendorff presented the Russian proposition in the name of the czar is not known, except that Lansdowne did not insist upon the question of precedence, appreciating, doubtless, that Russia, being, figuratively, the offending party, had the better right to offer to submit the determination of the facts to an imperial tribunal. The czar's proposition, settling the matter in principle, was therefore accepted, and the same evening Benkendorff telegraphed Foreign Minister Lamsdorff as follows:

"In a desire to bring everything that occurred in the North sea into the clearest light possible, our monarch considers it beneficial to submit the affair to an international commission of inquiry on the basis of The Hague convention for thorough investigation. Your excellency is directed by imperial command to propose this means of settlement of the question to the British government."

To this Benkendorff replied on Oct. 28:

"I have communicated your excellency's telegram to Lord Lansdowne. The British government accepts the proposal to submit the North sea incident, in all its extent, to examination by an international commission as provided for by The Hague convention."

NEWSPAPER CLAIMS

Figures Put Forth In Relation to the Coming Election

New York, Oct. 31.—The election of President Roosevelt is confidently claimed by his supporters, while Parker's supporters maintain the result is much in doubt with the chances in favor of their candidate.

The Herald concedes Roosevelt's election and at the same time predicts Herrick, the Democratic candidate for governor, will be elected by a large majority as a protest to Odell.

The World gives Roosevelt 201 votes, Parker 159 and 116 in doubt.

The Tribune claims 314 electoral votes for Roosevelt, Parker 151, and 11 votes in doubt.

The Sun claims Roosevelt as sure of New York, with Herrick for governor.

The Brooklyn Eagle predicts Parker's majority in Greater New York at 182,000 and Judge Herrick's as 180,000.

Another estimate given out is that Parker is sure to receive 259 votes, Roosevelt 217, and in explanation of that claim it is said these figures are encouraging for two reasons:

First, because states like Wisconsin, Illinois, Idaho and Washington are conceded to the Republicans, and the states of Maryland, Montana, Nevada and Colorado are yielded to the Democrats under the Republican estimates.

The 259 electoral votes claimed are secured by the capture of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana, West Virginia, all of the solid south, including Maryland and Delaware, and the mountain states of Nevada, Montana and Colorado.

Labor Men to Question Governor

Boston, Oct. 31.—The state branch, A. F. of L., yesterday appointed Vice President Winslow and Secretary Driscoll to call upon Governor Bates to ask him personally why he denied, in his speech at the Republican Editorial association banquet, the truth of the statement of the executive committee of the state branch, A. F. of L., that children under the legal age for employment work in the Lowell mills and that actual photographs illustrating the fact were taken.

Debs a Drawing Card

Boston, Oct. 31.—Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist candidate for president, addressed a crowded mass meeting at Faneuil hall yesterday. So great was the throng seeking admission to the hall that several thousand were unable to get near the doors, and an overflow meeting was held in the open air. Mr. Debs addressed both meetings. He left the city last evening for Fall River, in which city he spoke at a mass meeting last night.

Sure Roosevelt Will Win

Washington, Oct. 31.—Elihu Root spent last evening with President Roosevelt at the White House, talking over the political situation. Mr. Root told the president that, in his judgment, there was no doubt of his election; that New York state would give him a plurality approximating 60,000 votes. A very material reduction in the president's estimated plurality, Root said, might endanger the state ticket.

Collected Campaign Funds

Washington, Oct. 31.—President Roosevelt has directed the removal from office of Jacob W. Bunn, finance clerk of the Philadelphia postoffice, for pernicious activity in collecting campaign funds from employes of that office. The charges against Bunn have been under investigation by the civil service commission.

Alleged Kidnapper of Boys

New York, Oct. 31.—Alleging that an Italian, Vincento Stioffi, had kidnapped two boys and taken them to Dover, N. H., where he had sold them to a padrone, the father of one of the boys and the mother of the other caused Stioffi's arrest here. The police say Stioffi admitted to them that the boys went south with him, but insisted that they went willingly and were not kidnapped. The police have ascertained that five other Italian boys, aged from 14 to 16 years, are missing from here.

Roasted Alive In Coke Oven

Masontown, Pa., Oct. 31.—Steve Borok, employed at the Bessemer coke plant, reported that he saw three men scuffling on top of an oven and a moment later saw two of the men jump to the ground and disappear in the darkness. Just then flames issued from the oven as though fuel had been tossed into it. Coroner Hagen ordered the oven drawn, when blackened bones and teeth were found. The murdered man and his assailants are unknown.

The opening exercises were by the president, Miss Emma Savil, followed by prayer by Rev. E. N. Hardy, who also extended a welcome. There were reports from the different circles. Mrs. Henry Tirrell contributed two pleasing solos accompanied by Mrs. Hunt.

Mrs. Helen M. Dean, clerk of the King's Daughters and Sons Home at Pondville, spoke at length of the Home and the successful work being done.

During the year ending Oct. 1, the treasurer of the Pond Home, Mrs. Albert A. Brackett of East Milton, received $2,169.22 and paid out $1,873.48. HOXIE WINS.

Several Trophies at Adams Academy Sports.

Several Very Interesting Events.

Third Class Win Tug of War Contest.

There was a large attendance this morning at the annual Founder's day games of the Adams Academy Athletic Association. The several events went off with a snap, but not as good time in some of the events was made as last year. In the quarter mile run for the challenge cup Hoxie won in 1 minute, 10 seconds, beating Sullivan's record of last year by 2 1-2 seconds.

In the one mile run for the challenge cup race, Hoxie won again this year, his time being 7 minutes, 53 1-2 seconds This is the third consecutive year that Hoxie has won and he now owns the cup. His time this year was not as good as a year ago, when he ran the course in 6 minutes. His time two years ago was also 6 minutes.

The obstacle race was very interesting, the contestants being obliged to finish with a lighted candle.

In the tug of war the final heat was between the first and third classes. These two teams were well matched as to weight. The first class tipped the scales at 665 and the third class at 671.

After the pull it was given out that the first class had won by two inches. It appeared however that they had changed one of their men. The win was then given to the third class.

Before the games commenced a telegram was received from John O. Hall, Jr., one of the former sub-masters at the Academy, stating that he would give a silk pennant to the one winning the largest number of events.

This pennant was awarded to Hoxie who won four of the events, no other contestant winning more than one.

The events resulted as follows:

70 yards dash, won by Harkins; time, 8 1-2 seconds.

Running broad jump, won by Moran; distance, 16 feet.

220 yards dash, won by Hoxie; time, 29 1-2 seconds.

Football kick, won by Hoxie; distance, 120 feet, 2 inches.

Quarter mile run—challenge cup, won by Hoxie; time, 1 minute, 10 seconds.

Obstacle race,—won by Colman; time, 3 minutes, 20 seconds.

One mile run for challenge cup,—won by Hoxie; time, 7 minutes, 53 1-2 seconds.

Sack race,—won by Picard; time, 26 1-2 seconds.

Three-legged race,—won by Blake and Thomas; time, 11 1-2 seconds.

Relay race for class championship,—won by First class; time, 3 minutes, 15 1-2 seconds.

Bicycle race,—won by R. C. Blake; time, 14 minutes, 53 seconds.

Potato race,—won by Colman; time, 38 seconds.

Basket ball game,—won by Second team; score, 11 to 5. Goals, by Harkins 4, Finn, Gallagher, and Hoxie; goal from foul, Gallagher and Hoxie.

Tug of war for class championship.

Between Third and Fourth classes,—won by Third; distance, 2 feet, 6 inches.

Between First and Second classes,—won by First; distance, 15 feet.

Between First and Third classes,—won by Third; distance, 2 inches.

Call of Young Japan.

"The call of Young Japan" was the subject of the service at Bethany Congregational church Sunday evening under the auspices of the Sunday school in aid of foreign missions. Eleven boys and girls in Japanese costume told of Japan and its people, particularly the life and the treatment of children, which was interspersed with music. Dr. C. T. Sherman spoke of the great missionary work which had been done in Japan, saying there were now 40,000 Christians there and fully 2,000,000 friends of Christianity. He said the Y. M. C. A. was also doing a good work with the Japanese army at the front. A collection was taken for foreign missions.

ALUMNI DINNER.

Autograph Album Presented Dr. Everett--Loving Cup to Mr. Hall.

The annual dinner of the Adams Academy Alumni Association was held Saturday evening in the United States hotel. When the business meeting was called to order by Perry Lawton, the president, there were about 30 present, representing classes from 1879 down to some of the most recent graduated. On motion of Carleton C. Lane the following officers were elected: Dr. Jeffrey R. Brackett, president. Hon. T. M. Osborne, A. R. Wendell, J. O. Hall, Jr., F. H. Curtiss and A. C. Sprague, vice presidents. J. D. Kent, Jr., secretary and treasurer.

The gathering at the banquet tables was one of the jolliest ever assembled at the alumni dinner. From the first toast to Dr. William Everett, down to the last words of the closing speaker there was the strongest evidence of affection for the school and teachers, and the best of fellowship among the boys.

The school's regard for Dr. Everett was shown in the presentation to him of an autograph album containing messages from the graduates, representing every section of the United States. The presentation was made by A. R. Wendell who suggested the gift and who carried out the idea with complete success. Mr. Wendell's words of appreciation of what Dr. Everett has been to the school in the past 26 years found echo in the hearts of all. The doctor was deeply affected.

Similar expressions of regard for John O. Hall, Jr., who has become master of the Millbury High school, was made by the boys who attended the academy during Mr. Hall's connection therewith, from 1892 to 1904. The gift was a silver loving cup inscribed "To John O. Hall, Jr., from the Adams Academy boys, 1892 to 1904." The presentation was made by George B. Gavin, who spoke for all when he said, that if he possessed a wealth of words he would not be able to express the regard of the boys for Mr. Hall.

Mr. Brackett, the new president, spoke in happy vein of his deep interest in the school and Quincy, and promised to do all in his power to make the next reunion, at which he will preside, as successful as the one which had just honored him.

When William T. Campbell was called on for a few words he was greeted with the Adams cheer that could be heard for blocks around. Mr. Campbell was one of the first teachers at the school, remaining there for fifteen years, until he went to the Boston Latin school. He told in an address that was a gem of thought and feeling, his satisfaction to be again with the boys of other days, and brought home to them many illustrations of all that Dr. Everett had done for them.

The memory of "Billy" Tyler and others who have passed on was toasted in silence.

Fred Curtiss, Paul Crocker, Hon. Sumner Allen Chapman and C. T. Crocker added their tributes to Adams Academy standards of honor and duty.

Song and story rounded out the evening, "Auld Lang Syne" being sung just in time to enable those living out of town to catch the last trains.

The guests and alumni present included: Dr. William Everett, William T. Campbell, Dr. Jeffrey R. Brackett, W. W. Bryant, W. S. Pinkham, F. T. Hunt, Paul Hunt, Fred Curtiss, A. B. Emmes, Dr. E. A. Fease, Perry Lawton, A. C. Sprague, C. H. Keith, C. T. Crocker, Jr., Paul Crocker, Dr. C. T. Howard, R. H. Johnson, J. T. Whicher, J. O. Hall, Jr., H. R. Holden, A. R. Wendell, C. C. Lane, S. A. Chapman, W. H. Draper, G. B. Gavin, L. W. Lyons, H. L. Sutermeister, J. Mahon, T. L. Bramhall, J. D. Kent, Jr.

Y. M. C. A. Evening School.

The Y. M. C. A. evening educational classes which open Tuesday night seem to have success assured from the start. A total of 67 different men have applied for the six courses which the committee laid out in the prospectus. Up to date there are 16 applications for monumental drawing, 39 for mechanical drawing, 9 each for English and arithmetic.

The modeling and free-hand classes have 3 and 2 respectively. Unless more men appear who want modeling, this very important branch will be omitted this year. Free-hand will be taught in connection with the monumental class. The classes will be held in the Court Room in the Adams building, the monumental work beginning on Tuesday evening at 7.15, to be taught by Mr. Herbert W. Beattie, and the mechanical drawing on Wednesday evening at 7.30. Mr. W. S. Vial of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company mechanic draughting department will have charge of this class. One or more assistants will be required to handle this class as the method is largely individual instruction. The men will be allowed to advance as rapidly as their ability will allow.

Further announcement will be made regarding the English and arithmetic. There are facilities for more men.

—Ex-Gov. Long will speak at a rally at Randolph an Wednesday evening.

The Heart's Highway

By MARY E. WILKINS

CHAPTER XIX.

WHEN I came to a consciousness of myself again, the first thing of which I laid hold with my mind as a means whereby to pull my recollections back to my former cognizance of matters was a broad shaft of sunlight streaming in through the west window of the prison in Jamestown. And all this sunbeam was horribly barred like the body of a wasp by the iron grating at the window, and had a fierce sting of heat in it, for it was warm, though only May, and I was in a high fever by reason of my wounds.

For some little time I did not think of Mary Cavendish, so hedged about was I as to my freedom of thought and love by my physical ills, for verily after a man has been out of consciousness with a wound it is his body which first struggles back to existence, and his heart and soul have to follow as they may.

So I lay there knowing naught except the weary pain of my wounds, and that sense of stiffness which forbade me to move, and the fretful heat of that fierce west sunbeam and a buzzing swarm of flies, for some little time before the memory of it all came to me.

Then indeed, though with great pain, I raised myself upon my elbow and peered about my cell and called aloud for some one to come, thinking some one must be within hearing, for the sounds of life were all about me—the tramp of horses on the roadside, the even fall of a workman's hammer, the sweet husky carol of a slave's song and the laughter of children at play.

So I shouted and waited, and shouted again, and no one came. There was in my cell not much besides my pallet, except a little stand which looked like one from Drake Hill, and on the stand was a china dish like one which I had often seen at Drake Hill, with some mess therein—what I knew not—and a bottle of wine and some medicine vials and glasses. I was not ironed, and, indeed, there was no need of that, since I could not have moved.

Between the wound in my leg and various sword cuts and a general soreness and stiffness as if I had been tumbled over a precipice, I was well nigh as helpless as a week old babe.

I called again, but no one came, and presently I quit and lay with the burning eye of the sun in my face and that pestilent buzz of flies in my ears, and my weakness and pain so increasing upon my consciousness that I heeded them not so much. I shut my eyes and that torrid sunbeam burned red through my lids, and I wondered if they had found out aught concerning Mary Cavendish, and I wondered not so much what they would do with me, since I was so weak and spent with loss of blood that nothing that had to do with me seemed of much moment.

But as I lay there I presently heard the key turned in the lock, and one Joseph Wedge, the jailer, entered, and I saw the flutter of a woman's draperies behind him, but he shut the door upon her, and then, without my ever knowing how he came there, was the surgeon, Martyn Jennings, and he was over me looking to my wounds and letting a little more blood to decrease my fever, though I had already lost so much, and then, since I was so near swooning, giving me a glass of the Burgundy on the stand. And while that was clouding my brain, since my stomach was fasting and I had lost so much blood, entered that woman whom I had espied, and she was not Mary, but Catherine Cavendish, and there was a gentleman with her who stood aloof, with his back toward me, gazing out of the window, and of that I was glad, since he screened that flaming sunbeam from me, and I concerned myself no more about him.

But at Catherine I gazed and motioned to her to bend over me, and whispered, that the jailer might not hear, what had become of Mary. Then I saw the jailer had gone out, though I had not seen him go, and she, making a sign to me that the gentleman at the window was not to be minded, went on to tell me what I thirsted to know—that she and Mary and Sir Humphrey had escaped that night with ease, and she and Mary had returned to Drake Hill before midnight and had not been molested.

If Mary were suspected she knew not, but Sir Humphrey was then under arrest and was confined on board a ship in the harbor with Major Beverly, and his mother was daily sending billets to him to return home and blaming him, and not his jailers, for his disobedience. She told me, furthermore, that it was Cicely Hyde who had led the militia to our assembly at Laurel Creek that night and was now in a low fever through remorse, and, though she told me not, I afterward knew why that mad maid had done such a thing—'twas because of jealousy of me and Mary Cavendish, and she pulled down more upon her own head thereby than she wot of.

All this Catherine Cavendish told me in a manner which seemed strangely foreign to her, being gentle, and yet not so gentle as subdued, and her fair face was paler than ever, and when I looked at her and said not a word and yet had a question in my eyes which she was at no loss to interpret, tears welled into her own, and she bent lower and whispered, lest even the stranger at the window should hear, that Mary "sent her dear love, but, but"—

"What have they done with her?" I cried. "If they dare"—

"Hush," said Catherine. "Our grandmother hath but locked her in her chamber, since she hath discovered her love for thee and frowns upon it, not since thou art a convict, but since thou hast turned against the king. She says that no granddaughter of hers shall wed a rebel, be he convict or prince. But she is safe, Harry, and there will no harm come to her, and

Catherine visits Harry in prison

indeed I think that if they in authority have heard aught of what she hath done they are minded to keep it quiet, and—and"—

Then, to my exceeding bewilderment, down on her knees beside me went that proud maid and begged my pardon for her scorn of me, saying that she knew me guiltless and knew for what reason I had taken such obloquy upon myself.

Then the gentleman at the window turned when she appealed to him and came near, and I saw who he was—my half brother, John Chelmsford.
